Catherine Naomi married, at Johnson, Vt., Nov. 6, 1854, Charles Crawford Carter, of Marion, Iowa, formerly of Montpelier. Unto them was born, in 1855, a daughter, Cora Blanche. On the 25th of the following December, Mr. Carter died, and in 1857 his widow married Edward LeRoy Samson, of Marion, by whom she has a son, Charles Edward.

While quite a young man, Mr. Briggs was elected to the legislature of the commonwealth, from Adams, Mass., and he served with much ability in that capacity, manifesting talent, political foresight and wisdom that seldom characterizes so young a man.

He lived at Hancock, Mass., in the practice of law several years, acting in the minor offices of postmaster, justice of the peace, &c., and removed to Richmond, Vt., in 1826, where he resided until the autumn of 1841. During this time he acted as merchant and farmer, in addition to a very extensive law practice, and in 1829, 1832, and 1834, was chosen Judge of Probate for the District of Chittenden. In 1841 he received from President Harrison the appointment of Collector of Customs for the District of Vermont, and Burlington being the principal port, he removed his family to that place in October, 1841, and continued to reside there until May, 1845, when he returned to his farm in Richmond. On the death of his wife he remained unmarried until autumn, 1849, when he married a Mrs. Amy Richmond, a widow, of Adams, Mass., whom he had known from his boyhood. By her he had no children, and she survives him. The late Andrew A. Richmond, well known in Massachusetts, was her youngest son.

Digitized by Google

Judge Briggs was remarkable, and noted for his strong sense, his extensive acquaintance with English literature, and extraordinary powers of persuasion as a jury advocate. To his last days this great gift survived with scarcely diminished force, and gave him the well-deserved reputation of being one of the ablest jury lawyers of Vermont. His energy was exhaustless, and his tenacity of purpose such that obstacles seemed rather to stimulate than to discourage him. His familiarity with the Scriptures and the poets—especially Shakspeare—supplied him with apt quotations, which he used freely and with great effect. His sense of honor and of the ludicrous was remarkable, and his merciless ridicule of his opponents often carried court, bar and jury with him in spite of themselves.

He possessed, to an uncommon degree, the faculty to which so much of the success of President Lincoln as a lawyer is attributed—the faculty of condensing an argument in a pithy story, which made the point too plain to be missed by the dullest hearer. And in this he did not fall into that great error of coarseness and vulgarity, as many poor lawyers do, but borrowed his illustrations from refined sources; and whenever a rough subject must be considered, he gave it such a polish that the most delicate ear would delight to hear him.

Although industrious, temperate and able, his want of system in the conduct of his affairs, and his deprecated accommodation in signing with other men, deprived him of the rewards he had so richly earned, and gave rise to controversies which embittered his declining years. But in spite of the industrious efforts of enemies, his genial spirit and earnest friendliness of nature always won for him, wherever he lived, the good will and respect of the best people around him.

In person he was tall and commanding, of noble aspect, and conciliatory manners, and in fluency of utterance had few equals.

He was several times prominently before the public for high political positions; but party exigencies seeming to require the postponement of his claims, he never received the political advancement to which his friends deemed him justly entitled.

He never allied himself to any church organization, but his respect for religion and all sacred things was profound and sincere, and he always attended on its ministrations when he was able. He was never a profane man, but was always pure in morals, and was possessed of a fine poetic temperament that always thrilled with the beautiful, the eloquent, and the sublime. His last days were marked by the meek serenity of a spirit at peace with God and man, and he passed on in the undoubting faith of a happy hereafter. He died at Montpelier, on the 20th of September, 1861, in the 69th year of his age, and is buried beside his first wife at Richmond. Thus lived and died one of the most talented men of Vermont. And I cannot better close than by saying of him, in the language of his beloved Shakspeare:

> "His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'"

MONTPELIER, May 30, 1862.

POETIC EXTRACTS.

FROM CONTRIBUTIONS BY S. H. DAVIS, ESQ.

NO DISCORD.

No discord has the sighing reed,
  None has the running rills,
None is there in the wild bird's song,
  That echoes from the hills.

Feel nature's soft harmonic charms,
  And let them bind thy will,
And soothe the passions of thy heart,
  To peace, and make them still.

JUNE.

June, pure, loveliest June,
And brooks that are dancing the merriest tune
That the warblers e'er sung
Through bright elfin groves in the earliest spring,
You are passing away;
Though you bear on your brow a chaplet of flowers,
That the May Queen, your sister, bountifully showers.

Digitized by Google

On you, sweet, sunny June, to brighten your hours,
You are passing away.

Like bright smiles you did bring,
Like birds that have warbled through all the glad spring,
Like life's journey half took,
Like the murmuring music of the babbling brook,
You are passing away;
Like the flowers, with heaven-fraught incense, our bowers
Have blessed to make glad and brighten our hours;
Like the clouds that o'er bless the earth with their showers,
You are passing away.

ST. GEORGE.

BY HENRY LAWRENCE.

St. George is a small township lying 8 miles S. E. from Burlington, and 28 nearly W. of Montpelier. It was not organized until 1813, and this fact, together with the rather limited size of the town, has led to the very general impression that it was formerly a gore, and not a chartered township; this, however, was not the case. It was chartered August 18, 1763, by Governor Wentworth, of New Hampshire, to Jesse Hallock and 63 others,* and by the terms of the charter was a full-sized township, or 6 miles square; but upon surveying the towns in that part of the country, it was found—owing, perhaps, to a misapprehension at that time of the course of the Winooski river—that the area was not sufficiently large to give to each town the number of acres named in their charters; and, as it turned out, it was the misfortune of the proprietors of St. George to suffer the greater part of the deficiency. The circumstances were as follows:

The towns of Charlotte and Hinesburgh were granted in 1762, and their boundaries marked. The year following the towns of Burlington, Williston, St. George and Shelburne, were granted, and as the Winooski river, by the terms of their charters, was to form the north lines of Burlington and Williston, their boundaries were readily established, beyond dispute. But upon surveying those towns, such was the course of the river, it was found that the S. E. corner of Williston reached quite to the north line of Hinesburgh, thus leaving a triangular piece some 6 or 7 miles broad on the lake, and narrowing to a point at about 10 miles back from the lake, and containing some 1600 acres, which only remained to form the towns of Shelburne and St. George. And as Burlington and Williston had a few days priority in the date of their charters over those of Shelburne and St. George, there was no alternative left to the two latter but to take what remained. St. George, unfortunately having the small end of the wedge, came near being crowded out entirely. As it is, however, it has an area of 2200 acres.

The name of the town is said to have been given in honor of the then reigning king of England. The pious prefix of the name would seem to indicate a high degree of reverence on the part of the proprietors who proposed the name for that august monarch; but had it been a few years later, when the burden of the stamp act and other kindred acts began to weigh heavily upon the colonies, they would, no doubt, have left off the Saint, and perhaps have substituted some other quite as significant title.

When it was finally ascertained to what an extent the town was reduced, by an actual survey, the proprietors—none of whom resided on their grant—determined to make the best of their misfortune; accordingly, they had the town laid out into 30-acre lots, each proprietor having one lot, or 30 acres, instead of 360, as they would have had if it had proved a 6 mile township; but as their charter was for a full-sized town, and the number of grantees 64, it was very easy for any one unacquainted with the facts to compute the number of acres in a "right" to be 360; therefore, their "rights" sold in the market for the same price as those of other towns.

A single instance, as related to me by an intelligent old gentleman, who was himself a witness of the circumstance, will suffice to illustrate the matter. A gentleman

*St. George Grantees.—Jesse Hallock, Samuel Farmer, Christian Farmer, John Farmer, Christian Farmer, Robert Farmer, Peter Farmer, Jeremiah Leming, Thos. Ellison, William Ellison, Simon Ransom, Shem Ransom, Isaac Sears, Jasper Drake, Joseph Sacket, Joseph Sacket Doctor, Francis Sacket, William Butler, John Mann, Thomas Mann, William Mann, Ermes Graham, John Jeffrys, Isaac Underhill, Benj. Underhill, Henry Frankling, Jona. Courtland, Uriah Wolman, Amos Underhill, Richard Willik, Sam'l Willik, Jacob Watson, Benj. Ferris, Daniel Prindle, Joshua Watson, Benj. Leaman, Edmund Leaman, Richard Leaman, Richard Titus, Isaac Mann, Isaac Mann, Jr., Peter Vanderwort, Wm. Hayris, Magnes Gurrat, Robert Ling, John Dervicos Murphy, Edward Ferrol Murphy, Jno. Deveeanose Murphy, Jr., Thomas Wright, Caleb Wright, John Wright, Tim. Whitmore, Benj. Clap, Benj. Clap, Jr., Henry Clap, Daniel Quimby, Jona. Wake, Jona. Quimby, The Hon. John Temple, Esq., Theo. Atkinson, Esq., Wm. Hunk, I. Wentworth, Esq., John Fisher, Esq. [From the papers of Mr. Henry Stevens.—Ed.] from the city of New York purchased some "rights" in St. George, and, with a view of ascertaining the value of the same, came to see his newly acquired estate, and calling at the house of one of the settlers, began to inquire what the quality of the township was, &c., adding that he owned a thousand acres of land in the town. His host replied that some of the land was very good, some not so good, and asked the gentleman how many "rights" he owned, and the names of the proprietors. He replied that he owned three "rights." "Then you own but ninety acres," was the reply. "In those days," adds my informant, "I never heard a man swear so. He cursed the 'Yankees' most furiously, and, without stopping to make any further inquiries about his lands, returned home, probably to find another buyer as easily duped as himself."

Digitized by Google

The settlement of the town commenced in the spring of 1784, by Joshua Isham and wife, from Colchester, Conn. The house in which they first resided in St. George was constructed by Mr. Isham and another man in a single day, and in that humble cot, we are told, Mrs. Isham resided for six months without seeing the face of one of her own sex. It was situated some 70 rods west of the present dwelling of Mr. Silas Isham. Though a house so frail as this must have been, would seem to furnish but a poor protection from the inclemency of the weather, as well as wild beasts and marauding Indians, yet we may not take this as an evidence of shiftlessness on the part of its occupant, for he was a thorough business man, and afterwards accumulated, through his own industry and perseverance, a competence; but it rather illustrates the hardships and self-denials incident to pioneer life, and to which succeeding generations are almost entire strangers. Early in the following year Elnathan Higbee and Zirah Isham, with their families, settled in town. And, not long afterwards, Jehial Isham, Reuben and Nathan Lockwood, John Mobbs, James Sutton, Wheeler Higbee and others joined the settlement. And, by the census of 1791, seven years after the settlement commenced, there were 57 inhabitants, being nearly one-half the present population, which—according to the census of 1850—is 127.

Jehial Isham, one of the early settlers above named, was a man of great activity and physical endurance. He was actively engaged in the war of Independence. Soon after the close of the war, he removed to this town. He became the father of a numerous family of children, most of whom are still living. He died in St. George, at the residence of his son, in 1851, at the advanced age of 90 years.

The first child born in town was Martha Isham, now Martha Bliss, widow of the late Moses Bliss, of Shelburne, and daughter of Joshua Isham. The first male child was Lewis Higbee, both of whom are still living.

The first death is supposed to have been that of Heman Higbee, infant son of Wheeler Higbee, who died Sept. 17, 1791; first adult, Rebecca Gilman, died June 22, 1797.

The first marriage was that of Jacob Hinsdill to Hannah Cook.

The first school-house was built soon after the settlement commenced. It was made of rude logs, with a huge Dutch-back fireplace built of stones, and with greased paper as a substitute for window glass; and, for a time, there were no other text books in school than Dillworth's spelling-book. Amos Callender, of Shelburne, is believed to have taught the first school. There is, at present, but one entire school district in town, although there are two fractions, composed, in part, of territory from neighboring towns.

There has never been any organized church in town, although there was in 1836 a class of Methodists organized, numbering some 10 or 12 members—Sherman Beach, class leader—which continued to meet regularly for about 10 years; but since that time they have had no leader, and their numbers having been somewhat reduced by deaths and other causes, they at present have no existence as a class. There are also several who recently joined by baptism the Baptist church in Hinesburgh, and others who are members of the Congregational church in that town. Preaching is enjoyed a portion of the time.

The town was organized in March, 1813, at a meeting called for the purpose, and presided over by Lemuel Bostwick, Esq., of Hinesburgh. Jared Higbee was first town clerk. Reuben Lockwood, Lewis Higbee and Levi Higbee, first selectmen; and Sherman Beach, first constable.

The surface of the town is uneven; but the soil is generally good, and is composed, for the most part, of gravel and loam, with a margin of clay along the western boundary. It is well adapted to cultivation, although attention is chiefly given to dairying. Perhaps no town in the county, if indeed in the state, can boast a larger number of cows, in proportion to the number of inhabitants, than St. George.

Digitized by Google

There are no streams of consequence in the town, and consequently no mills or mill privileges, but this evil is not without some advantages; for the people are subjected to no expense for bridges, nor loss by inundations.

The taxes are very light, never having raised a town tax—with but two or three exceptions—since it was organized.

LEWIS HIGBEE

was born in St. George in 1788. He was the first representative to the Legislature, and re-elected to that office several times. He was possessed of no more than an ordinary degree of profundity; yet he had an inexhaustible fountain of wit and sarcasm, which made him somewhat conspicuous. Being without the advantages of education, and having no particular taste for refinement, his manners were peculiarly rough and unpolished; nevertheless, he seemed to possess the power of turning his very rudeness to the best account, which many times gave point to his wit and repartee. An anecdote is related of him in connection with the Hon. Henry Clay, which goes to illustrate this characteristic.

Some years ago, while in the zenith of Mr. Clay's popularity, it was announced that he would be in Burlington on a certain day and address the people there. Thousands were assembled on and near the wharf, anxiously awaiting his arrival. Mr. Higbee had secured a commanding position on a high pile of boards, near the carriage which stood awaiting to convey Mr. Clay to the hotel. One of the marshals seeing him there, requested when he heard the sound of the bugle—which was to be the signal of Mr. Clay's arrival—to "Shout hurrah, so that they can hear you to the Empire State, and when we hear you we will join the chorus." At length the boat neared the wharf, and Mr. Clay stepped forward and mounted the carriage, when Mr. Higbee—recognizing him by his tall and manly form—instantly resolved to shake hands with the honored statesman, without waiting for the formality of an introduction. So stretching himself at full length from his precarious footing, to reach the hand of Mr. Clay, lost his balance, and was about plunging headlong, when Mr. Clay, seeing his danger, sprang forward, seized the hand of Mr. Higbee and righted him on his feet; whereupon, quick as thought, without waiting for the sound of the bugle, Higbee cried out, at the top of his sharp tenor voice: "Henry Clay from Kentucky; thrice he saved his country, and once Lewis Higbee—hurrah for Henry Clay!" It is needless to add that the air was rent with the deafening applause of the vast multitude. It is said that Mr. Clay acknowledged the compliment with great glee, and often referred to it whenever he saw a Vermont man afterwards.

REUBEN LOCKWOOD, ESQ.,

was a resident of St. George for nearly 60 years. He was possessed of a well-balanced mind and sound judgment. Being scrupulously honest and exact in all his dealings, he had the undivided confidence of all his neighbors, while his quiet and unobtrusive manners secured the friendship and respect of all who knew him. No man perhaps ever did more for the town or was actuated by a more unselfish motive. The town was prompt in acknowledging his virtues, for they often bestowed upon him all the honorable positions which were within the gift of the town. He represented the town at the age of 28, and was subsequently reëlected 9 times; held the office of lister 25 years, and that of selectman 29 years. Was elected town clerk in 1833, and continued in that office 22 years; and in 1842 received the appointment of postmaster, which he resigned in 1846. He removed from town in 1856, and has since resided in Irasburgh in this state.

The political history of the town is somewhat remarkable for the unanimity of sentiment that has always prevailed. It was organized at the time of that political whirlwind which agitated the country at the period of the last war with Great Britain. And the people fully partook of the spirit of the times. Yet we find that at the first election for governor, held in 1813, Martin Chittenden, the Federal candidate, received the entire vote, save one. But that solitary democratic vote—cast by Sherman Beach, Esq.—continued to be recorded against the otherwise unanimous Federal or Whig vote of the town for several years. And, indeed, the relative vote for state officers has always been nearly the same, until the presidential election of 1856, when Col. Fremont—the Republican candidate, received the entire vote of the town.

Digitized by Google

St. George, Oct., 1865.

BY-GONE YEARS.

An Extract from an unpublished Poem.

BY REV. ELNATHAN E. HIGBEE.*

[I send this as being somewhat appropriate in sentiment to the noble work you have in hand in saving for their children the ennobling memories of our Vermont fathers.—E. E. H.]

The bugle's blast upon the hill,
From peak to peak is echoing still;
And sweeter does the ling'ring strain
Move back from rock to rock again,
And softer does the wavering tone
Through whispering leaves go murmuring on;
Although the hunter 's left the trail,
And hurried far beyond the vale,—
So all things leave some mark behind them,
Enabling memory to find them,
Some parting light, some lingering strain,
To sweetly call them back again.

The past is present in the soul,
While years in quick succession roll,
And eyes, tho' dimmed by age, can trace
Many an old familiar face,
Whose answering smiles will e'en illume
The shadowy portals of the tomb.
The happiest hours of happiest days,
Like sweetest lines of sweetest lays,
Go with us wherese'er we go,
And treasured long the dearer grow.
Age spreads o'er youth more glorious hues
Than sunset o'er the gathering dews;
And brighter do old memories rise
Than rosy morn through dappling skies.

Then strike the harp for by-gone years—
Strike ev'ry string,
And let the spring
Of memory gush with joyful tears.

Call up the old familiar forms
We then did love,
And let them move
The trembling chords which passion warms.

Wake up old tones, amid the strain,
And let them speak
Until they break
The silence of those scenes again.

* A son of Lewis Higbee, a native of St. George, now pastor of a church in the State of New York.—Ed.

SHELBURNE.

BY LYMAN THAYER.

Our ancient records are brief and indefinite, and much of interest, undoubtedly, is beyond the reach of any now living. I have endeavored to embody as many of the local facts and incidents of the town as can be ascertained in the limited and brief records which were made and have been preserved. I copy the original Charter of the town. It is a curious document as to phraseology and conditions, showing the manner, style and literature of 100 years past:

CHARTER OF THE TOWN OF SHELBURNE.

Province of New Hampshire:

George the 3d, by the Grace of God, of Great Brittain France and Ireland, King, Defender of the faith, &c., To all persons to whom these presents shall come,—Greeting:—Know ye, that we of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, for the due encouragement of setling a new plantation within our said province, by and with the advice of our truly and well-beloved Bening Wentworth, Esq., our Governor and commander in chief of our said province of New Hampshire, in New England, and of our council of the said province, have upon the conditions and revelations hereinafter, made, given and granted and by these presents, for us, our heirs, and successors, do give and grant in equal shares, unto our loving subjects, inhabitants of our said province of New Hampshire and our other governments, and to those heirs assigns forever, whose names are entered on this grant, to be divided to and amongst them into seventy equal shares, all that tract and parcel of land, situate, lying and being within our said province of New Hampshire, containing by admeasurement 23,500 acres, which tract is to contain something more than six miles square and no more, out of which an allowance is to be made for highways and unimprovable lands, by rocks, ponds, mountains and rivers, one thousand and forty acres free according to a plan and survey thereof made by our said governor's order and returned into the secretary's office and hereunto annexed, butted and bounded as follows, viz: beginning at a stake and stones, standing on the easterly shore of Lake Champlain, which is the northwesterly corner bounds of Charlotte, a Township lately granted in this province, and from thence running east seven miles, partly by Charlotte aforesaid and partly by Hinesburg to a stake and stones on the northerly side line of Hinesburgh, from thence, turning off and running north six miles to a stake and stones, thence turning off again and running west about six miles to Lake Champlain, then running southerly by the said Lake as that runs, to the northwesterly corner bounds of Charlotte, the bounds begun at, and that the same be and hereby is incorporated into a Township, by the name of Shelburne. And the inhabitants that do and shall hereafter inhabit the said Township, are hereby declared to be enfranchised with and entitled to each and every one of the privileges and immunities that other Towns within our province by law exercises and enjoy, and further that the said Town as soon as there shall be fifty families resident and setled therein, shall have the liberty of holding two fares, one of which shal be held on the——and the other on the——following the said——and that as soon as the said Town shall consist of fifty families, a market may be opened and kept one or more days in each week as may be thought most advantageous to the inhabitants. Also that the first meeting for the choice of Town officers agreeable to the laws of our said province, shal be held on the third tuesday in September next, which said meeting shal be notified by Mr. Jesse Hallock, who is hereby also appointed the moderator of said first meeting, which he is to notify and govern according to laws and customs of our said province, and that the annual meeting forever hereafter for the choice of such officers for the said Town, shall be on the second tuesday of March annually. To have and to hold the said tract of land as above expressed, together with all the privileges and appertinances to them and their representative heirs and assigns forever upon the following conditions, viz: 1st.—That every grantee his heirs or assigns shal plant and cultivate five acres of land within the term of five years, for every fifty acres contained in his or their share or portion of land in said Township, and continue to improve and settle the same, by additional cultivation, on penalty of forfeiture of his grant or share in the said Township, and of its reverting to us our heirs and successors, to be by us or them regranted to such of our subjects as shall effectually settle and cultivate the same. 2d.—That all white and other pine trees within said Township fit for masting our royal Navy be carefully preserved for that use and none to be cut or felled without our special leave for so doing first had and obtained, upon the penalty of the forfeiture of the right of such grantee, his heirs and assigns to us our heirs and successors, as well as being subject to the penalty of any act or acts of parliament, that now are or that may be enacted. 3d.—That before any division of the land be made to and among the grantees, a tract of land, as near the center of said Township as the land will admit of shall be reserved and marked out for Town lots, one of which shall be allotted to each grantee, of the contents of one acre. 4th.—Yielding and paying therefor to us our heirs and successors, for the space of ten years, to be computed from the date hereof, the rent of one ear of Indian corn only, on the 25th day of December annually, if lawfully demanded, the first payment to be made on the 25th day of December 1763. 5th.—Every proprietor, setler or inhabitant, shall yield and pay unto us our heirs and successors yearly and every year, forever, from and after the expiration of ten years from the above said 25th day of December, namely, on the 25th day of December, which will be in the year of our Lord 1773, one shilling proclamation money, for every hundred acres he so owns, settles or possess, and so in proportion for a greater or lesser tract of said land, which money shall be paid by the respective persons above said, their heirs and assigns in our council. Chamber in Portsmouth, or to such officers as shall be appointed to receive the same, and this to be in lieu of all other rents or services whatsoever. In testimony whereof we have caused the seal of our said province, to be hereunto affixed. Witness, Bening Wentworth, Esq., our Governor and commander in chief of our said province, the 18th day of August, in the year of our Lord Christ 1763, and in the third year of our reign. By his excellency's command, with advice of council. B. WENTWORTH.

T. Atkinson, Jun. Sec.

Province New Hampshire, August 18th 1763, recorded according to the original Charter under the province seal,

Per T. Atkinson, Jun. Sec.

[Names of the grantees of Shelburne, Jesse Hallock, and 64 others:]

For his excellency, Bening Wentworth, Esq., a tract to contain five hundred acres as marked B. W. in the plan, which is to be accounted two of the within shares—one whole share for the incorporated society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts —one share for the glebe for the Church of England, as by law established—one share for the first settled Minister of the gospel there—and one share for the benefit of a school in said Town forever.

Province New Hampshire, Aug. 18th, 1763, Recorded accordingto the back of the original Charter of Shelburne, under the Province Seal.

Per T. ATKINSON, Jun. Sec.

Prov. New Hampshire, August 18th, 1763.

The above and within is a true copy of the Charter of Shelburne.

Attest, JOSEPH PEARSONS, Sec.

Shelburne, Dec. 14th, 1809. Received the Charter of Shelburne, and the foregoing is a true copy, Attest, JOSHUA ISHAM, Town Clerk.

The plan referred to in the charter is on the back, and the government right marked B. W. is in the N. W. corner of the plan, which would properly enbrace Potter's Point, and as it is marked in the plan, would cover a portion of Shelburne Bay. But in locating that right it was fixed on the east side of the Bay. Three-fourths of this right was purchased originally by Robert Lyon, father of Jonathan and Chauncy, now residing on this right, and the remainder by Simon and Samuel Blin. This right of 500 acres is bounded on the S. by land now owned by Aaron Rowley, and extends E. as far as lots owned by Simon and Samuel Blin, and all N. to the S. line of Burlington. In the names of the original proprietors there is but the name of one individual that ever became a resident of the town,—John Potter, who settled and commenced improvements on the Point which bears his name. It will be seen by the charter that it covers more territory than was ever held by the proprietors by several thousand acres. The reason for this was the lapping over of the original surveys. Two parties were engaged in surveying the towns on the lake—one party commencing at the S. going N., the other commencing at the N. going S., meeting at Burlington and Shelburne. The party from the N. surveying Burlington, the party from the S. surveying Shelburne, and neither party knowing precisely where the other had fixed their boundaries, they lapped over each other. Burlington being chartered some two months previous to Shelburne consequently held all that was embraced in the charter by priority, and the proprietors of Shelburne could claim only what remained. The charter covers 23,500 acres, but there is but 14,272 embraced in the present limits of the town. The question has often been raised as to the cause of the triangular shape of the town. The history of the surveys of the towns shows that they were not governed by the compass in fixing the boundaries or describing them. Their starting point was some stream, bay, pond, point, mountain or some fixed object. The charter of Charlotte commences at the N. W. corner of Ferrisburg on the lake shore, thence 6 miles N. on a straight line to where it strikes the lake, thence east at right angles with this straight 6 mile line or base line 6 miles, &c. And as the northwest corner of Ferrisburg is at the head of a bay extending into the mainland in an easterly direction, and the northwest corner being on a point extending into the lake in a westerly direction, consequently the west line of Charlotte varies to the west of north, from the S. W. to the N. W. corner. And this being the base line, consequently the N. line of Charlotte fixed at right angles with this would vary to the N. in running E., which explains the cause of the S. line of Shelburne varying as it does from a due E. and W. course. The boundaries set forth in the charter of Burlington commence at the mouth of Winooski River, thence E. up said river in a straight line 10 miles, thence S. at right angles with this straight 10-mile line 6 miles, thence W. on a parallel line with this straight 10-mile line to the lake. The course of the river from the N. E. corner of Burlington to the mouth, being nearly a N. W. course and the south line parallel with the river line, explains the cause of the N. line of Shelburne varying as it does so much from a due E. and W. course, and accounts for the triangular shape of the town. A portion of Potter's Point was embraced in the charter of Burlington, but in 1794 considerable alteration was made by our

Digitized by Google

Legislator in Chittenden County as to town lines. A portion of Burlington was set to Williston, and the whole of Potter's Point was declared to belong to Shelburne. This town was so called in honor of a noted nobleman in the English Parliament, the Earl of Shelburne, who favored the claim of New Hampshire to the territory now embraced in the limits of Vermont, and opposed the pretended claim of New York while under the English Government. In the original surveys the towns were designated by numbers. The number of this town in the original surveys is 80.

There has been various controversies, many disputes, and much litigation in the town in relation to boundaries of lots, which was caused by there having been two different surveys. The first was made in 1775, by Silas Hathaway, under instruction from Ira Allen, who assumed ownership of a large part of the town. This survey was made and the boundaries fixed by chain, with no particular regard to points of compass, measuring so many rods and fixing a corner. In 1798, the town was surveyed by Ebenezer Cobb, under the direction of the selectmen, by order of the town. In this survey the boundaries were fixed by compass, and the consequence was a variation in the two surveys, caused mostly by the variation of the surface of the earth, as by measuring over an elevation with a chain would necessarily make a shorter line than on a level. This has caused much difficulty and perplexity among landholders, and some hold by one survey and some by the other. Reference is often made in the conveyance of real estate to a certain noted line, called the Maybee line. In Cobb's survey this line was made the basis of operation as a starting point. It is an E. and W. line commencing at the lake shore, and is the dividing line between Isaac Smith and Ezra Meech, is Garrid Burritt's S. line, Erwin Rowley's S. line, and the stone wall on the line between land owned by Leander Chauvin and H. S. Morse on the W. of the main road running through to Shelburne Pond, and is the S. line of the lot formerly owned by Bela Chittenden, and now owned and occupied by Timothy Peters. Cobb commenced numbering the lots N. of this line at the lake shore and numbered all on the N. side to the pond first. Lot No. 1 is on the N. of this line at the lake, the lot directly S. of this and S. of this Maybee line is No. 134, all S. of this line being the higher numbers. This line is so called from the fact that a family of that name resided at the time of that survey near the lake and directly on this line. There is no evidence that there ever was a division of the town made by the original proprietors. Some of them sold their claims to others and they made a pitch, as they termed it, where they could. Ira Allen probably purchased some of these rights, came here when it was a wilderness and before others, laid claim to most of the town and made such disposition of the early settlers as suited his purpose, and undoubtedly a large portion of the real estate which has been held under titles from him were invalid. There is no record in the town books of any conveyance from the original proprietors to him, but a large amount from him to others. But reference is made in some of them to the proprietors' records which is not to be found. The titles in early days were very uncertain. A large portion of the real estate was sold in 1809 at vendue in the collection of a land tax and a vendue deed given, and many hold possession under these vendue deeds and the quieting act.

[We don't understand how he could have made valid conveyances in the town to others unless he first had them to convey. Our antiquarian father, the venerable Henry Stevens, we have frequently heard affirm that the fact that in many of the towns so few of the proprietors named in charters appear as settlers, may be better understood when it is known that many of the rights were, at the time of obtaining the charter, held by the Allens and others under fictitious names. That is, when they wished to have a new township chartered they merely obtained a few bona fide proprietors and filled up the required number of grantees with assumed names from some at that time distant point, as Connecticut, New York, Massachusetts, &c.; paid the first grantee dues, and afterward professedly bought up these claims. This may also explain many of the uncouth and unheard of names in some of the charters, and the altogether illegibly written ones in others,—which it is said the true proprietors had much pleasantry in concocting. From Mr. Stevens' papers we give the following letter from

Digitized by Google

Gov. Chittenden, which is favorable testimony in regard to Ira Allen's true interest or claims in Shelburne.—Ed.]

LETTER TO IRA ALLEN.

"Arlington, 10th May, 1784.

SIR:—The bearer, Mr.———,[unintelligible] has been with me to inquire concerning the situation of the land that he has purchased and improved in Shelburne. I am unable to inform him the particular situation it is under at present or even your determinations respecting his claim, however I informed him that there was no chance of his obtaining any part of his purchases, which by his papers appear to be 3,000 acres, unless it was a farm as a settler. And how that may be, is unknown to me. However, as it appears he began actual settlement in his own person on land granted to him for his own service during the last French war in America in the year 1776, and has continued the settlement either by himself or at great expense by others until the opening of the present war, and has actually lost more than $100 in live stock, beside farming tools, &c., to a considerable amount, and as his improvements have been of real service to the first New Hampshire settlers, and as it appears altogether likely to me he was entirely deceived in taking his grants and making his purchases, and as it appears he is willing and very desirous to come and settle there with his sons if he can be encouraged this summer I cannot see but he is entitled to a farm, at least on the principle of settlement as well as other settlers, notwithstanding what his tenant has done. However it may be, you are much more acquainted with the matter than I am. As you are a principal owner in that town, it will be in your power—it may be in your wisdom to do something for him, as it will set an example which may be followed if we desire to maintain that justice we are contending for and keep the peace of government. You have doubtless heard of the unhappy quarrel that has happened on that account, which I have reason to believe through my influence is quieted at present. I hope you will be at home soon so as to help me a little in drawing an act to be published, which I think will have a very salutary effect.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS CHITTENDEN."

In 1787 there had about 30 families settled. March 29th this year, the town was organized. Caleb Smith was the first town clerk. From this period arrivals of others as settlers were numerous. The forests began to disappear; cultivated fields were to be seen in almost every part of the township; highways were laid out and opened; bridges erected across the streams; framed and brick houses began to take the place of log cabins, —rail and log fence that of the brush fence which inclosed the clearings originally. Societies, social and religious, were formed; political feelings were manifested, and civilization was apparent in the habits, manners and customs of the people. Schools were established and well patronized. A house for religious worship was erected, and prosperity generally crowned the labors and efforts of the residents.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settlers were John Potter and Thomas Logan, two Germans who came here in 1768. Potter was one of the original proprietors named as has been said in the original charter. These two Germans located on two different points extending into the lake, which bear their names respectively—Potter's and Logan's Points. They were associated in getting out oak timber and taking it to the Quebec market. In 1775, they took a raft of timber to Quebec, sold it, and on their return the commanding officer at Montreal sent a sergeant and two privates to protect them in passing through the Indian settlements. They came up the river from St Johns in a small boat, encamped for the night on a small point a short distance from the S. line of Canada. A conspiracy was matured by the guard, and two of them engaged to murder the two Germans and secure their money, and the other made a solemn promise, sealed with an oath, never to divulge the secret. The deed was done, and their bodies were buried on a small island near the point. These are known as Bloody Point and Bloody Island, named from this circumstance. This secret disturbed the quiet of him who was sworn not to divulge or make known, and several years after he disclosed the committal of this act. The two were arrested, tried, condemned and exectuted, and the other severely punished by whipping for not disclosing sooner. Whether these two Germans ever had families is past finding out.

There had about 10 families commenced settlements near the lake before the Revolutionary War, and there is no knowledge to be had at the present day as to who they were, or of their return after the close of the war, but these two Germans and Moses Piersons. At the close of the war, several families soon came in and located in the town. In 1783, Moses Piersons returned

Digitized by Google

Wm. Smith, Caleb Smith, Rufus Cole, Thomas Hall, Hubell and Bush associated on Potter's Point, Richard Spears and Gershom Lyon. In 1784 and 1785, Daniel Barber, Daniel Comstock, Aaron Rowley, Capt. Samuel Clark, Benjamin Harrington, Israel Burritt, Joshua Reed, Timothy Hollabird, Sturgess Morehouse, Remington Bitgood, and Jirah Isham located and became residents. In the three following years Dr. Frederick Meack, Phineas Hill, Keeler Trowbridge, Samuel Mills, and probably others came, and soon after Bethuel Chittenden, Benjamin Sutton, Rosel Miner, Nathaniel Gage, Ebenezer Barstow, Robert Lyon, James Hawley, Frederick Saxton, Asahel Nash, Hezekiah Tracy, Asa Lyon, John Tabor, Robert Averill, Joseph Hamilton and several others became residents.

EVIDENCE OF INDIAN SETTLEMENTS.

The territory embraced in the limits of Vermont previous to any settlement by Europeans, was claimed as hunting ground by several powerful tribes of Indians who were hostile to each other, consequently it was often a battle field for these savage tribes. It has often been remarked as singular, that as there had been for centuries large and powerful tribes of Indians located on all sides and not far distant, that no permanent settlement was effected within the limits of Vermont. The Sioux or St. Francis tribe on the north, their principal settlement being at Montreal or Hockhelaga, as it was then called. The Naraganset on the east—principal settlement on the Merrimac River, N. H. The Pequoits on the south, inhabiting the northwest part of Connecticut; and Iroquois or Mohawks as they were commonly called on the southwest—principal settlement at Schenectaday, on the Mohawk River, N. Y. And the territory now Vermont was claimed as hunting ground by each of those tribes. And this was the cause which prevented the aborigines from making our territory to any considerable extent a permanent residence. And still there are indubitable proofs that they have at some former period resided here in considerable numbers, and for many years. There is abundant proof that Grand Isle was occupied by them for many years.

It was evident also that a field on the farm now known as the Grady farm in Shelburne at the mouth of the river, was occupied by the Indians many years as a camp field. A field of about 25 acres, on the east side of the river near the mouth, had been cleared and cultivated for a length of time, as there were no stumps of the original timber. This clearing was in a square form, and a heavy growth of the original timber on all sides, and two large trees of the original growth left standing in the clearing. There were numerous heaps or small piles of stones on this field, which must have been carried there, as there were no stones in the soil, probably for camp fires. This field was evidently abandoned by the savages several years before any settlement was made by the whites, as it was covered with a thick growth of small trees, unlike the surrounding timber, apparently of about 30 years growth. This field was cleared in 1803 by Benjamin Harrington, who then owned the lot. Arrowheads, flints and other articles were to be found on this field in considerable numbers, which was conclusive evidence of its having been occupied by savages for many years. It is highly probable that this field was occupied by a portion of the Canadian Indians for many years; but when discovered by some of those other tribes, were driven away and their settlement broken up. There were several other places near the lake where small parties of the aborigines had evidently camped for a while, previous to settlements by the whites. Grand Isle was occupied by the Sioux or St. Francis Indians many years after the first settlements were made by the whites in Chittenden County. The early settlers on the lake suffered loss and vexation by the pilfering habits of those savages.

INCIDENTS AND EVENTS OF THE WAR.

Several families had settled near the lake previous to the war of the Revolution. Among the number was Moses Pierson, on what has long been known as the Meech farm. In 1776 he had raised a large crop of wheat, and soon after it was harvested—on the approach of the British and Indians up the lake—he, with the other settlers, deeming it unsafe to remain, left this part of the state. In the month of March, following, he returned with his family and a company of armed men, under the command of Capt. Sawyer, as a protecting party, to thresh out the wheat and secure it. Whilst engaged in this work, they were attacked by a large party, apparently of Indians, who, with terrific yells, made a furious attack in the latter part of the night. The house was constructed of large logs laid close together, and but few windows, which protected those inside from the balls of the enemy that only came through the door or windows. A desperate encounter was held for two hours, in the course of which the house was set on fire by the enemy, but extinguished by some of the party inside going out and throwing on water and returning safe; but in a short time it was fired a second time, and all the water in the house had been used in extinguishing the fire that was first kindled. The question was, what shall be done? Fortunately Mrs. Pierson had made a barrel of beer but the day before, which was used in extinguishing the second fire. The undertaking was a hazardous and dangerous one, and a reward was offered by Pierson to the man that would put out the fire. Barnabus Barnum made the attempt, and succeeded in extinguishing the fire by throwing on the beer, but was shot down before reëntering the house. Joshua Woodard was also killed by a ball entering through the door. These two men by chance came to Pierson's the previous day, for the purpose of purchasing wheat, and were under the necessity of remaining through the night, which proved fatal to them. There were others of the party wounded; but they succeeded in repelling and driving off the attacking party, killing and wounding many of them, and taking a number of prisoners. The party in the house saw them after daylight carrying their dead to a crack in the ice, near Logan's Point, and throwing them into the lake, and some were thrown in that showed signs of life, which were probably considered mortally wounded.

Ziba and Uzal, sons of Moses, were young men at this time (the one 17, and the other 15 years of age), were of the party, and were active in this encounter. An infant daughter, who in after years became the wife of Nehemiah Pray, was lying in a bed at the time and fortunately escaped unharmed, although several balls were found, after the action, in the bed on which she lay, and several went through the headboard of the bedstead.

When Capt. Robert White was attending the legislature as representative of this town, from curiosity he was examining Henry Stevens' (long known as the antiquarian) collection of ancient papers and documents, and discovered a paper relating to this identical case. It is an order from the state department, and reads thus:

TO CAPT. EBENEZER ALLEN AND ISAAC CLARK.

Gentlemen.—By express this moment received the account of Capt. Sawyer's late signal victory over the enemy at Shelburne. Therefore, direct you to repair to his relief without loss of time. You are to take post at Fort William on Otter Creek,* for the time being. You will send scouts to protect the inhabitants, or harrass the enemy, as you in your judgment may determine.

All the inhabitants you cannot safely protect, you are to insist to move within your lines (to be by you prescribed) for the time being, within a reasonable time; and all such as move, to come in, if need be, you will assist. And those that refuse such kind invitations, you are to treat as enemies of this and the United States of America.

If possible, you will secure the wheat at Shelburne, and such other effects as shall be in your power. You are not to burn or destroy any buildings or other effects.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient, humble servant.

By order of Council,
THOMAS CHANDLER, Jr.,
Secretary.

Captains ALLEN & CLARK.

Voted in the House of Representatives to be sent."

This paper is not dated, but evidently refers to this identical case.

The party was not molested again, and the wheat was secured. This attacking party was apparently Indians; but it was strongly suspected at the time that many of them were in disguise, and this suspicion was confirmed by a train of circumstances many years after this event. In the course of the last war with England, in 1814, a number of British officers that were captured at Missisco Bay, by Gen. Clark, were brought to Burlington, and by chance were visited by Ziba Piersons; and in conversation with a Lieutenant, one of the captives, revealed his name and place of residence. The Lieutenant repeated: "Piersons—Shelburne—Shelburne and at Piersons' my father fell, he was a Captain in the British service in the time of the Revolutionary war, and was shot down at Shelburne and at Piersons'—his name was Larama." This fully confirmed

* Which was at Vergennes.

Digitized by Google

their former suspicions. His body was probably conveyed back to Canada, as it was known to the Piersons party that some of their dead were carried on hand-sleds, of which they had a number. The party at Piersons' attributed their signal success and preservation from captivity or death to the fact that the attacking party were under the influence of intoxicating liquor, with which they were well supplied. This engagement and defeat of the enemy at this time and place evidently greatly exasperated the English leaders of the army. A large bounty was offered by British authority to the person or party that would capture and deliver to them the body of Moses Piersons, dead or alive, and a party was sent out in April, following, for the express purpose of capturing, if possible, this notorious rebel, as they termed him.*

After the party had secured the wheat, deeming it unsafe to remain in Shelburne, Piersons retired with his family to Orwell. Fodder for cattle became scarce. Ziba and Uzal, with an elderly man, were sent with a lot of cattle to Shoreham, to browse these cattle in the forest. While thus employed, they were surprised by this scouting party from Canada, who were in search for Moses Piersons, or any other noted rebel. Ziba, Uzal, and this elderly man, were taken prisoners and conveyed to Montreal, where they were confined until the next winter.

The prison in which they were confined was situated directly on the river St. Lawrence, and when the ice formed on the river the three found means to escape. The aged man escaped first, and the two young men made their escape through the escapement of the privy, which was directly over the river. The fate of the old man they never learned, they neither saw nor heard more of him. Unfortunately for the young men a light snow fell that night, and they knew full well that they should be pursued, and when they reached the forest, on the opposite side of the river, they crossed and recrossed their track, reversed their shoes on their feet and retraced a portion of the distance they had traveled, secreted themselves in the forest, and soon after daylight a large party was in hot pursuit of them, passed directly by where they were concealed, and obliterated their track with their own, and they were not discovered. They remained in their hiding place the next night, not daring to proceed. The third night they moved cautiously forward and made their way as best they could, traveling for sometime in the night only, and lying concealed in the wilderness through the day. They had no means of subsistence but what chance threw in their way, sometimes procuring milk from the cows they found in some of the French settlements through which they passed. They traveled most of the time in the forest, with no guide and often in the wrong direction, as they learned when the sun revealed itself. When about 25 days from Montreal, and near the north line of New York, they discovered a party of lumbermen who camped in the forest in a log cabin. They concealed themselves near by, until the workmen left in the morning, when they approached the cabin cautiously and ascertained that but an old man was left to take care of the cabin and its contents, and he was fast asleep and, as they judged afterwards, intoxicated. They entered the cabin cautiously, with the understanding that one of them was to watch the old man, and, if need be, to dispatch him at once, to prevent a discovery, and the other to procure provisions for present and future use. They succeeded in getting as much as they could carry, which was a great relief to them in the remainder of their journey. The old man on guard made no move, and they did not harm him. They proceeded on and reached Lake Champlain, crossed the lake to the main land, as they then supposed, not knowing the geographical location of places, but found they were on the Grand Isle, which was then occupied by Indians in considerable numbers, though they did not discover them. They then crossed to the main land in Vermont, and after 40 days spent in cold winter weather, without the benefit of fire, for fear of its being a means of their being discovered and recaptured, they reached Shelburne, and found naught but desolation, no living person there. They found a few peas and some frozen potatoes at their former residence, and cooked and eat them with a relish, and proceed on to Orwell, where their parents then were, and they were received with a joyful welcome, after almost a year's *Additional particulars in regard to the "Shelburne battle" appear in the next paper, furnished by Rev. Mr. Sutton.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

absence—appearing more like walking skeletons than living beings.

After the close of the war, in the spring of 1783, Moses Piersons returned to Shelburne with his family, reoccupied his former residence and resided there until his death, which was July 28, 1805.

EZRA PIERSONS

located on a farm lying on the main road, in the south part of the township; accumulated a good property, held many offices of trust in the town, a thorough business man; died suddenly in a fit of apoplexy, Nov. 1, 1820, aged 60 years.

UZAL PIERSONS

owned and occupied the farm near the lake, now owned and occupied by Ezra Meech, a son of Ezra Meech, Sen. By energy and good fortune he secured a large and valuable estate, what is termed among country farmers wealthy; reared up a large family of children, but was unfortunate towards the close of his business life and lost much of his wealth; came to his death by falling from a wagon, striking upon his head, June 11, 1836, aged 72 years.

WILLIAM SMITH

emigrated to Shelburne, and located on what has ever been known as Smith's Point, in 1783; was familiarly known as Quaker Smith. His family consisted of several sons and daughters, most of them settled in the west part of the town. The old homestead has passed from one to another of his descendants and is now owned and occupied by Isaac Smith, a descendant—one of the third generation.

DANIEL COMSTOCK,

one of the early settlers, located a short distance north of Wm. Smith's, on a point which has ever bore his name. He was a man of unblemished character; held many offices in the gift of the people, being treasurer of the town for many years. He was a Universalist in religious sentiment, a strict moralist, and honest man; died Jan. 11, 1816, aged 74 years.

LEVI COMSTOCK,

son of Daniel, was town clerk for many years, justice of the peace, and held various town offices; was a prominent man in the community; died May 10, 1847, aged 81, universally respected.

ELISHA COMSTOCK,

son of Daniel, owned and occupied this farm, the old homestead, after his father's death, which is now owned by Hezekiah, son of Elisha.

FREDERICK SAXTON

was one of the first settlers in the town of Burlington. Located at the head of Pearl street in 1785, resided there several years. Sold to Col. Pearl, in 1792, and removed to Shelburne, located on a point a short distance north of Comstock's Point, now owned and occupied by Geo. Saxton, a descendant of Frederick; resided on this point till his death in 1796, the manner of which may be learned under head of "drowning," in this paper.

RICHARD SPEARS

removed from Braintree, Mass. Came to Shelburne July 21, 1783, purchased a lot of land the east side of Shelburne Bay, a part of which was in the town of Burlington; erected a log-house directly on the bank, near the water, and but just south of Burlington line, in which he resided till his death. This part of Shelburne was then an unkroken wilderness, no roads opened which were passable, settlements few and far between, no grist-mill or market nearer than Whitehall or St. Johns; for two years was under the necessity of taking his grain in a small boat to one of those places to get it ground; then, for a while, to Willsborough Falls; then to Winooski Falls, for a time before a mill was put in operation at Shelburne Falls. He was the father of 11 children. His children mostly located in the north part of Shelburne and south part of Burlington, and their descendants were quite numerous. He died March 19, 1788, aged 52 years.

ELHANAN W. SPEARS,

a son of Richard, now owns and occupies a portion of the real estate originally purchased by his father. Was two years of age when he came to Shelburne, and has resided on said farm since. Has followed the business of shoemaking, tanning and currying, associated with farming. Has been successful in business; filled many offices of trust in the town, and has retired from business in comfortable circumstances. Has reared a large family of children, most of whom have departed this life. He is still living, 81 years of age.

WILLIAM BLIN

emigrated to this town from Connecticut in early day, with several sons; located on a portion of the Governor's right, a short distance south of Spears'; did not live many years after he came to Shelburne.

SIMON BLIN,

a son of William, owned and occupied a portion of the lot on which his father resided; was a prominent citizen; held several offices —constable, selectman, &c.; kept a public house for many years; raised a large family of children. He died April 5, 1819, aged 53 years.

SAMUEL BLIN,

a son of William, owned and occupied another portion of the farm purchased by his father; was an enterprising and influential citizen in the community, filled various offices in the gift of the people, kept a public house for many years, reared a large family of children. The street on which these two brothers were located has long been known as Blin street, and the neighborhood as the Blin district. He died Nov. 27, 1844, aged 73 years.

BENJAMIN HARRINGTON,

for many years a sea-faring man, emigrated to this place from Connecticut, soon after the Revolutionary war, in company with his father and his brother, Wm. C. Harrington, who was the first lawyer that settled in Burlington. Benjamin and William purchased the lot at the end of Potter's Point, and previously occupied by Hubbell and Bush, and traded for a while in a log building erected by Hubbell and Bush and occupied by them as a store. In 1788 Benjamin purchased a lot at the center of the town, erected a log cabin and removed to that place, it then being an unbroken wilderness, a hemlock swamp, and a frog pond the year round where Simonds store now stands. In 1789 he erected a frame-house a few rods back of where Col. Frederick Fletcher now resides (the cars now passing directly over where this building was erected), cleared up the land, caused a public road to be laid out and opened from Middlebury to Burlington, known as the main road. In 1796, soon after this road was laid out, he erected the large building which has ever been used as a public house, now owned and occupied by Cornelius H. Harrington, a descendant from him. He was one of the most enterprising business men in the community; entered largely into business; added farm to farm, and accumulated wealth. He was the contractor, in 1807, for building the white church edifice, as it is called, and completed it to the satisfaction of the people, with dispatch and credit to himself. Was associated with Jedediah Boynton for several years in mercantile business. Was the father of several sons and daughters; Henry, the youngest, now owns and occupies most of his real estate at the center of the town. But he was arrested in the prime of manhood and in the midst of his business operations by a fatal disease, and closed his earthly labors Jan. 17, 1810, aged 48 years, and was buried the day that has ever been known as the cold Friday.

JOSHUA ISHAM,

one of the early settlers, emigrated from Williamstown, Con.; made a pitch, as he terms it in a memorandum made by him at the time, in St. George, Mar. 17, 1784, where he resided 9 years; purchased the lot east of the Falls in Shelburne, now owned and occupied by John Clark, and removed to that place Feb. 28, 1793; erected the dwelling now occupied by Clark that year; purchased the store at the Falls, long known as the old red store, goods, land and potash owned by Thadeus Tuttle, and removed to that place Jan. 1, 1796; shortly after purchased the grist-mill, saw-mill and all the water privileges formerly erected and owned by Ira Allen; owned and occupied the grist-mill and saw-mill through life; erected the dwelling now owned and occupied by Geo. Bliss, a descendant of his, in 1804; was a thorough business man; traded many years in the old red store; was generally fortunate in business, and the owner of valuable real estate at the time of his death. He was a leading man in his day; held many public offices in the town; was town clerk for many years, and for years a member and principal supporter of the Episcopal church. In this place, at the time he came to St. George, there was no settlement whatever at Shelburne Falls, an unbroken wilderness. He died April 9, 1840, aged 82 years.

JIRAH ISHAM,

a younger brother of Joshua, accompanied him from Williamstown, in 1784, and purchased a lot of land a few years after in the S. E. corner of Shelburne. He was a man of enterprising habits and good moral character; but situated so remote from the business places of Shelburne and so much nearer Hinesburgh village that his business associations were more in Hinesburgh than in Shelburne, and hence he was not so much known in this town as many other business men. His energies and good fortune secured to him a real estate of several hundred acres and other accumulations of wealth. He raised up a large family, many of them now living. He was a man that was fond of hunting and fishing. On the 9th of December, 1837, he took his gun in the afternoon, went into the woods near Shelburne Pond, which was but a short distance from his residence, in search of game; but not returning that night, search was made in the morning for him. His hat and gun were found on the ice that covered the pond, and his lifeless body at the bottom in about 12 feet of water. It was evident that he was attempting to cross a small bay, deeming it safe. The ice gave way under him, and laboring under the infirmities of age, he could not work his way to the shore, which was but a few feet from where he was found. He had broken his gun-lock in his efforts to reach the shore, but probably soon became exhausted, and left his hat and gun as a guide to where his body might be found, and sank to the bottom.

Digitized by Google

[We here omit a complimentary, but brief notice of Rev. Bethuel Chittenden in Mr. Thayer's paper, having had a more complete paper furnished by Rev. Mr. Bailey, as appears further on.—Ed.] a son of Bethuel, a respectable farmer, having a family of four children: whilst engaged in stoning a well for Remington Bitgood, by accident fell into the well and was so badly injured as to cause his death in a short time. He was insensible when taken from the well. This was on the 15th of November, 1816, just one week before Bitgood committed suicide. He was 52 years of age.

LUTHER CHITTENDEN,

ASA R. SLOCUM,

one of the early settlers in the N. E. part of the town, a citizen of enterprise, respectability and wealth, who held many town offices, having a numerous and respectable family: returning from Burlington in the evening of Jan. 3, 1830, called at a near neighbors for some purpose, and, as it appeared, in attempting to reënter his wagon (there being snow on the ground), made a miss-step and probably fell between his spirited horses, as the neighbor observed from the sound of the wagon on the frozen ground indicated that they were soon going at a rapid rate. His foot caught between the whiffletrees and his lifeless and mangled body was found dragging under the wagon when the team reached his place of residence. He was 63 years of age.

NATHANIEL GAGE,

who settled at an early day in the N. E. part of the town, was an enterprising citizen, owned a valuable real estate and other accumulations of wealth. He held various offices in the gift of the people, and was justice of the peace for many years. He was a leading member of the M. E. Church from its earliest history in this town, and often engaged and officiated as preacher, and was regarded as father to the church of that order, and contributed largely to its support. But in a later day he with others dissented from some of the principal tenets and forms of government adhered to by that denomination, who seceded from them and joined themselves to the Reformed or Protestant Methodist church, the government of which was more democratic; and, with a view of establishing this order on a more firm basis, caused a small, neat church edifice to be erected in the N. E. part of the town in 1844, where services have generally been held since. This church edifice is known, and probably ever will be, as the Gage meeting-house—a memorial of his benevolence to the order he was striving to establish, and of his devotion to the cause of the Redeemer. He died November 27, 1854, aged 89 years.

JOSHUA REED,

one of the early settlers, located in early day near the center of the town geographically. He was a man of enterprise and industry, and accumulated a valuable real estate; was a leading citizen for many years, and filled several offices of trust in the town; was a member and deacon of the Congregational church for several years; reared up several children; gave one of his sons (Almon) a liberal education, who emigrated to the state of Pennsylvania and became a noted lawyer, a member of the state legislature several years, and member of Congress from that state several terms. He died April 30, 1843, aged 84 years.

JAMES HAWLEY

emigrated from the town of Arlington to this town in early days, located on a lot near Joshua Reed's, now owned and occupied by Myron Reed, a millwright by profession, was master-builder of the first grist-mill erected at Shelburne Falls by Ira Allen, and superintended its running for a time; a prominent citizen; father of several respectable children, some of them still living.

EBENEZER BARSTOW

was born in Canterbury, Conn., in 1756, was a Sergeant in Col. Canfield's regiment of Connecticut Volunteers in the Revolutionary war, and received a Sergeant's pension from Government. He emigrated to this town soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, settled in the eastern part when it was an unbroken forest; married Esther Owen, who emigrated from Connecticut, and erected a log cabin in the forest a few feet back of the dwelling-house now owned and occupied by Heman Barstow, in which they resided several years. Their energies secured for them the means for a comfortable subsistence. They were blest with 13 healthy children, 11 of them living to mature age. He was a man of unblemished character; never made a public profession of religion, but lived and died a strict moralist; had a fair education for his day, and filled many important offices in town. His 11 children settled so near that he visited them all about one week before his death, and was impressed with the belief, and so expressed it, that it was his last visit. He died of pleurisy and bowel complaint, March 30, 1834, aged 78 years. His wife was a respectable member of the Congregational church for many years, —died in 1824.

HEMAN BARSTOW,

second son of Ebenezer, was born in the log cabin 1790, is in the 73d year of his age (1862), and resides, and ever has, on the old homestead. He was celebrated when a boy for his skill in throwing small stones. Crows, hawks, partridges, pigeons, squirrels, and all kinds of small game, were almost sure to fall, if within gunshot distance and a stone was hurled at them by him; and when about 10 years of age he killed an eagle with a small stone, which measured nearly 8 feet from the extremities of his wings.* He was rather a dull scholar, but of very industrious habits. He has filled many public offices in this his native town, has represented the same in the legislature, and the county in the senate. There is a remarkable case in the history of his family. He has two daughters and a son who are perfectly deaf and have been from childhood, who can read and write as well as most persons, and converse freely with each other and their intimate acquaintances, by the motion of the lips and the organs of speech; they are otherwise endowed with the common faculties of nature; they are all members of the church, and generally attend and can understand preaching. One of the daughters was married, at a suitable age, to a respectable man, and now resides in Michigan. The other daughter and son still live with their father on the old homestead, and constitute his family.

HON. EZRA MEECH

was born in Connecticut, 1773, emigrated with his father and family and located in the town of Hinesburgh, in 1785; was engaged in trapping and gathering furs for several years, catching what he could and purchasing of other hunters, and became engaged in the fur trade to considerable extent; going into Canada and purchasing furs —bringing large packs on foot through the wilderness; was successful in his trade, and in 1795 opened a store and commenced trade at Charlotte Four Corners, so called, still dealing in furs. In 1800, married Mary Mc Neil; continued in trade and accumulated wealth. In 1806, purchased the farm in Shelburne near the lake, formerly owned by Moses Piersons, in the S. W. corner of the town and removed to that place; kept a small store of goods for some years; continued dealing in furs, and engaged in the manufacture of potash, purchasing ashes and salts of the settlers in this and adjoining towns for some years. About the year 1810, commenced lumbering and dealing quite extensively in oak timber principally, taking it to Quebec market. When war was declared in 1812, by the United States Government, against Great Britain, he was at Quebec with timber and could not close his business im-

*Was this eagle story received from tradition, it might be taken as fabulous; but the actor is still living on the same farm, and I have the statement from his own hand and verbal affirmation, and if any doubt the truth of the assertion he will at any time testify to its being a fact, and point them to the very spot where the deed was done.

Digitized by Google

mediately, and so applied to the authorities and obtained a permit to remain for 30 days, and closed his business as best he could in that time and left the province. He then engaged largely in supplying the American army with provisions, such as pork, beef, flour, &c., while the war continued. At the close of the war, reëngaged in the lumber trade and was generally successful in business. He had not the benefit of a liberal education—a man of strong mind, an accurate judgment, and strong intellectual powers—was a self-made man. He filled many offices of trust in the town; represented the same in the legislature, and was county judge for several years. He was also elected a member to Congress in 1819, and served one term, and again in 1825 represented the state honorably. He was the democratic candidate for governor in 1830, 1831 and 1832, but unsuccessful. In 1833 he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and remained a worthy and influential member until his death, and was instrumental in building up and establishing that church in this town on an enduring basis. Fortunate in business, he added farm to farm, and accumulated wealth and fame, and, at the time of his death, was the owner of some 3500 acres of land. His real estate was appraised at $125,000, exclusive of his personal property. He was, perhaps, the largest land holder in the state. He was the father of 10 children; but two have survived him—two sons that now reside a short distance from the old homestead. In 1826, while absent at Washington, his wife died; and subsequently he married Mrs. L. C. Clark, who is still living and holds possession of the old homestead. His estate was divided in accordance to his will. He died Sept. 23, 1856, aged 83 years; and a plain, neat, well-finished, substantial monument, in the central burying ground, marks his resting place.

RUTH THAYER

was a daughter of Roderick Messenger, one of the early settlers of the town of Jericho in this county. He removed from Connecticut to Jericho in 1770, cleared some land and commenced improvements on a farm situated on Winooski river, near the west part of the town. In 1776, when the state was invaded by the British and Indians, he, with all others of the early settlers, left this part of the state. He with his family made their way as best they could to the town of Pawlet, in the south part of the state. Many hardships were experienced, much extreme suffering had to be endured, many difficulties overcome in making their way through the then almost unbroken forest and roads, of which the present generation can have no adequate conception. The then residents of the town of Pawlet were not very numerous, and had but few of the conveniences and necessaries of life, when compared with those of the present day. These accommodations while they remained in Pawlet were very limited, and their wants but poorly supplied. They left Jericho about the first of September, and on the 24th the wife of R. Messenger gave birth to a pair of twins, of which Ruth, who in after years married Eli Thayer, was one. The wife and mother survived but a few days; she died when Ruth was but nine days old, the other twin lived but four days. Ruth was left in care of a sister but 11 years of age, who cared for her as best she could some 9 weeks, when the father bargained with Daniel Barber, then a resident of Sunderland, to take the child, and she was subsequently adopted by him, and was ever after considered as one of his children. At the close of the war in 1784, Barber came to Shelburne with his family, purchased a lot of land, the farm now owned and occupied by Lee Tracy, a descendant of Barber, in the west part of the town, erected a log cabin for the time being and occupied this lot through life. Ruth was then 8 years of age. There were then but eight families resident of the town. These were Moses Piersons, Wm. Smith, Rufus Cole, Caleb Smith, Thomas Hall, Hubbel and Bush associated, Richard Spears and Gershom Lyon. These were all the residents of Shelburne, and not a solitary family resident in the town of Burlington. Ruth the subject of this memoir was employed when quite young in teaching school in the district where she resided, known as the Corner district; was married to Eli Thayer, December, 1795. They owned and occupied a small farm at the head of the bay on the west side of Plot river. She was the mother of ten children: two of them died when quite young, of the scarlet fever or canker rash; eight of them —three sons and five daughters—universally enjoying good health, lived to what is termed middle age. Several of them became heads of families, when one after another became victims to that fatal disease, consumption, which prevails to so alarming an extent in the New England States. She followed seven of her children and her husband to the grave in so many years. She saw all her family but one laid in the tomb, and still lived like some blighted tree in the world's wilderness, sad monument of bereavement. Her life began in sorrow, and she experienced a full share of affliction through its course. She was a person noted as having a remarkable memory—could tell the date of most of the principal events which happened in the town, age and date of birth of most of its natives, and the notable events in the county. Her family connections were noted for their longevity—universally living to a good old age. Death ended her sorrows the 9th of October, 1861, in the 86th year of her age. She closed her earthly existence with a full expectation of entering into that rest which remains for the people of God. She was for many years a member of the Episcopal church.

Digitized by Google

ELI THAYER

was born in Thompson, Conn., 1773. His father died when he was but two years of age. He came to Shelburne in 1788; married Ruth Messenger, December 1795; owned and occupied a small farm at the mouth of the Plot river; was a joiner by profession; held several offices in the town; was constable and collector for the town 22 years; collector of the direct tax in 1815 and 1816, in the counties of Chittenden and Addison. His ancestry and family connections were noted for their tendency to consumption, many of them having large families, and almost universally dying with that disease. Such has been the case for several generations. He died of consumption, October 26th, 1838, aged 65 years.

LYMAN THAYER,

a son of Eli and Ruth, born 1799, married Laura Blin, a daughter of Simon Blin, in 1821, is a native of this town and has always resided here;* has had six children—two sons and four daughters; all have become victims to that prevailing disease, consumption. His brothers and sisters, his father and his ancestry for several generations back, have died of consumption, most of them in middle life. It may reasonably be inferred that he partakes more of his mother's family tendency to longevity than of his father's family tendency to consumption,—he now being the only remaining representative of several numerous Thayer families.

JONATHAN LYON,

with a family of two sons and four daughters, emigrated from Reading, Conn. to this town, in 1788, in company with Dan Fairchild and two sons. Lyon's sons were Robert and William; Fairchild's sons were Jacob, Reuben and Henry. Robert Lyon and his father purchased three-fourths of the Governor's right in this town and settled on that as it was located, and the Fairchilds purchased a portion of Lyon's claim and settled on the same right. They came from Connecticut in the winter season, bringing their effects with an ox team on a sled,—a mode of traveling that would be considered rather slow in these days of steamboat and railroad facilities,—reaching Shelburne in the month of March, some six weeks from the time of starting. Jonathan Lyon died in the spring of 1791. His sons resided on this right for many years, and Jonathan, a son of Robert, is still living, owning and occupying a portion of that right. The Fairchilds all left Shelburne in 1813, emigrating to Ohio.

PHYSICIANS.

Frederick Meack, a noted and successful physician, settled in the east part of this town at an early day; was the only one here for several years. He accumulated a valuable real estate, and raised up a large family of active children. Jacob, his eldest son, was educated at the University at Burlington, has been for many years a noted lawyer in Chittenden County. Frederick, his second son, now owns and occupies the old homestead. The Doctor was a man of impulsive temperament, using strong terms of expression at times, but understood his profession; was an able physician and safe counselor. He died June 30th, 1826, aged 61 years.

In 1810, ISAAC C. ISHAM, a brother of Joshua Isham, came to this place and located near the center, and engaged as a practicing physician. He was a plain, unassuming man, but able in his profession and generally successful, and followed his profession to the close of his life, July 1st, 1829, aged 58 years.

*Till the past Spring, (1866) when he removed to Burlington, where he now resides.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

In 1826, JOEL FAIRCHILD, a young physician, located at the village, and practiced as such for several years. He received a good patronage and was generally successful, but removed to the state of Michigan in 1836;

And ELMER BEECHER took his place and officiated as physician for two years, and then retired.

In 1836, EDWIN H. SPRAGUE, a young physician, commenced in Shelburne village and followed his profession with profit to himself and satisfaction to the people for several years, but became disaffected at length and left for Ohio in 1848.

HENRY H. LANGDON took his place and practiced as physician for about six years and then left, removing to the State of New York.

SAMUEL H. CURRIER purchased the residence of Langdon, and practiced as physician about 3 years and then left town, and is now a surgeon in the army.

JONATHAN TAYLOR, an old experienced physician, removed to Shelburne from Georgia in Franklin County, in 1839, and still resides and practices here.

HUGH TAGGART, a young but successful physician, located in the east part of the town; has practiced for several years and is still practicing with good success, and has the reputation of being an able physician.

Most of the medical practice in this town at the present time is performed by physicians that are residents of Burlington.

CASES OF DROWNING.

April 28th, 1796, Col. Frederick Saxton, Jared Post and two of his sons—all citizens of this town—started in a log canoe to cross Lake Champlain from Saxton's Bay to Willsborough Point directly opposite. When about a mile or so from the Point the wind, which had been increasing from the time they first set out, had become so strong that the canoe filled with water, and the whole party were drowned. Their bodies were never found.

In the spring of 1803, John Patrill, while engaged in catching fish with a seine at the mouth of Beaver or Monroe's brook, in the night time, in attempting to reach the boat, —which had drifted some distance from the shore—on a rudely constructed raft hastily thrown together for that purpose, was precipitated into the water, and being unable to swim, was drowned. He was a resident in the west part of the town.

In February, 1810, Myron Newell, a son of John Newell, of Charlotte, crossed the lake on business at Essex, N. Y. He, with a span of horses and sleigh, started from Essex in the evening, intending to cross over to Charlotte; but probably losing his course steered too far north. He did not return to his family, and search was made for him; but no discovery could be made as to what had become of him, and various suspicions were entertained and expressed as to his fate or cause of absence, until he had been missing some four weeks. There seemed a mystery in the case; and it is said that a young man discovered in a dream where he might be found, and pointed out the spot, which was a short distance from Meech's Point in the lake, and where some part of the sleigh-box that was loose from the sleigh was found in the ice. The horses, sleigh, and the body of Newell were hauled up from the bottom,—he still holding the lines in his hands. He probably lost his course, it being in the night time, and drove into a crack in the ice. He had married the eldest daughter of Joshua Isham some two years previous. His widow married a few years after Argalus Harmon, and by this union became the mother of William Harmon, our present town clerk and treasurer.

In the spring of 1814 Edward Curry, a son of Samuel P. Curry, a small boy some six or seven years of age, in company with several other lads sporting in a leaky boat on the saw-mill pond at Shelburne Falls, the boat filling with water capsized, and they were all in the water and in danger of drowning. A good swimmer being at the saw-mill immediately swam to their relief, and succeeded in saving all but Edward, who was drowned. His body was not found until 24 hours after.

April 28th, 1826, Zalmon Drew, a son of Sturgess Drew one of the early settlers of the town, was engaged on the steamboat Phœnix, the boat coming into Burlington in the night with a raft of timber and wood; while engaged in securing the boat and timber to the wharf, by some unlucky step young Drew fell into the water and was drowned. His body lay in the water some seven weeks before it was recovered.

Digitized by Google

August 18th, 1834, Mary Ann Tracy, wife of Guy Tracy and daughter of Alpheus Fletcher, was drowned in Winooski river. She, in company with her husband, Emma Thayer, a daughter of Eli Thayer, and Reuben Nash, was returning from Colchester Point, to which place they had been for the purpose of gathering whortleberries, and drove their team to the river for the purpose of watering their horses. The two men leaving their seats in the wagon for the purpose of loosening the check reins on the horses, were standing on either side of them. The horses were in the habit of stepping into the water in the lake while in the act of drinking, and stepped forward into the water. It being an abrupt descent from the water's edge downward, they lost their foothold, and the horses, wagon and two women were soon in deep water beyond the reach of those on shore. Tracy, frantic with excitement, made a desperate effort to reach them; not being much of a swimmer and encumbered as he was with boots and coat he plunged into the water, but soon found he could render them no assistance while thus encumbered; he returned to the shore to divest himself of his coat and boots; but when he made the second attempt to save his wife, before he could reach her she had sunk to rise no more. A citizen residing near by came to their assistance soon enough to seize Miss Thayer, when sinking probably for the last time, and brought her to the shore in an insensible state, but by proper appliances she was restored to life. The body of Mrs Tracy remained in the water several hours before it was recovered. She had been married but a short time; was 21 years of age.

Jirah Isham, drowned in Shelburne pond Dec. 9, 1837. (See biographical sketches.)

In the spring of 1812 Kilburn Hill, a son of Phineas Hill who was one of the early settlers in the eastern part of the town, while engaged with others in catching fish in the river below the falls with a scoop net, unexpectedly stepped into a deep hole in the river where the water was beyond his depth, and being no swimmer sank to the bottom; but one of his comrades by diving in brought him to the shore, and by the most strenuous efforts succeeded in restoring him to life. He is still living—an aged man and respectable citizen.

In 1812 Jedediah Burt, a shoemaker by profession, known by the nickname Crapo, who then resided near the mouth of Platt river, accidentally fell into the stream and was drowned to all appearance, but luckily was taken from the water in time, so that by strong and thorough application of proper means he was reanimated. It so happened that whilst the operation of restoring him was going on that a Methodist preacher came that way, and, when he had recovered his consciousness and speech, questioned him as to his thoughts and feelings whilst in the water drowning, and one question put was: "Did you not think when drowning of dying and going into eternity unprepared?" "Yes," said Burt, "I thought some about dying, but a d—— sight more about living." This was an uncivil and ungodly answer truly; but it is a leading principle in man's nature. Mankind almost universally reflect but little about dying, but bestow all their thoughts upon living.

SUICIDES.

David Beard, an individual of some literary attainments—engaged several years in teaching school—noted for his piety and exemplary habits—deacon of the Congregational church several years, lost his wife by death in 1810. He was the father of three sons; the eldest he was endeavoring to educate at Middlebury college. His means were limited; and his embarrassed circumstances, with the loss of his wife and other difficulties, caused a partial derangement of his mind, which resulted in his committing suicide by hanging himself, in the fall of 1813, at the residence of Uzal Piersons.

Remington Bitgood—one of the early settlers in the east part of the town—was the owner of a good farm and accumulated a comfortable estate. He reared up a family of children. He conducted himself strangely for some time—showed symptoms of insanity before the evening of Nov. 9, 1816, when he committed suicide by hanging himself in his cellar kitchen.

Hezekiah Fletcher—a man of singular habits and peculiar notions—living entirely by himself for many years, the derangement and wanderings of his mind led him to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a razor in the spring of 1817. He left one daughter.

EMPLOYMENTS, HABITS, MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

Few of the early settlers enjoyed any other advantages of education than a few months attendance at primary schools as they existed in new England previous to the Revolution. But those advantages had been so well improved, that nearly all of them were able to read and write a legible hand, and had acquired a sufficient knowledge of arithmetic for the transaction of ordinary business. They were in general men of strong and penetrating minds, and clearly perceiving the numerous advantages which education confers, they early directed their attention to the establishment of schools. But for many years there were obstacles in addition to those incident to all new settlements, which prevented much being done for the cause of education. The controversies in which they were involved, and the war of the Revolution, both of which threatened the annihilation of Vermont as an independent state, and the ruin of many of the settlers by robbing them of their farms, employed nearly all their thoughts and all their energies previous to their admission into the Federal Union.

In a new settlement the first business of the husbandman is to cut down the woods, to clear up the lands, to sow them with grain; to erect the necessary buildings and to open the roads, and thus to connect and form a communication between the scattered settlements and make the most of his labor. Amidst the hard living and hard labor that attends the farming in a new settlement, the settler has encouragements. One hundred acres of land in a new town does not generally cost him more than the wages of one or two years. Besides maintaining himself, the profits of his labor will generally enable a young man in that period of time to procure himself such a tract of land. When he comes to apply his labor to his own land, the first crop of wheat will generally pay him for all the expense he has been at in clearing up, sowing and fencing his land, and at the same time increases the value of his land eight or ten times the original cost. In this way the profits attending labor on a new settlement are the greatest that ever can take place in agriculture—the laborer continually receiving double wages. Most of the early settlers were engaged in agriculture, living in log houses. The early settlers were mostly from Connecticut and Massachusetts. As is the case in all new settlements, a natural friendship and good will was manifested. The nearest equality that can take place among men will be found among the inhabitants of a new country—their employments and pursuits being the same, and all depending on their own labor and industry for support. The early settlers were not noted for their piety or religious attainments. Their habits and customs were not of a religious character. They were in the habit of using spirituous liquors rather freely, as was the custom in all other places in those days. They must be had in preference to anything else; were necessary on all occasions and under all circumstances, and were an antidote for all the ills of life and a remedy for every disease. From 1805 to 1815, there was probably more liquor used in Shelburne, and throughout the state, than at any other period of the same number of years before or since. Previous to that time the population was not so great and the facilities for obtaining it were not so good; and from about 1815 there began to be some temperance advocates, and they have been increasing in numbers and influence from that day. In those days there were some 200 distilleries in the state of Vermont. There were 30 of them in the county of Chittenden, and four of them in the town of Shelburne; and they were all in full operation. There were perhaps from 20 to 25 hogsheads of liquor sold annually at the stores in Shelburne. There was one tavern at the village and four others on the road to Burlington, which made five rum-selling and dram-drinking establishments in so many miles. I have known even ministers of the Gospel who made no secret of taking a glass of grog before entering the pulpit to preach, declaring that it assisted them to preach; and many of their hearers carried their flasks of cider brandy in their pockets to church, and they were freely and fearlessly passed around at intermission with the understanding that if it assisted the minister to preach, it also assisted them to hear and understand. There were no temperance organizations previous to 1830. In that year a temperance society was organized. Col. Horace Saxton was appointed president; George Cloyse, vice-president; and Asahel Nash, secretary. A constitution was drawn up and subscribed to by 156 residents of the town, headed by Rev. Louis McDonald, an Episcopal clergyman. This organization for many years was the means of effecting a very desirable change in the morals and habits of the people in the community. This society held their stated meetings for 28 years, but has been suspended by other temperance organizations. There was an organization of the order of Recabites in 1847; and this was resolved into an organization of Sons of Temprance known as the Oaken Bucket Division No. 75 in Shelburne. This order has a convenient hall for their weekly division meetings, which have been and still are regularly attended and now number some 100 members.

Digitized by Google

In reviewing the past, we can but be satisfied that the friends of the temperance cause have not been laboring in vain; great and important changes have been wrought. The morals and customs of society have been greatly improved. Distilleries—once so numerous, manufacturing and dealing out destruction morally and physically—have all been demolished, and the places they occupied have become fruitful fields. Public houses, where once was heard the clamor of the drunkard and the revel of the debauchee, have been converted into quiet farm-houses. Those signs which were so numerous and so conspicuous in all our public thoroughfares—not emblems of peace, but of intemperance and immoralities—have disappeared. Intoxicating liquors, which were once the leading article of trade in all our country stores, are no part of their trade at the present day. In private families they have been entirely banished from their sideboards, and are wholly out of use as a beverage to be presented to friends on social occasions. At public gatherings, where once it was used as freely as water, and drunkenness and brawls and fightings and fatal accidents were among the results, no man now dare offer the maddening poison openly; and consequently general temperance, peace and security are the order of the day. In farming and other laborious employments very little is used at the present day where once it was very common. Let us therefore give no heed to the false outcry that no good has been done, but thank God and take courage. The enactment of the prohibitory law of our state in 1852 was to become a law provided a majority of the people sanctioned that enactment; and the votes of Shelburne were almost unanimous in favor of its becoming a law of the state; only three votes being cast against it, and these were known to have been cast by foreigners. Shelburne was known to be the banner town of the state. For several years there has been no liquor sold in town, having no agent under the law. Thus customs have materially changed and fashions varied.

MARRIAGE.

Justices were almost universally employed to perform the marriage ceremony, and the marriage fee was one dollar; and the officiating magistrate was considered very penurious if he did not make a present of that dollar to the bride; and in many cases an amount of flax was purchased with that dollar and manufactured into linen for family use—hetcheled, carded, spun and in some instances woven with her own hands. Household or domestic labor was not considered derogatory, and a calico dress was a respectable marriage outfit. I recollect in one instance, in performing the marriage ceremony the justice and the father of the bride having a relish for gin and having imbibed freely of that cordial previous to the ceremony, when the happy couple presented themselves ready for the ceremony with their gloves on, the justice required them to remove their gloves, as his custom was to marry skin to skin. Fashions and ceremonies have materially changed. It would not be considered respectable at the present time to have a marriage solemnized by a justice. These rites must be performed by the pastor or some noted clergyman, and $10 dollars is considered a moderate marriage fee. A notable change also has been gradually manifesting itself in regard to families. Most of the early settlers had families numbering from 8 to 15 children, and in some cases even more. John Hadley's family numbered 25 children, Benjamin Sutton's 24, Ebenezer Barstow's 13, and many other families from 10 to 15 children. From 1810 to 1825 the school-houses in every part of the town were filled with scholars, numbering from 50 to 100 in each district. But at the present time in several districts barely a sufficient number for a small class can now be gathered.

Another custom which everything tends to introduce in a new country is early marriage. Trained up to regular industry and economy, the young people grow up to maturity in all the vigor of health, and bloom of natural beauty. The ease with which a family may be maintained, and the wishes of parents to see their children settled in the way of virtue, reputation and felicity strongly invite to an early settlement in life. The practice becomes universal, and it generally takes place as soon as the laws of society suppose the young people of sufficient age and discretion to transact the business of life. Nature leads the way; all the lovely train of virtues, domestic happiness, and the greatest public benefits, and a rapid population are found to be the fruit. No people have so few diseases, multiply so fast, or suffer so little from sickness. Activity and labor do more for them than art and medicine. The disorders which wear away the inhabitants of wealthy cities are almost unknown in the woods; very few die but under the unavoidable decay of nature, and the deaths are to the births in no higher proportion than 1 to 6 or 8.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

About the time of the commencement of the 19th century there first began to be some religious feeling manifested, and some feeble efforts made to institute Christian worship among the people. A Congregational church was organized about this time, comprising but a limited number as members. Occasional meetings were held in private houses and in barns for several years, but no regular services were held until the church edifice known as the White or Union Church was completed, in 1808. This church was erected to be occupied by the different denominations in proportion as each should hold stock in the same. The original arrangement of this church was a lobby, as it now remains, three aisles on the ground floor, two rows of body pews of square form, seats on all sides, and a single tier of like construction around the outside called wall pews, with a wide gallery on the front and two sides above, and a large elevated pulpit in the extreme back end of the building. No arrangements were made for warming the house, not even a chimney or a place for a stove; and the house was occupied and service held for many years without any warming apparatus. The contract for erecting this church, and to furnish the land for the same and a common or green in front, was taken by Benjamin Harrington for the sum of $5000, guaranteed to him by several of the principal men of the town; and when completed the pews on the ground floor were sold to the highest bidder, to raise the funds for the payment of the contract; and each purchaser became a stockholder in the property in proportion to the amount of his purchase, and could assign his interest to any order of Christian worship he chose. Pew No. 1 was bid off by Uzal Piersons at $630, No. 2 by Ziba Piersons at $550; and they ranged down to $20. The whole sum raised from the sale of the pews amounted to nearly $6,000.

After the completion of this church edifice the Congregational church increased largely in membership and popularity, and held service in the house most of the time for the next 10 years. The services of Rev. Dr. Sanders, the first President of the University of Vermont (located at Burlington), were engaged, and he preached several years, most of the time here, and other clergymen of that order at different times. The Methodists held a small interest in the house, as did the Universalists also, and occupied the house occasionally. There was also a limited number of residents in the east part of the town who were Episcopalians, who formed themselves into a society at an early day, under the supervision of Bethuel Chittenden as their pastor, and held service in that part of the town in private residences and school-houses. They held but little stock in the White Church originally. A small society of Methodists formed also at an early day, and held religious meetings occasionally in private houses, in barns and in the forest. It will be seen by the charter a lot was reserved to become the property of the first settled minister. In 1819 a move was made by Dea. Josiah King, being the principal manager in the matter, to settle a minister as pastor on the conditions that he should convey the title of the minister's lot to the Congregational church, and that it should become the property of that church forever wholly. But a short time before the consummation of his plans, some of the principal men of the town were informed of what was intended and was about to be accomplished, and immediately commenced a counteracting move which soon aroused the whole community. Their plan was to settle a minister on the conditions that he should convey the lot to the town for the benefit of all orders of Christians. And the first inquiry was to find a suitable clergyman; no particular preference was felt as to what denomination he belonged. A merchant in the town by the name of Peckham was brother-in-law to Joel Clapp, then residing in the town of Sheldon in Franklin county, who had just completed his studies for the ministry of the Episcopal order and was seeking a place of labor. He was applied to immediately, and an engagement entered into on those conditions. He was settled forthwith, and the lot became the property of the town; is rented and the rent-money divided annually among the several churches in the town, and is denominated minister-money. This event created a general feeling in favor of the Episcopal order. Mr. Clapp proved an exemplary man and a sound preacher, and the Episcopal church soon gained members, popularity and influence.

The Episcopal church was reorganized and took the name of Trinity Church. The Congregational church from that period began to wane, and is almost blotted out. Mr. Clapp occupied the White Church for several years almost wholly; and after he left, the Rev. Lewis McDonald and the Rev. Charles Cleveland of the same order were severally called and officiated as rectors of the church.

About the year 1825 the Methodists began to increase in numbers and influence and to feel the want of a suitable place of worship. As most of the stock of the White Church was owned and controlled by the friends of the Episcopal order, an effort was made to raise the means and erect a Methodist church, which was effected in 1831. A neat and comfortable brick chapel was erected on the south side of the green or common, a few rods from the White Church, at a cost of about $2,000; and has been occupied since by that order, which is far more numerous as to membership at the present time than all others. When the effort was made for the erection of a Methodist church, a counteracting move was made by those in the interest of the Episcopal order to build a parsonage for their minister, and an effort was put forth with the obvious intention of enlisting the mass of the people in favor of that order, and if possible to prevent the erection of the Methodist house, and thus establish the Episcopal church on a more permanent basis; and again an excited feeling was created in the community and a strife as to which party should prevail. The result was both houses were erected at the same time. But the Methodists gained the most favor in the community as a whole, and the Episcopal society began to wane, and there has been no regular service of that order for several years past; only occasional service is held.

About the year 1845, a portion of M. E. ministers seceded from that church and organized a new order known as Wesleyan Methodist. The leading principles of this new order was non-fellowship with slaveholders and also a more democratic form of government; and a church was organized in this town, comprising about 40 members. Rev. Cyrus Prindle, one of the seceding ministers was the officiating clergyman. These were mostly seceding members from the M. E. church. The Episcopalians then occupying and controlling the White Church, the Wesleyans must needs have some suitable place to worship in, and they immediately commenced the erection of a small church edifice between the other two houses of worship, and completed a comfortable house in a short time where service was held, which was well attended for several years. About the year 1840, a small number of the members of the M. E. church in the north-east part of the town seceded and organized a church under the leadership of Nathaniel Gage, long a resident in that part of the town—styling themselves Protestant Methodists. The material difference in the two orders is in the church government—the Protestants adopting a more democratic form in the appointment and location of ministers, preachers and members having a voice in the matter of appointments. They also must needs have a place for worship; and a small, neat brick chapel was erected in 1844, by the friends of that order in the N. E. part of the town, known as the Protestant or Gage meeting-house. And the residents of that part of the town and the S. E. part of Burlington here meet for worship most of the time on Sabbath days since the erection of this house. In 1850 the Episcopalians became so reduced that they suspended service in the White Church, and it was free for any denomination of Christians when not occupied. The Wesleyan church having lost several of their leading members by death and removal, and not well able to sustain regular preaching, a remnant of the Congregational Church united with the Wesleyans, and they occupied the White Church conjointly, employing preachers of each order to occupy the pulpit alternately, preaching to the same congregation; and this was the order for several years. The small Wesleyan house in which that order worshiped for many years, was then converted into a parsonage and has been occupied by the preachers of that order since. The Congregational church has become so reduced by removal and death, that they have not sustained preaching for the past two years; and the Wesleyans and the Protestant Methodists are associated in employing a minister to preach alternately in the white house and the Gage meeting-house. And the Methodist Episcopal church is the only one that sustains constant, regular preaching.

Digitized by Google

ELECTIONS.

Elections have, as a general thing, passed off quietly. From 1810 to 1815 parties were nearly equally divided, known as Federals and democrats; and considerable party feeling existed in those days. The Democrats prevailed for the most part. From the time of the Hartford Convention the Federalists became unpopular and died out here, the Democrats having their own way for many years. But they were superseded by the National Republican party; then the Whig party, and the Republican party, which is now in the ascendency. There has been a small party styling themselves Modern Democrats for several years, but these have always been in the minority. In 1847 Elijah Root was elected to represent the town in the General Assembly by the Whig party. In 1848 the Free Soil party became somewhat popular in this place. The Democrats and Abolitionists uniting as Free Soilers, nominated as their candidate Henry S. Morse, who had for several years been the nominee of the Democratic party, and elected him over Mr. Root the Whig candidate for re-election. A strife for the next year soon commenced, intended at first to be carried on privately, but soon became open and general by both parties, and was carried to extremes. Votes were bought, and men were bribed in every way possible; money was freely and largely offered. The whole country was ransacked for absent voters who had not lost their residence by limitation. Foreigners of all nations and tongues were naturalized by both parties; and many kept under guard as it were for months previous to election day. Individuals hired by one party and their families supported, mysteriously disappeared a short time before election. Laboring men were kept in employ through the season who were unprofitable, in order to secure their votes. In brief, no means were left untried or unused by either party that could secure a vote; and no means however dishonorable were resorted to by one party which the other party was not guilty of. But election day came, and the contest was a scrutinizing one. Legal advisers were employed on either side to attend the examination of voters. Charles Adams by the Whig party, and William Weston by the Free Soil party, and almost every voter had to pass a scrutinizing examination; and it was late in the evening before the examination was closed. When all had voted, the box was taken by the authority to a side apartment away from the multitude that thronged the town room, and none admitted but those qualified by law. Many had come from adjoining towns to learn the result. Both parties had their hopes and fears. The result of the balloting was such that the multitude was kept in anxious suspense for some time—there being 107 for Mr. Morse, 104 for Mr. Root, 2 scattering, and 3 blanks or pieces of newspaper. Some of the Root party contended strongly that these 3 blanks must be counted as scattering votes—which would constitute no choice. Others contended that blanks could not be deemed votes and should not be counted, and that Mr. Morse was elected. A warm debate was held for some time, and at one time a personal encounter was imminent. But the question was finally referred to Mr. Adams, who had retired from the town room. He was sent for; and on entering, the question was put to him: "Do blank votes count?" Not knowing how the case stood, he promptly answered "No;" which decided the case in favor of Mr. Morse, which was heralded to the anxious multitude—kept for a long time in suspense—and caused a shout of triumph from the Free Soil party, and an almost instant disappearance of the Whig party. It is earnestly hoped that another like contest will never occur.

STREAMS.

Plot river is the only stream of any size

Digitized by Google

running through this township. This stream takes its rise in the S. E. part of Hinesburg, and, running through the N. E. corner of Charlotte, and through Shelburne Falls into Shelburne Bay. It is about 15 miles in length, and affords several mill sites. The circumstance which gave name to this river, happened in the fall of 1775. A party of Indians was discovered, probably from Grand Isle, making their way up Shelburne Bay, in their bark canoes. From the head of the Bay, they proceeded about 100 rods up this stream and landed on the west side—and having drawn their canoes on shore, and concealed them among the bushes, proceeded cautiously forward for the purpose of plundering the settlers. Their motions having been watched and the alarm spread among the settlers, they were mustered to the number of ten, and a consultation was held with regard to the course to be pursued. Concluding that the Indians if vigorously attacked, would make a precipitate retreat to these canoes, it was decided that three of their number should proceed to their place of landing and disable their canoes, by cutting slits through the bark in various places, and then conceal themselves near by and await the result—while the other seven should make a furious and tumultuous assault upon the enemy, who had already commenced their work of plunder. The plot succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations. The onset of the seven, favored by the darkness of the night, was made with so much show and spirit, as to lead the Indians to suppose that they were assailed by a force far superior to their own, and that their only chance of escape consisted in a hasty retreat to their canoes. They accordingly betook themselves to flight, and being closely pursued, when they reached their landing place they seized their canoes, hurried them into the stream, and leaped on board with the utmost precipitation. But what was their surprise when they found their canoes were disabled and were all filling with water. In this forlorn condition they were attacked by the three men, who had lain concealed on the bank, and the pursuing party soon coming to their aid the Indians were all shot while struggling to keep themselves afloat, or sunk to rise no more, not an individual being allowed to escape to tell to their kindred their tale of woe. This well contrived and successful stratagem, gave the name to this stream—Plot River. Relics of guns were found in the stream at this place not many years after.

The next stream in size is Cogman's Brook, which rises in Charlotte, runs northwesterly through Shelburne into Plot River some 200 rods from its mouth. This stream took its name from an old hunter of that name who lived in a log cabin on its bank at an early day.

Beaver Brook is a small stream rising in the east part of the town, which running in a northwesterly direction falls into Shelburne Bay on the east side not far from the head. This stream is so called from its having been the resort and abiding place of the beaver. There were beaver dams constructed in several places on this stream. It is known near the outlet as Monroes' Brook, from the fact of the Monroes owning the land at the mouth.

There is also a small brook in the S. W. part of the township, running into Lake Champlain, known as the Maybee Brook,—a family by that name residing directly on the bank of this brook near the lake, in early day.

PONDS.

Shelburne Pond in the N. E. part of the township, covers about 600 acres, is noted for the fine pickerel and bass which are caught by anglers in large numbers, and is the resort of many sportsmen and gentlemen of leisure, both in summer and winter. Its outlet is called Muddy Brook. This stream is the dividing line between Burlington and Williston, and flows into the Winooski river, just above the narrows or high bridge.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The early settlers dwelt in log cabins rudely constructed—used temporary hovels as an apology for barns, with a portion of a hollow log as rack and manger. Their clearings were enclosed with a brush fence—so their highways were laid out with no system, and but poorly worked foot-paths from one clearing to another, indicated by marked trees. They had no grist-mills—no saw-mills—no bridges across the streams—no stores and no blacksmiths for several years. The first settlement commenced at Shelburne Falls, was in 1785 by Ira Allen, then a resident in the town of Colchester at what is known as

Digitized by Google

Winooski village. A rudely constructed log bridge was built across the Plot river—a dam was constructed some 10 rods above the present saw-mill dam—a saw-mill erected on the north side of the stream, and a forge on the south. In 1786 a dam was constructed at the lower end of the falls, and a grist-mill put in operation the next season. Clothing works were erected and put in operation between the grist-mill and saw-mill, in 1789, by David Fish, which was purchased by Samuel Fletcher, in 1805, owned and occupied by him until his death, April 23, 1852, since which time it has remained unoccupied, and in the spring of this year (1862) was swept away by a freshet, as was also the old stone building formerly used as a grist-mill.

The first saw-mill erected in this town, was located directly east of the public house, now kept by C. H. Harrington, the dam extending from the high bank on the west side of the stream, to the bluff rock on the east side, raising the water and covering the interval above nearly to the falls. This was built by Lazel Hatch, in 1784; the bottom being of light soil and the dam but imperfectly constructed, it was soon carried away and the work abandoned.

The first dwelling other than a log house, was the block-house now occupied by Tristam Conner. on Potter's Point, by Hubbell and Bush in 1784. In 1790 a house was erected by Moses Piersons in the S. W. corner. of the town, and is a portion of the dwelling owned and occupied by Ezra Meech. The first framed house erected was by Lazel Hatch east of the village, near the saw-mill erected by him—a small building about 12 by 16 feet, in 1784.

It has been occupied as a dwelling-house—as a store—a slaughter-house—a currying-room—a cooper's shop—a joiner's shop—a barn—a hog house—a lumber room—a hen house, and for almost every conceivable purpose, and in various places. About the year 1855, it became rather the worse for wear, and was taken down by Nelson Newell, 78 years from the time of its erection. The original covering, shingles and all, still remained secured with wrought nails, some of which he has now on hand.

The second framed house was built in 1789 by Benjamin Harrington, a few rods west of the present residence of Col. Frederick Fletcher.

The public house was erected in 1796, and from the commencement of the 19th century framed houses began to multiply in all parts of the town, but it was many years before log cabins wholly disappeared.

Before bridges were erected across the Plot river, the travel mostly passed through the river at the falls, the principal highway leading, in going north, by the present residence of John Clark, to the former residence of Joshua Reed, now occupied by Clayton Reed, a descendant of Joshua; thence north, west of the ledge, continuing east of the main road as it is now traveled, intersecting the present road near where Catlin now lives in Burlington. Citizens in the west part of the town in going east or north, passed around the mouth of the river on the sand bar, most parts of the year, and in going north traveled a rough road near the bank of the bay through to Burlington, near where the cars now pass. The main road was laid out, and a bridge erected north of the village in 1796. A bridge was constructed across near the mouth of the river in 1801, and the highways soon became passable. Settlers multiplied; mechanics of all professions came among them, and general prosperity manifested itself.

The year of 1788 has been remembered throughout the state as one of scarcity and want of the necessaries of life, the previous season being cold and unproductive; 1813 was also a cold unproductive season, causing much want and privation in the community. A fatal epidemic prevailed to an alarming extent in the community in 1813, which caused many deaths in this town, in some instances two and even three funerals in the same day.

Limestone of the first quality, and in great amount, is to be found in Shelburne. Several ledges or marble quarries are to be found which have all the appearance, so declared by those having had experience in other marble quarries, of containing an abundance of marble of the first quality. Several ineffectual attempts have been made to open these ledges, but failed for lack of means. No doubt, however, with enterprise and capital, large profit might be realized, by opening and successfully working these quarries.

POPULATION OF THE TOWN.

In 1791, 389; in 1800, 723; in 1810, 987;

in 1820, 936; in 1830, 1123; in 1840, 1089.

The town was organized in 1787. The first Town Clerk was,—from 1787, Caleb Smith, to 1791; from 1792, Daniel Castle, one year; from 1793, Joshua Isham, to 1812; from 1813, Joshua Morgan, to 1818; from 1819, Levi Comstock, to 1836; from 1837, Elma Beecher, to 1838; from 1839, Lyman Hall, to 1854; from 1855, Wm. Harmon, to 1862.

REPRESENTATIVES.

There is no record of any Freemen's meeting until 1809. Frederick Meack was elected representative of the town in that year and the following; Joshua Isham, 1811, 3 years; Joshua Morgan, 1814, 2 years; Ziba Pierson, 1816, 2 years; Burgess Hall, 1818, 2 years; Levi Comstock, 1820, 3 years; Garrad Burritt, 1823, 2 years; Burgess Hall, 1825, 2 years; Levi Comstock, 1827, 1 year; Hyman Hollabird, 1828, 2 years; Heman Barstow, 1830, 2 years; no choice, 1832; John Tabor, 1833, 2 years; Horace Saxton, 1835, 2 years; Samuel Fletcher, 1837, 2 years; Elhanan W. Spears, 1839, 2 years; Robert White, 1841, 2 years; Ira Andrews, 1843, 2 years; Wm. Harmon, 1845, 2 years; Elijah Root, 1847, 1 year; Henry S. Morse, 1848, 2 years; Elijah Root, 1850, 1 year; Lyman Hall, 1851, 2 years; Geo. Saxton, 1853, 2 years; Pierpoint Smith, 1855, 2 years; Guy Tracy, 1857, 2 years; C. P. Williams, 1859, 2 years; Frederick Fletcher, 1861.

Face of the Township, and Shelburne Battle.

BY REV. GEO. P. SUTTON.

Shelburne, named in honor of the Earl of Shelburne, for beauty of location, fertility of soil, variety and excellence of products, prosperity, high moral character, and intelligence of her citizens, constitutes no unworthy member of the common sisterhood of towns that stretch along the shore line of the Champlain valley, and slope away on either hand from the Green Mountain Ridge, which forms as it were the back bone of the State. Especially in respect to the beauty of location, it is surpassed by few if any of the towns lining the lake. Situated about midway on the line of the shore, a little to the south of the broad lake, the view sweeps away to the west and east, taking in the Adirondac on the one side, and the Green Mountain Range on the other. And in no other place are the highest peaks of either range—their bald summits white with almost perpetual snow—so full in view.

Most of the eastern shore rises perpendicularly above the water, and viewed from the opposite side presents a wall of solid rock, whence at intervals high bluffs, presenting a bold appearance, project into the water.

But for picturesqueness, and quiet rural beauty, the western part presents a scene fit for the eye of the contemplative Wordsworth, or Thompson of the inimitable Seasons.

The land generally level, is however gently rolling, and in the center is a considerable swell, yet so gradual, and almost unnoticeable, especially on the eastern side, as to effectually disclaim the dignity of a high hill, much less of a mountain.

The reëntrant shore of the lake forms two points of land, formerly designated by the names of the two first settlers of the town —Pottier's Point, and Logan's Point.

The former projects into the lake on the S. W. side of Shelburne Bay—an arm of the lake extending about four miles into the township, in a southwesterly direction. The bay is only shut off from the main channel of the lake, by this point, which at its conjunction with the main land is quite wide, but after a short distance is suddenly narrowed, whence it becomes a slender tongue of land of almost uniform width, until it terminates abruptly, and perpendicularly, in a bold promontory several feet high.

Deer were formerly met with, as also the lynx and wild cat—and also beaver dams were very prominent, on the flats about the pond, and near its tributaries.

Timber is principally hard, the soil clay and loam, and in some places an admixture of both clayey and sandy loam.

Of geological characteristics. I might mention the very peculiar character of the limestones in the eastern section, on the farm now owned by Mr. Barber—also on the eastern and western shores of the pond. These rocks have been visited by scientific men, and their strata examined, which they pronounce to be some variety of marble—that on the eastern shore of the pond of a very excellent quality. But whether they are really good marble, or an inferior kind, or only limestone in some other of its varieties—saccharoid limestone perhaps—remains to be proved by further trials.

Digitized by Google

Thompson in his Gazetteer says this river undoubtedly took its name from the point in the west part of Shelburne, called on early French maps, Pointe au Platre, or Plater Point. It was formerly often written La Platte. [We omit here, as Mr. Thayer has given an account of the same.—Ed.]

Now if these two accounts of the origin of the name La Plot, the one by Mr. Thayer, and the one to which Thompson gives credence, and which rests entirely on the authority of etymology, the former has both the evidence of well authenticated tradition and of etymology. Besides, the derivation of the word Laplot, from the two French words La and Platre, is no more evident than its derivation from the French words La, and Complot. Indeed how natural the corruption from Lacomplot to Laplot. Add to this the very respectable testimony furnished by the oldest men, and the fact that it is nowhere denied, or called in question in any of the early records, and the evidence decidedly preponderates to the side of the very interesting tradition, on page 875, and this tradition should be received as the true account of the origin of the name..

Tradition locates an Indian village on the farm now owned by O. Grady, near the mouth of the river, and an Indian burying-ground on the opposite side, at the mouth of Cogman's brook.

Shelburne was then settled so rapidly that in 1791 its population was above that of Burlington. When the Piersons left in 1777 they had harvested a large crop of wheat, and returned during the winter to thresh and secure it. Meanwhile they were menaced by tories and Indians. A Col. Thomas Sawyer of Clarendon, being apprised of it, with Lieut. Barnabas Barnum and Corporal Williams, and 14 soldiers, hastened to the exposed frontier. It was the month of January, and the weather was very cold. They marched through the trackless wilderness about 90 miles, all on foot except Col. Sawyer, who rode a fine stallion.

Once they came very near yielding themselves to fate, but through the energy and art of Col. Sawyer they were animated to surmount the very extremes of cold and hunger until they arrived safely at the house of the Piersons. There they remained strengthening the place some seven or eight weeks, when suddenly the foe who had been lurking about disappeared. Col. Sawyer suspected this to be a stratagem, and learned that one Philo, a tory, who had gone to Canada on skates, had returned with a considerable force, 57 in all. Accordingly all were immediately set at work barricading their house, and when night came on had made all parts secure except one window. The attack was made that night, and through that window two men who had stopped and put up for the night, sharing the homely hospitality of the place, were killed at the first fire of the enemy. Their names were Woodard and Daniels. They were met by an incessant fire from the besieged for three-fourths of an hour through port holes made for that purpose. During that time the Indians twice fired the house; and Col. Sawyer offered his watch as a reward to any one who would extinguish the flames. There was no water in the house; but Mrs. Pierson had been brewing beer that day, and Joseph Williams entered the chamber and, breaking a hole through the roof, extinguished the flames with the contents of the beer barrel, under a deadly fire from the savages without. Col. Sawyer faithfully kept his word and gave Williams his watch. The enemy were finally repulsed and closely pursued, and two prisoners taken; the enemy also lost one officer and one Indian chief, who were found dead in the field, besides several who were thrown through a hole cut in the ice. This battle occurred on the 12th of March, 1778. Of the brave little band who defended the house, Lieut. Barnum, according to Thompson and Downing, was killed, though his name is not mentioned anywhere in connection with the narrative of the battle I have given. Col. Sawyer cut from the nose of the Indian chief who was killed, his jewels, and secured his powder-horn and bullet-pouch, as trophies of his victory. The following lines were composed to celebrate this exploit. Monkton claims the author of this battle song, as also the "hero" slain.

"On the twelfth day of March in the year seventy-eight,
The Britons and Indians invaded our State;
'Twas in Shelburne brave Sawyer these wretches did meet,
And fully determined not to retreat.

The first in command was Thomas Sawyer by name;
In the next unto him were the elements of fame—
'Twas young Barnum the hero, he fought like a man,
Saying: "Fight on brave boys,"—but quickly was slain.

Our men numbered twelve, and the enemy fifty-seven;
But with this vast odds, when aided by Heaven,
We drove them, we beat them, and caused them to fly,
While others lay wounded and left there to die.

There are three of our men lying dead on the ground,
The rest have returned, and are yet safe and sound;
The enemy lost twelve, and the rest they soon fled—
Some went on their feet, others drawn on a sled.

May the name of the hero be never forgot,
Who determined to beat or to die on the spot;
Let the youths of our land his example pursue,
Give the glory to God and to whom it is due."

Trinity Church.

BY GEORGE BLISS.

There were many Episcopalians in this town and vicinity as early as 1790. At some time in that year the Rev. Bethuel Chittenden* removed here from Tinmouth, Vt. Services were probably held regularly from that time till Mr. Chittenden's death in 1809, and after that time services were kept up by lay reading, with occasionally a visit from a clergyman.

Dr. Garlick—a practicing physician on Grand Isle, but ordained deacon by Bishop Seabury in Middletown, Conn., July 29th, 1787—often visited and preached in this parish. There are no records of the parish, but from reports to conventions, &c. the church in 1810 must have numbered about 25 communicants, increasing between that time and 1820 to about 80, and remaining about that number for 10 or 15 years.

Dr. Joel Clapp† was the first regular settled clergyman over the parish. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Griswold at Greenfield, Mass., the 2d October, 1818, and priest by Bishop Griswold, at Windsor, Vt., the 17th Sept. 1819, and instituted rector of Trinity Church by the Rev. Stephen Beach, assisted by the Rev. James Read, the 27th Oct. 1819. He resigned his charge the 20th Sept. 1827. The Rev. Louis McDonald commenced his services as rector the 1st Nov. 1827, and resigned the 1st May, 1834. The Rev. S. A. Crane officiated every other Sunday from the 14th Sept. 1834, for a year or more. The Rev. Charles Cleveland was in charge of the parish from the summer of 1840 to the summer of 1848. The Rev. R. F. Cadle from December, 1848, to January, 1851. Services were suspended from this time—with the exception of occasional visits from neighboring clergymen, and a lay service which was maintained from the fall of 1856 till the summer of 1857—until September, 1860, when the Rev. J. Isham Bliss assumed the rectorship of the parish, and remained in charge until March, 1862. The Rev. Mr. Eastman of Vergennes now officiates every fourth Sunday. (1863.)

* See biography by Rev. Mr. Bailey.

† A biography by Rev. Dr. Hicks will appear in the history of Montgomery, Franklin County.—Ed.

Memoir of the Rev. Bethuel Chittenden,

The first Clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church ordained for Vermont.

BY THE REV. A. H. BAILEY, OF SHELDON, VT.

The Church in Vermont owes the tribute of a grateful memory to this excellent man, who labored for them as few of them have ever done for themselves. No sufficient and satisfactory memorial of him has yet been given to the public; and the following account is also confessedly incomplete, and may require corrections, since its materials were derived in fragments from various sources, including oral tradition. It is here put forth in the hope of eliciting further information. The writer can be addressed at Sheldon, Vt.

The scenes of the public life of Mr. Chittenden were among the hills, lakes and streams on either side of the Green Mountains. The time comprehended the period of most active emigration into the "New Hampshire grants," and extended to nearly twenty years after the admission of Vermont into the sisterhood of the Union. And the man is remembered as a large, portly, and very strong man, very sociable and full of anecdote, usually habited in a long coat with great pockets, and often seen journeying upon his horse over the rude ways from place to place amidst the new settlements.

He was born in Guilford, Connecticut, in or about the year 1739, being some ten years younger than his brother Thomas, who became the first Governor of Vermont. Both of these brothers were destitute of any better education than they could obtain in the common schools of Connecticut at that day, but were possessed of an unusual share of natural ability, in which respect the writer has the best authority for saying that the younger was not inferior to the elder. Both became pioneers in Vermont. Bethuel settled within the present Rutland county, in Tinmouth, before the organization of that town, which took place in 1774. There he felled the forest, and secured himself a farm in the wilderness, and in company with Major Royce, the ancestor of a distinguished family of that name, built the first saw-mill in the town.

Digitized by Google

He was a man of unsullied probity, and a conscientious Christian. It is probable, from evidences that need not be detailed here, that he commenced reading the Prayers of the Church on Sundays, with such sermons as he could procure, before his family and as many neighbors as were disposed to meet with them, several years prior to his ordination.

The circumstances under which he devoted himself to the ministry were remarkable, and must be understood before the act can be appreciated. The proportion of friends of the Church of England in the settlements was not less, but probably greater than in Connecticut and Massachusetts, from which most of the settlers came. New England Churchmen cannot have been wholly uninfluenced by the important inducements held out to them to migrate hither, in the charters issued by the Governor of New Hampshire, to which province the territory of Vermont was supposed to belong. In each township one right, which should have been about one-seventieth of the whole, was reserved for a glebe for the Church of England, and another was appropriated for the benefit of the Society of the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. Episcopalians must have argued that with these aids for the maintenance of the Church gradually becoming available, they would, after some years of privation, have a fuller enjoyment of the privileges of the Church than in the older States.

The war of the Revolution threatened the destruction of these hopes, and of the Church also. The time was unfavorable for religious improvement in any form; the hatred of everything British which was aroused by it intensified all prejudices against the established Church. The Society for Propagating the Gospel could not be expected to aid the people while at war with the mother country, nor in the event of their ultimate independence; and it required little sagacity to foresee that the chartered rights of the Church of England would be greatly endangered.

The elder brother, Thomas Chittenden, was not a Churchman, and naturally viewed the great questions then at issue in their political aspects only. By his earnest efforts to promote the American cause, and to secure for Vermont a good government and an honorable place among the States of the Republic, he gained for himself the confidence and honor of the people, and a distinguished place in the history of the State.

It was equally in the power of the younger brother to do the same thing if his aims were in the same direction. But his mind was not one which could easily break loose from the past for any experiments, however flattering in appearance. The tradition received by the writer is, that, in a public meeting of the citizens of his town, assembled to consult about the crisis, "He declared with tears in his eyes, that he could not lift his hand against the king." And it adds, that "He was never molested for his unpopular scruples." The writer has no written evidence of these statements. It is probable that Mr. Chittenden was not without sympathies for the cause in which his brother and fellow-citizens were engaged, but was restrained, conscientiously, from an active participation in it. His scruples were set at rest by the event, if not before. In 1796, he objected to the consecration of Dr. Peters, then Bishop elect of Vermont, on this ground among others, that the Doctor (a violent royalist) had acted a part, during the war, that was offensive to the Dissenters and to a majority of the Episcopalians.

When the war was over, the prospects of the Church were dreary in the extreme. Not an Episcopal clergyman yet resided within the State. In 1784, one was settled in Arlington, and two years later another in Manchester, both toward the south-western part of the State. Of these two, one soon manifested his unworthiness; and the other could not, if disposed, attend to his parish and the whole State besides. Who now should go through the State, and "seek for Christ's sheep that were dispersed abroad," feed them with the bread of life, gather their lambs into the fold, and encourage them to fidelity in the time of adversity, in the patient hope of brighter days to come? Who that was competent for it, would accept the life of obscure toil and of "journeyings oft," and endure the prejudices and suspicions which it involved? And where were the means for his support, if such an one was found? Or must the Church's heritage be diverted to other uses, as plainly it soon would be, if not in the practical possession of its proper owner, and these scattered disciples and their children be left to wander hopelessly?

The first practical answer to these questions was given on the 1st of June, 1787, when in Stamford, Conn., this energetic and successful pioneer, the plain farmer of Vermont, in the 49th year of his age, made his vows, and was ordained, by Bishop Seabury, to the office of a Deacon in the Church of Christ. Bethuel was the "man of God."

Mr. Chittenden commenced his official ministrations in his own neighborhood, with his children and a few other persons for his congregation there, visiting other places from time to time. The author of "Tinmouth and its Pioneers," an article in the Rutland Herald of April 6, 1855, thinks there was no Episcopal church organized there in those days. Probably there was none which would be regarded as sufficiently organized for this day; perhaps there was nothing written; yet the parish in Tinmouth was represented in some of our earliest Conventions, in which the "members presented their credentials and took their seats." But Mr. Chittenden seems to have been defective in being too inattentive to the value of proper organizations and records. Indeed, much inquiry has failed thus far to discover a single parochial organization made under his auspices, or even so much as a record, a letter, or a scrap of any kind written by his own hand. It is hoped that some of his letters and other papers, may yet come to light.

His parish in Tinmouth was certainly very humble. The town never became populous. He remained there less than three years after his ordination. But his labor there was not in vain. Though the parish has never, since he left it, had a resident clergyman, except once very transiently, and generally no regular pastor, several families well known, and two or three of high distinction, besides two persons who became clergymen, have gone from that place and done much for the Church elsewhere. And to this day there are a few names there of persons who are strongly and intelligently attached to the Church. The foundation of all this was the labor of Mr. Chittenden.

In 1790 he removed to Shelburne, in Chittenden county and purchased a farm of 50 acres, subsequently increased to 150, which was his residence for the rest of his life. His four sons and one daughter also settled near him, along the same road, called, from the circumstance, Chittenden street. About a dozen families, including those of his children, are now remembered to have belonged to his congregation there. His time was spent chiefly away, in the work of an itinerant evangelist. In 1794 he took the time to revisit Connecticut, and on the 29th of June was ordained Presbyter, in New London, by Bishop Seabury.

The extent of his field of labor may be inferred from the localities where his visits for official purposes are mentioned. He is known to have officiated in Franklin county, much in Fairfield, and occasionally in Sheldon; in Chittenden county, frequently in Jericho, besides Shelburne, the place of his residence; in Addison county, occasionally in Middlebury and Salisbury; in Rutland county, much in Tinmouth, his first residence, in Rutland, Castleton and Poultney occasionally, and in Wells and Pawlet frequently—all of these west of the Green Mountains; in Windsor county, in Bethel and Weathersfield, repeatedly; and in Windham county, in Rockingham, occasionally—these being on the eastern side of the range. Other places in the vicinity of these, where there were little clusters of Church people, no doubt shared his attention, though the want of records and other means of information prevents the addition of their names. The venerable Bishop Philander Chase thus mentioned his visit to Cornish, N. H.: "Being invited, he came across the Green Mountains to preach and administer the ordinances in Cornish, where the writer and his friends lived; and it was at the hands of this pious ambassador of Christ that he received for the first time the blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Never will the impressions made by this divinely appointed means of grace be obliterated from the writer's conscious mind." (Reminiscences, Vol. I., p. 18.)

Those, now aged, who were children of the Church, in his day, remember the pleasure which Mr. Chittenden's arrival gave to their households, and the satisfaction with which they themselves accepted a seat upon his knees. Cheerful and genial at heart, ready in conversation, argument, and illustration, it is here supposed that his influence was gained quite as much in private as in public.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Abraham Bronson, in his letters on the History of the Prot. Epis. Church in Vt., published in the Gambier Observer and in the Episcopal Recorder in 1834 and 1835, said that Mr. Chittenden "was respectable for talents and Christian character," and "was fond of controversy and skillful in it." But the general impression of him derived from those letters is diminutive, compared with that obtained from all other sources. Without entering into particulars, it may be admitted that his preaching was more controversial than our time would require, or even than is best at any time, without affecting our judgment of his aims, or seriously lessening our estimate of his wisdom. The literature of the saints and martyrs of the primitive Church was chiefly apologetic. But it should be noticed firstly, that Mr. Bronson wrote those letters without his memoranda before him, a quarter of a century after Mr. Chittenden had gone to his rest, and was certainly mistaken in a number of his statistics respecting Mr. C.. and his parishes, and the field generally; secondly, that after Mr. C.'s decease there was a confessed change in Mr. Bronson's own opinions respecting the characteristics of true piety, and the means to be employed to promote it, in accordance with which all the New-England clergy, his former self not excepted, were comprehended in his censures; and thirdly, that the Historical Letters exhibit throughout the predominant desire of the writer to recommend by his experience and observation "the measures" which he practiced, to universal adoption. To the Rev. Mr. Bronson, the Church in Vermont can never assign an inferior place in the memory of her early worthies; but it is right that these facts should be duly weighed, if the tone of those letters would prevent us from justly appreciating the excellent character of Mr. Chittenden.

Bishop Philander Chase called him "this pious ambassador of Christ." Bishop Carleton Chase mentioned him first of all in his list of the "excellent and steadfast men," of whom "he confessed with unfeigned satisfaction, his admiration." (Thompson's Hist, of Vt., Part II., p. 196.)

The survivors, among those who knew him in their youth, give but one opinion—that he was an honest, capable, faithful, and self-sacrificing minister of Christ. And the Convention of the Diocese annually elected him their President, from 1798 to 1808 inclusive, even when he was absent, appointing also on such occasions presidents pro tempore. He was a member of the standing Committee from 1796 or '97 till his decease, and was a member of other important special Committees.

In the spring of 1809 he became too infirm to travel, but continued to officiate in Shelburne till his decease, which was a fitting termination of such a life, On Sunday morning, Nov. 5, 1809, being then in his 71st year, with his congregation around him in the house of his son-in-law, he had concluded the devotions and commenced his sermon, which was to be followed by the holy Communion, when he sank back into his chair, and thence to the floor. His spirit was released before his friends could minister to him.

There is no way to arrive at any definite estimation of the value of his services. Records are wanting, and parochial reports were not yet made in the Diocese. Mr. Chittenden was not a parish clergyman, in such a sense that his parish should be an adequate exhibition of the fruit of his labors. In each place of his residence he gathered a small congregation, and in neither has the love of the Church ever since been extinguished. If statistics of his whole field could be found, covering the time of his ministry, it is probable that they would exhibit a gradual decrease of members. The Church was Episcopal without a bishop—that is, most inefficiently organized; was mostly without ministerial services; was despoiled of her property by the State; and was enduring the full weight of popular prejudice and opposition, as aggravated by the recent war. It was Mr. Chittenden's work to "strengthen the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees." And to his efforts, under God, is to be ascribed very much of the steadfastness of that noble band who remained firm through every trial, kept the Church together and active, and ready for advancement under the apostolic Griswold, when the brighter day dawned.

But the example of the man—who left the comforts of his farm, and for most of the time, of his home, at the age of fifty, and devoted himself to such a life, enduring its toils, and encountering its oppositions, for a waning Church, without reasonable recompense, and without the stimulus of present, or the prospect of future distinction, and persevered in it through all the infirmities of age, until the very moment of his final summons—is one which neither the Church nor the world can afford to lose.

Digitized by Google

Congregational Church.

BY DEA. H. BARSTOW.

A Congregational church was formed at Shelburne, Jan. 29, 1807, by the Rev. Jedediah Bushnell, of Cornwall, consisting of ten members—three males and seven females. Up to Aug. 1814, they had increased to 21 members; from this period to Sept. 1817, 12 had been added; from this, to May 16, 1819, 27 were added; from this to Nov. 1823, 17 were added; from this period to Feb. 1832, 10 were added—making a total of 87 members. Making no allowance for deaths, removals, or expulsions, the above is a total of the admissions. I believe there has never been more than 30 members at any one time from 1807 to 1832. They never succeeded in building a church or settling a minister. They struggled hard and faithfully to sustain themselves, but seemed to be peculiarly unfortunate. About this period, by and with the advice of neighboring clergymen of the same church, the remaining members, with a few individual exceptions, in connection with a remnant of the Free Will Baptist church of about the same number, concluded to make a virtue of necessity—by uniting with the M. E. church. They were cordially received, and have generally walked harmoniously with them to the present time (Nov. 30, 1860.)

March 27, 1851, a Congregational church was organized at Shelburne, by the following named gentlemen, who composed the ecclesiastical council convened for that purpose, viz: Revs. J. K. Converse, John Wheeler and R. Case, of Burlington; O. S. Hoyt, of Hinesburgh; J. C. Bingham, of Charlotte; J. Leavitt, of Vergennes; S. Hurlburt, of New Haven. On the same day 27 persons were admitted—10 males and 17 females. The Congregational church of Shelburne now numbers 17 members—5 males and 12 females. The foregoing statistics are taken from recollection and records. They have no preaching at the present time, but are faithful attendants with other denominations.

Methodism in Shelburne.

BY REV. A. CAMPBELL.

It is not certainly known that there was Methodist preaching in Shelburne before 1800. Still it is quite probable that the Rev. Joseph Mitchell, who preached on the Vergennes circuit the two preceding years, might at some time have preached in Shelburne.

In 1800, the Rev. Henry Ryan preached on the Vergennes circuit, and established an appointment in Shelburne. His first sermon was preached at the residence of Mr. Joshua Read, from the following text: "And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods; because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection." Acts xvii. 18.

Mr. Ryan was not very cordially received by the clergymen of the town, and some others. He was denounced as an intruder, and almost anything else but an embassador of Christ.

The preaching was principally confined to the east part of the town for many years. A society was soon organized. Among its early members were Nathaniel Gage, John Simonds, Phinehas Hill, and their wives. Among its most devoted and worthy members was Mr. James Simonds, the father of the Rev. S. D. Simonds, formerly of the Troy, and now a prominent member of the California Conference.

The preachers who succeeded Mr. Ryan on the Vergennes circuit, and consequently preached at Shelburne, were R. Dyer, E. Chichester, William Anson, J. M. Smith, S. Cochran, S. Draper and Dexter Bates. In 1808, the name of the circuit was changed to Charlotte, and Shelburne remained connected with it until 1837. During this period, the following preachers labored on the circuit, viz.: A. McKain, M. Richardson, S. Sormborger, A. Scolfield, T. Madden, G. Lyon, J. Haskins, J. Byington, W. Ross, D. Lewis, J. Beman, N. White, S. Landon, T. Benedict, S. Silliman, A. Dunbar, H. De Wolf, J. Youngs, S. Covel, B. Goodsell, L. Baldwin, J. Covel, L. C. Filley, N. Levings, J. Poor, C. Meeker, B. Griffin, T. Seymour, A. Hazleton, E. C. Griswold, R. Wescott, J. Ayers, C. R. Morris, J. Ames, P. C. Oakley, J. Gobbitt, J. D. Marshall and William Griffin.

Digitized by Google

Under the labors of the last two named ministers a very extensive revival of religion was enjoyed, in which Shelburne shared very largely.

The following year, Z. Phillips and C. De Vol were appointed to the circuit, and labored together one year, when the circuit was divided, and Shelburne became a distinct charge. Since Z. Phillips left Shelburne in 1838, the following ministers have occupied the charge, viz.: C. Prindle, A. Witherspoon, H. Meeker, H. L. Starks, H. Dunn, R. T. Wade, J. D. White, J. F. Yates, S. L. Stillman, J. M. Edgerton, G. C. Wells, O. J. Squire, and A. Campbell, the present pastor. In 1833, the brick church now occupied was erected. Since that time the interior has once undergone an entire renewal.

The present number in the society is 140. The following is a list of its official board: Stewards, Ezra Meech, Robert White, L. Blair, N. Newell, R. J. White, H. Russell, R. Rogers and L. Tracy. Class leaders, H. Barstow, L. S. White, J. F. Wells, E. Meech, S. Curry and R. Rogers. Local preachers, George F. Sutton, H. F. Fisk and G. Yager.

Of the vicissitudes common to the Christian church, Methodism in Shelburne has shared its due proportion. While seasons of special prosperity have not been few, seasons of trial have been encountered.

In 1843, through the efforts of a former pastor, Rev. C. Prindle, an excitement on the subject of slavery was produced, and a secession of about a score of members; and the organization of the Wesleyan society was the result. No pains were spared to bring the M. E. church into disrepute, and to effect its overthrow.

Again in 1851, after a very gracious revival of religion under the pastoral oversight of the Rev. J. F. Yates, through the efforts of a Dr. Sprague, a small secession was induced for the purpose of organizing a Congregational church in town.

But in reviewing the past, it is gratifying to realize that the numerous vicissitudes encountered have tended to the promotion of spiritual stability and advancement.

Special attention has been given to the Sabbath School for a number of years. Occasional conversions have been realized among its members. In this respect it has been more than usually prosperous for the last few months—about a score having been converted since the beginning of autumn (1861.)

Thus the church is strengthened to stand forth a rebuke to sin, a light to the benighted, and an asylum for the penitent believer. "A proverb of reproach and love."

John Tabor.

BY C. P. TABOR, OF TROY, N. Y.

John Tabor, though not one of the first, was an early settler in Shelburne, and was often heard to say that he helped raise the first frame building in town. He was a native of Princeton, Rhode Island, and removed with his father and family from there to Rutland County, Vt., in 1788, where—excepting himself—the family settled; the town of Mount Tabor taking its name from them. John penetrated farther into the wilderness, and settled in Shelburne about this time. He immediately took up land, a portion of which was situated upon that beautiful point made by Shelburne Bay and Lake Champlain, known as Potter's Point. He about this time married a Miss Smith, who soon died; and for his second wife married Jemima Trowbridge.

The lands he purchased were entirely new. He entered at once upon subduing them, and continued to occupy them, or a portion of them, until his death, which occurred in 1813, at the age of 47 years; leaving a widow and a family of eight children. His prosperity had been such that he left his children in a condition better than his own at their age. They each took by inheritance a small farm, of land both in quality and beauty of location not excelled.

He possessed the qualities necessary to successful pioneer life; was an energetic, industrious, honest, courageous man, of good sense and judgment. Any sketch of the early history of this town would be deficient which should omit mention of his name.

His numerous descendants now residing in several of the different states, are an illustration of the nomadic character of the race.

Hon. Almon H. Read.*

FROM MR. STURGEON'S ADDRESS.

U. S. Senate, Washington, June 10, 1844.

A message was received from the House, announcing the death of Hon. Almon H. Read, late a representative from the state of

*This paper is furnished by his son.—Ed.

Pennsylvania, and that resolutions had been adopted testifying the respect of that body for the memory of the deceased, and asking the concurrence of the Senate therein; which being read, Mr. Sturgeon rose and addressed the Senate as follows:

Mr. President: The message just received, announces to us that death has again been in our midst. Whilst we have been earnestly engaged in the vain struggles of this mortal life, death has often, since the commencement of the present session, intruded itself, and selected its victims, to remind us that we are but pilgrims and sojourners on this earth, as our fathers were.

Almon H. Read, our late esteemed associate and friend, is no more. He died at his residence in Montrose, Susquehanna County, Penn., surrounded by an affectionate family and sympathizing friends, who did all that human kindness could do to alleviate the sufferings of his last illness, and smooth his passage through the dark valley of the shadow of death.

Mr. Read was born at Shelburne, on the 12th of June, 1790. He received his education partly in the University of Burlington, in his native State, and partly at Williamstown College in the state of Massachusetts, and was a good classical scholar. In 1814 he settled in Montrose, Penn., where he commenced the practice of law, and resided to the day of his death.

My acquaintance commenced with Mr. Read in 1827, when he first took his seat in the Legislature of Pennsylvania. Our friendship continued uninterrupted from that time till a few weeks since, when he left the seat of government for his home, to leave his remains among those who knew him best and loved him most. Mr. Read was elected to the popular branch of the Pennsylvania Legislature five successive sessions. Although he could not be called the originator of our state internal improvement system, yet it owed much of its progress to completion to his energy, activity and perseverance. In 1832, he was elected a member of the state Senate, and for four years was actively engaged in carrying out his early views on the subject of our improvement system. In 1836, he was elected a member of the Convention to amend the Constitution of the State; and here, although on a new theater and having new subjects to engage his attention, the character of Mr. Read for talents lost nothing by the change. He appeared to much advantage when coming in mental collision with the talented men who were assembled together on that occasion. He showed himself intimately acquainted with our forms of government. He was bold in announcing his views, and energetic in carrying them out. The various speeches made by him on that occasion will hand down his name to posterity as a civilian of the first order,—logical in debate, and energetic in action. A short time after the dissolution of the Convention he was elected state treasurer, in which situation he served one year. He was subsequently elected twice as a member of Congress. Here his talents were not so conspicuous, nor could they be properly estimated, because, previous to his taking his seat, that fell destroyer—so flattering in its progress to the subject of it, yet holding out no consoling hopes to the observant friends—had marked him for his victim. He died of consumption, on the 3d inst., in the 54th year of his age.

Mr. Read was a sincere friend, an affectionate husband, and a kind and tender parent. He left no wife to sorrow over his grave—the partner of his bosom having preceded him to the tomb but a few short months; but he has left an amiable and interesting family, to whom the bereavement must be peculiarly poignant. Let his example urge them on to imitate his course; and while they lament his death, they lament not as those without hope. He died as he had lived, "an honest man, the noblest work of God."

Mr. S. concluded by submitting the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the communication from the House of Representatives, announcing the death of the Hon. Almon H. Read, and that as a mark of respect, they will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

The Senate then adjourned.

There was also an eulogy pronounced in the House, but the main incidents of his life are mentioned in Mr. Sturgeon's address. I think it unnecessary to repeat them.

Our County Court was in session at the time of his decease. A meeting of the bar was called, and resolutions passed to wear crape on the arm for thirty days, to adjourn court and attend the funeral in a body.

At the close of the Reform Convention for revising the Constitution, composed of 133 members, the chairs occupied during the session were sold at public auction. My father's brought $14, the highest price of any one sold, which shows the estimation he was held in by a Philadelphia community. They were all alike, and the remaining 132 were sold at varying prices from $2 to $10.

I have also a valuable cane in my possession, presented him by the citizens of Erie—made from the Flag Ship Lawrence—for distinguished services in the Reform Convention. The top of it is of octagonal shape—interlaid with silver, on which is the engraving.

Digitized by Google

THE EPHEMERA.

BY LUCELIA READ.

[Lucelia Read was born in Shelburne, in 1822. She early exhibited a decided precocity of intellectual activity and poetic talent, but in consequence of prolonged ill health and other unfavorable influences at an early period in life, she was forced to abandon intellectual pursuits, writing but little subsequent to the age of 20. She died in May, 1861.]

I was born in the heart of the lovely wild rose,
And cradled amid its perfume,
And save when my eyelids in slumber would close,
I saw but its beauty and bloom.

O sweetly the hours of my infancy fled,
As I dwelt in that charming bower,
Till I winged my way from the rosy bed,
In the heart of the wild wood flower.

In the morning beams I have floated along,
While the air with melody rung,
And at noontide warbled my merriest song
The violet blossoms among.

And oft in the jessamine pure and sweet,
I have frolicked, and danced, and laughed,
And oft as I rested my wearying feet,
Of the dewy nectar quaffed.

To the heart of the lily I've often crept,
When wearied with music and mirth,
And there in her bosom have peacefully slept,
As few may e'er slumber on earth.

I have rested oft 'mid the splendor and light
Of blossoms whose rainbow-like leaves
Enshrouded me there amid tissues more bright
Than the labor of man ever weaves.

I am told that the sunlight will soon be gone,
That my race will soon be run,
But still I am caroling on,
In the rays of the setting sun.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING.

AN EXTRACT.

The "golden wedding" of the Hon. Robert White, of Shelburne, was commemorated Jan. 18th, 1860. On which occasion a poem was read from the pen of Nancy T. Colamer, which opens thus:

Just fifty years ago to-night,
Ah me! how long it seems,
This aged pair were then quite young
And full of life's bright dreams.

To tread life's ever-changing path,
To share its joy and woe,
With hearts so full of hope and love,
Just fifty years ago.

UNDERHILL.

BY GAY H. NARAMORE, ESQ.

This township originally contained 36 square miles, but in 1839 one-third (i. e. 12 square miles) of the town of Mansfield was annexed. It lies in the N. E. corner of [illegible]den county, and connects with four other towns, to wit: Westford, Fairfax, Fletcher and Cambridge.

1765, June 8, the town was chartered by the governor of New Hampshire to Joseph Sackett, Jr., and 64 others,* for $230,40, there being 71 shares in all.

Underhill was named after two brothers who held shares under the original charter. The first survey was made in 1785, and it is supposed that one Darius Post, in the same year, settled within the limits of this town, on the site of the present village of Underhill Flats. Said Mr. Post was married to Miss Bostwick in 1788, but he must have soon removed as he did not attend the first town meeting, March 9, 1795, and does not appear after this date on the records.

The first permanent settlement was made by Moses Benedict and Abner Eaton about 1786. The last named lived for a number of years on the old post road, about half way between Underhill Flats and Cambridgeboro'. Here, five miles from any neighbor, he built a log house, and commenced clearing up the woods. This was a desirable location at that time, on account of the beaver meadows which covered some 50 acres on either side of a small branch of the Lamoille. Sufficient wild grass and hay for the support of a yoke of oxen and a cow were readily obtained here without waiting the slow destruction of the forest and the growth of tame grasses, hence the choice of this remote and comparatively sterile farm in preference to the rich bottom lands of Burlington, Essex, and Jericho, which then could have been bought at the same price.

The warning for the first town meeting was made by Jonathan Castle, Esq., justice of the peace, of Jericho, Feb. 23, 1795. The first town clerk and representative, William

*Joseph Sackett, Jr., James H. First, Peter First, Joseph First, Edward Earle, Marmaduke Earle, James Jameson, Cornelius Low, Jr. Esq., Jona. Dayton, Jr., Jona. Heard, Andrew Anderson, James Anderson, John Yeats, Jas. Sackett, Sam. Sackett, Jno. Sackett, David Mathews Andrew Ten Eike, Jr., William Sackett, Joseph Savage, Daniel Vorhes, Micael Butler, Samuel Wall, Joseph Ball, Jeremiah Allen, Henry Allen, John Freeborn, Robert Freeborn, Samuel Browne, Carey Dunn, Wm. Sands, Benja. Underhill, Peter Allen, William Allen, Henry Franklin, Bishop Hadley, James Horton, Sen., Silvanus Horton, Underhill Horton, Maurice Salta, Lewis Riley, James Read, Peter Ten Eike, Jr., Isaac Adolphas, Samuel Judea, Myer Myers, Solomon Marache, Jacob Watson, Joshua Watson, Silvanus Dillingham, William Butler, Robert Midwinter, John Midwinter, Derrick Amberman, Joseph Holmes, John Cokle, Jona. Copland, Uriah Woolman, John Sears, Hon. John Temple, Theo. Atkinson, M. H. I. Kentworth, Dr. John Hale, and Maj. Samuel Hale. [From the papers of Henry Stevens.—Ed.]

Digitized by Google

Barney; constable, Caleb Sheldon; selectmen, A. Eaton, Archibald Dixon and Cyrus Stevens. The first born child was Polly Dixon, daughter of Archibald Dixon, Esq. The first death of adult person was the wife of the aforenamed Caleb Sheldon, Esq., about the year 1800.

Underhill lies on the western slope of the Green Mountains; Mount Mansfield, the highest land in the state, being near the N. E. corner. It is not wealthy, but it has some good land and much fine scenery. It has a population of 1637. Grand list $3478,10; and 14 school districts, though Thompson says only eight.

The first school-house was built of logs in Dist. No. 1 (North Underhill), about 1787. First teachers, unknown.

No state criminals, and only five college graduates, viz.: Elon Olds Martin, afterwards settled as Presbyterian minister in Lowndes county, Ala.; Charles Parker, who is at present a Congregational minister in Vermont; William Richmond, late principal of St. Albans high school, St. Albans; Henry Thorp, now in the state of Oregon; and Gay.H. Naramore. These are all that graduated in due course, and yet there is another name that should have a prominent place in this connection,—Joseph S. Cilley, lately removed to Williston academy, Williston, but for a long period principal of select schools and academies both at Underhill Flats and Underhill Center, has done more for the educational interest of the town than any other man. Truly an earnest, devoted, successful teacher, and a noble man. In all the states, from Maine to California, are his pupils to be found. Many thousands remember him with gratitude and affectionate esteem. He has lately received the honorary degree of A. M. from the University of Vermont. With no aids save text books and his own vigorous mind, he has excelled those with the greatest advantages.

The manufactures of Underhill are very limited. In 1825 Tower & Oaks built a starch factory, with a steam engine of ten horse power. From that time to 1850 they manufactured large quantities of starch, and a number of other mills were built, but they have since all gone to decay. There are some four saw-mills in the eastern valley, at the base of the mountains, which do a fair business. Spruce is the chief lumber. There is also a flouring-mill at Underhill Center, and a firkin and box-factory above—on a branch of Brown's river.

The first church was built in 1804 or '05, on the highest point of land on the highway within the town.

A certain Mr. Campbell, about this time, opened a store near the church. J. H. Tower was the first merchant at the Flats village.

By the meeting-house was also that important place called the parade ground, which, if not so large as the New York Central Park, was at the least 12 rods wide by 50 long, and had a very majestic whipping-post at the south end, near the church porch.

On one side of the above mentioned green or parade ground, in 1825, Cyrus Birge kept his store, and was appointed P. M., having the first postoffice in town. Here, then, was the first of everything in this large and important township, but alas for the wisdom of man! Time has upset all the cherished plans of our ancestors. The meeting-house has long since vanished without leaving so much as a trace of ruins, the whipping-post is hopelessly uprooted, and the green—the pride of patriotic lads and happy lasses—has been relentlessly fenced in for a plough-field. Nought remains as it was planned by our good fathers, save the old first Congregational church burying ground, as it is usually called.

"The dead rest there alone."

Underhill had her share of Revolutionary worthies, if the record is true. George Olds, Caleb Sheldon, Barnard Ward, David Birge, Oliver Wells and Chauncey Graves were for a long time pensioners.

Elijah Birge was captain of a militia company which was called into service during the war of 1812.

Underhill took no part in the Canada rebellion.

Lawyers have never thrived in this locality. Cheese making or horse raising is usually esteemed more honorable as well as lucrative.

In the year 1821, however, a young man by the name of Bacon tried to practice law here for a short time, but gave it up soon and has not been heard of since. A firm of Sawyer & Beardsley staid longer, but were not successful.

Physicians have succeeded better, so that the town has supported one or more of these dignitaries since the commencement of this century. Doctors Benedict and Burdick at present prevail. The latter is, I believe, a graduate of the medical department of the University of Vermont.

Sublime scenery abounds, and yet the good inhabitants have usually managed to keep their poetic ardor within bound, so that it should not cause an inky overflow. One exception, however; for tradition says that sometime between 1805 and '10, a certain Fisk, M. D. (who was also the first practicing physician) threw off a comic poem entitled "The Enchanted Vale." I think there is no fragment of it extant, and I cannot find as it was ever published.

Underhill does not seem to be more than moderately healthy. 100 years, which is often attained in a milder climate, is never known here. Being mountainous, the wintry winds are very severe in exposed situations. Besides this, physiology and the laws of health and nature seem to be things of the smallest consequence, so that they are the very last things considered.

The oldest person living (1861) is Theophilus Haniford, born in 1767. Oldest person deceased, George Olds, who died in 1844, aged 97 years.

Underhill supports a fine academy in each village, only about two miles apart. The population scarcely gains at all of late years, owing to the continual exodus to California, the South and the "West." The Irish element is continually gaining on the American, so that it is safe to calculate that it will soon predominate.

Pasturage, the dairy and stock employ nearly all the capital as well as labor of the town.

Congregational Church in Underhill.

COMMUNICATED BY REV. SIMEON PARMELEE.

Underhill, March 4, 1861.

The Congregational Church was organized in this town on the 29th of December, 1801, by Rev. Ebenezer Kingsbury of Jericho. The following individuals constituted the original company of which it was composed:

Males.—Adam Hurlburt, James Dixon, George Olds, Carey Mead, Herman Prior, John Coleman, Daniel Clark.

Females.—Elenor Dixon, Judith Mead, Abigail Birge, Rachel Ward, Lidia Dixon, Permit Prior, Veelea Mead.

Rev. James Parker was the first settled minister in this town. His ordination occurred probably in November, 1803. I can find no record of the ordination, but I find a committee appointed to agree with Mr. Parker on conditions of settlement. In November and the first of January there is found the record of business done that showed that Mr. Parker had been ordained, but I find no date of the ordination. Mr. Parker was a man of substantial integrity and living piety. His education was limited, but his ministry was blessed while here and he was truly a devoted man, a spiritual preacher, and a devoted Christian. He was companionable, and rendered himself acceptable in every place, but especially in the pulpit.

There was a vein of humor that enlivened the conversation of Mr. Parker, and often something of the kind would make its appearance in the pulpit. But still he always kept himself under, and held forth Christ and his religion as the great lesson to be taught. He was truly a faithful servant of the Most High God, who preached Christ and lived Him, and left behind him an honorable name, which is better than precious ointment.

I am now preaching to the church which is a continuation of the one over which he was ordained. The most of those who were then active members are gone the long journey, but those that live still revere the name of their first pastor.

Mr. Parker had two sons that were settled in the ministry. One was settled in Lower Canada, and the other in Maine. The former was named Ami, and the latter Benjamin Wooster. The former is a pioneer in Canada, and stands as a pillar in that land. I do not know that the other one is living.

The Catholic Church in Underhill.

FROM BISHOP GOESBRIAND.

The church edifice of Underhill Center was built in 1856, and dedicated to God under the patronage of St. Thomas. It has been enlarged this year by the care of Rev. P. O. Carroll of Richmond. Its dimensions are 32 by 90. The congregation numbers about 90 families. They are attended twice in the month on Sunday from Richmond by Rev. P. O. Carroll.

Digitized by Google

A Sketch of Mansfield.

An extract from "Mountaineering," by Gay H. Naramore.*

Mansfield, so called from its contour resemblance to the face of humanity, is the highest land in Vermont, and a little more than half as high as the cap-stone of New England, Mount Washington. For all our early start the clouds were up before us, and looked frowningly down, you may imagine, as we toiled our weary way beneath; but they scattered before the fiercer sunbeams, and left each towering crag and "thunder-splintered pinnacle" as grand, and lone, and terribly sublime as ever. On the north-east woody hills banked upon hills loomed far away to the hidden sources of the Connecticut. On the south-east small clearings were visible—mere gardens in the wilderness, and, glittering in the sun, the largest one the tiny village of Stowe. Sleeping in listless beauty in the west, with its fair young isles kissing the bright waves, and drinking in the sunbeams, lay the old Champlain, and beyond, as if wedged between its waters and the deep sky, and drowned in misty beauty, peered the Essex Mountains of New York. And nearer to our feet, away this side of these, leaning up against the beetling cliffs with rugged, careless ease was our old school-home, the (about-to-be) classic Underhill,—and Westford, and that paradise of felicity, Cambridge-borough, and Fairfax, and Milton, and seven more. Stephensville, composed partly of "houses and all the rest barns," where they have a "grist-mill to make shingles," and a peck measure factory, is not thought of in the above computation.

Mansfield's forehead is not very intellectual—his chin, like that of many others, being the highest. He has a regular cave of a mouth, but terribly twisted, and opens far down on the north-east side, yawning and awful, with a breath that strikes a blight like that of angry winter. A hundred feet overhead trembles a vast rock of tuns weight, which seems each moment as if just ready to fall; yet it has probably hung there for thousands of years. We go about three rods on an antediluvian bank of ice and snow, and arrive at the well, or more properly, throat. We throw in stones; they go down, and down, and down—whack, whack, whack for some time, and then splash in deep waters.

It seems strange that this has never been explored, though probably the threatening rocks and stone above have deterred adventurers.

The nose is not Roman, as H. observed, but a right Yankee sneezer three hundred feet high. Our camp was at the foot of this, in right Indian style—rocks on three sides, boughs under and over us, with a huge spruce fire in the corner.

Twelve of us staid all night. What a glorious sunset. It was worth an age of toil and heart-sickness and woe, to behold just once that changing, deepening, glowing twilight heaven.

MANSFIELD.

It was midnight by the shadows
That o'er Brown's wild fountains lie,
As we climbed the Mansfield mountains
Where they throne the deepest sky.

O, the rapture of that moment,
When we crowned the rock-built fane,
And looked down upon the lifeless
Shores and waves of Lake Champlain.

We the only lords in being—
But the next thought brought refrain,
For our journey lay before us;
Should we ever meet again?

Then the past came up before us,
All the varied scenes of years,
All our boyish sports together,
All our frolics, all our tears,—

All our Burnside, moonlight rambles
Where the Brown's wild waters fly,
All our bright plans for the future,
Friendships that could never die!

We parted when the morrow
First lit up thy waves, Champlain;
For life's journey lay before us,
And we never met again!

DECEMBER AT UNDERHILL.

BY GAY H. NARAMORE.

Sadder and sadder the sad hours grow,
Fiercer and fiercer the frost-winds blow,
Deeper and deeper the dark nights flow
Over the pulseless world below;
And pallid spectres do ever go
Through the shades, singing wild songs of woe,
As they sow;
And their pitiless laughter is oft heard—ah, wo!
And all through the long nights they hasten, we know,
To scatter their storm-seed of hail and snow!

And still nights grow longer and deeper starred,
And longer old Mansfield's shadows are cast;
Later and later the sun is barred,
Till morning's smiles are all o'ercast;
And then, in a veil of frost and hail—
Say, dear Don, must it not be drear
To watch the very sun grow pale,
And O Sorrow, hear
No songs but dirges for the dead year,
And see no flowers but through death's veil!

No, oh! no, dear Don. Though it may seem queer,
To you, nestling there midst orange bowers,

* Mr. Naramore has published two volumes at least of his poems. The first is very handsomely represented in the Poets and Poetry of Vermont. The latter volume was issued by a New York press—Carlton, we think—the past winter. But his own graphic, fresh, glowing style will best praise him.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

These cold dark days are not at all drear,
  Nor nights long hours.
No, our farmers do never weep at all
At the wailing lays of the dying fall,
  Nor that Winter's frowns in dismal showers
Are o'er them cast;
To our farmer ears what says the blast?
Nothing sad at all. Not at all drear;
  Though to Southern ear
  It might whistle queer
Such songs as would make all tingle to hear,
Yet what care the sons of old Underhill?
To them Winter's form is not strange nor drear,
For he sleeps in their mountain caves all the year.
So the jolly farmer but laughs to know
The winds are at play with the drifting snow,
And so he does nothing at all but laugh,
As he fans from the golden grain the chaff,
  At the dirges so drear
  For the old dead year.

Does nothing but laugh as he blows the chaff,
  Does nothing but laugh as the shadows rise,
Does nothing but laugh as the shadows fall,
  Does nothing but laugh at the stars in the skies,
And tell long stories of war withal,—
How wild hunters ambushed beneath wild trees—
  All of savage men and wildernesses,
Until each gaping youngster sees
  Hung in the dark the scalp's red tresses,
And on the earth, dark gory seas;
  And our old-thoughted grandam blesses
Her soul and mine, that, thanks! at last,
Those dreary, cruel days are past.
Does nothing but laugh as the hours fly fast,
  Unless it be to talk of the times
And the timely tension of truth, called news,
  Of Southworth's stories and Richmond's rhymes;
And how old Frank Pierce had the blues
When he told his soldiers to "push on the battle,
For he was sick"—(of the cannon's rattle?);
Unless to pile wood on the climbing fire,
And crack jokes and nuts as the flames climb higher;
Unless it be to pass hugest bowls
Of luscious apples and sparkling cider,
And wing bravest songs from bravest souls,
That each night grow braver and deeper and wider,
As the nights grow darker and snows more deep,
Does nothing at all but laugh and—sleep!
  And so, Don, why should I
Do nothing but weep?
O no, dear Don, my blithesome lad,
Though the world does weep, I'm not oft sad,
Though Time, with his scythe,
Draws nearer and nearer
As the wintry winds whistle drearer and drearer,
  Why my laughing fire
But grows dearer and dearer;
And so, (after walking abroad to see
How the snow-birds joy in the storm's company,
How the wily fox, awake before day,
In his rocky caves mocks the bloodhound's bay,
Till the skating school-boys from glassy pool
Are called by the morning bell to school,)
With my mind tuned anew to nature's thought,
I turn to my cosy room again,
And pore o'er my books till my task is all wrought,
And stern Sir Coke smiles at Kent and Montaigne,
  And early night comes down again
  With an uncivil frown at my civil train.
There, don't go to sleep, but listen a minute
  (For the muse that's so hoarse now
May sing like a linnet).
Yes. The work is done. We can chat and laugh now;
No, don't say I'm old, that time 's blanched my brow;
  Don't lead me back to the past so lone,
For the heart will ache as it loiters where
  Some rosebud of bliss was wantonly strown!
And the way seems so long where no light encheers,
O'er what an ocean of sighs and tears,
Through what a journey of ages of years,
Of rough wild years—
And o'er what mountains of hopes and fears
Since the restless strife of life began
Why scan?
If the past is not fair
Why wander there?
If day's labors are past,
If life's duties are done
And their guerdon won,
  Why longer aghast?
  For night's blest hours are flying fast, fast—
The hours so sacred to love and dreams.
  No, I'm not lone now—
Say, dost see those bright gleams
  Of golden light o'er our mountain's brow,
  Where the "pearly gates" are opening now
  And heaven is smiling on earth below?
There are forms of beauty and forms of light
  That smile on our poet's soul from each cloud
Which veils the beaming eyes of night;
  While angels crowd
The tremulous air to whisper delight;—
So you see it matters not how lone
The winds seem to moan,
How can your poet-heart be lone!

WESTFORD.

BY REV. J. H. WOODWARD.

Westford is in the second tier of towns east of Lake Champlain, reclining on the western slope of the Green Mountains. It is bounded N. by Fairfax, E. by Underhill, S. by Essex, and W. by Milton. Its center is 16 miles N. E. of Burlington, and 16 miles S. E. of St. Albans. The town lies in a regular form, containing 36 square miles, and was chartered by Gov. Wentworth of New Hampshire, in 1763. The grantees were 65 in number. Its surface is broken, ledges cropping out here and there, and the whole diversified with luxuriant valleys and verdant mountain ridges. No part of it, however, is so rough or precipitous as to be uninhabitable, and the whole is well adapted to grasing purposes. Like other mountainous districts it is well watered. Its pastures are sweet, and its meadows and corn lands productive; nor is there any great amount of waste territory, although to a stranger it might seem otherwise. The soil is somewhat varied. Through the central portions clay preponderates, while in the eastern and western sections a rich gravelly loam prevails, and the extreme northern portion (originally a pine plain) has a light, sandy soil. The rocks generally are of a slate formation. There have as yet been discovered no metals of any considerable value, although indications in the north-eastern portions of the town are at present awakening some interest and eliciting some examination.

Digitized by Goog

This town is about equi-distant from the grand old Mansfield on the east, and the beautiful lake, with her silver waters and her green isles on the west. Its northern border is skirted by the Lamoille, and but a little to the south flows the Winooski, so that naturally Westford is among the most desirable positions in the state. Its scenery, and that about it, is wild and beautiful; while, from its near proximity to the mountains, the lake, and two of the principal rivers of the state, its soil is not as subject to drouth as sections more remote from these favorite haunts, and conductors of clouds and of showers. Yet, in 1859 and '60, "boasting" (in these respects) "is excluded."

Besides numerous living springs and brooks there is one pond covering some 10 acres in the west part of the township, and Brown's river, which enter it on the south, holding its course a little to the west of north, dividing its territory on the east and west into nearly equal parts. This river takes its rise near the base of old Mansfield, and making a sweep in a south-westerly direction through Underhill, the corners of Jericho and Essex, assumes a northerly course which it maintains till it becomes tributary to the Lamoille, in the town of Fairfax. Our lands were originally covered with heavy forests containing almost every variety of timber. Hemlock, beech and maple were the most common, although spruce, pine, birch, elm and ash were quite abundant. It was a giant task to clear these lands, hence this town was not settled as early or as rapidly as most of the towns in its vicinity. Indeed, till within 30 years, it was considered one of the most undesirable towns in the county. Within that period it has probably advanced as rapidly in wealth and culture and the substantial comforts of life as any agricultural town in the region.

In 1787 Hezekiah Parmelee, uncle to the Rev. Simeon Parmelee, D. D., so long and favorably known in the state, became the first settler. A few others soon came in, mostly Massachusetts men, and commenced their settlement in the south part of the town. Shortly after, and about simultaneously, two companies came in; the one, from New Hampshire, settling in the north-east part of the town; the other, from Rhode Island, settling in the north-western section. The Massachusetts and New Hampshire families were an excellent class of settlers, of enterprising, moral and religious character. The Rhode Islanders were a little more of the "rough and ready stamp"—fearless, impulsive, ready for a frolic or a fight.

In 1793, March 25th, the town was organized. Francis Northway was the moderator. Martin Powell (subsequently the Rev. Martin Powell who passed a long and useful ministry in this and York states) was the first clerk. The first selectmen were John Seely, Levi Farnsworth and Shubal Woodruff. John Seely was town treasurer. John Seely, Levi Farnsworth and Shubal Woodruff were listers. First constable, Ebenezer Burdick. Tithingman, Shubal Woodruff. We have no means of knowing the number of inhabitants in town at this time, but the probability is that it was quite limited, as several offices were conferred on the same individuals. Jeremiah Stone (father of the late Allen Stone) was the first representative and merchant of the town. Its first physician was Dr. Rice, who remained but a short time and removed to Canada. Its first postmaster was Wm. P. Richardson. We believe that a pair of twins, belonging to Mr. Stephen Johnson, first received burial in town. Mr. Silas Beach, the grandfather of the several Beach families now resident among us, was the first adult who died. He was killed by the fall of a tree which he had been chopping, July 4, 1796.

In 1795, Mr. Elisha Baker put up a saw-mill at the center of the town, where there are several good mill privileges. Shortly after, Mr. Joshua Stanton erected a grist-mill and a forge at the same place. These formed the nucleus of a village—inviting in settlers, and awakening the cheer and hum of industry amid these waving forests. They seemed to impart a new activity and enterprise to the whole town. The inhabitants who up to this time had been forced to go a long distance for boards and milling, now felt rich in their home facilities. The forge gave employment to a number of hands. It was supplied with ore, bog-ore, from Colchester, near the mouth of the Winooski river, from which place a distance of 16 miles, it had to be drawn by horses, over new and bad roads. The iron made from this ore was very soft and malleable, and subsequently was much improved by a mixture of mountain ore brought from York State. It was boated into Burlington, and carted from thence.

Digitized by Google

Notwithstanding the great distance and the disadvantages under which the ore was brought, the business of making iron proved profitable, so much so that another forge was built in a short time, at a point some hundred rods lower down the river—near where the grist-mill and upper saw-mill now stand. The first mills and forge were at the rapids near T. G. Beach's furniture shop. The mills stood at the lower extremity of Mr. Woodward's garden, and the forge just over the line of the garden on the lot connected with the Baptist parsonage.

These mills, and this forge fell into the hands of Luke Camp, soon after they were built, and by him were worked up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1809 or '10.

About this time, or a little before, the iron business was necessarily suspended, as the ore at Colchester failed, and they were not successful in working that which came from the other side of the lake, alone.

Soon after the death of Mr. Camp, a suit at law was commenced for the removal of the dam, which fed his mills. by Messrs. John Keeler. and Joseph Weed, of Essex, on the ground that it damaged their lands. The suit terminated adversely to the interests of Mrs. Camp, resulting in the removal of the dam, and the suspension of business which had been carried on for so long a time, at this point in the village. Mrs.Camp subsequently built a grist-mill some rods down the river, nearly back of where now stands the Baptist meeting-house. This proved an unfavorable position, and the mill was sold to Col. Danforth Wales and Henry Miles, who subsequently built our present grist-mill. There are now in town 5 saw-mills, 1 grist-mill, four shops in which machinery is carried by water, or steam; 2 blacksmith shops in active operation, and 2 stores. There are 12 school districts with school-houses, such as they are,—most of them very indifferent, disclosing little taste in location, convenience or architecture. Two or three of them are quite passable, and one of them (the one at the center) is highly creditable to the district. It is of the cottage style; having two large rooms, with ornamental trimmings and belfry. It is thought to be the best district school-house in the county, outside of Burlington.

The first church organization was effected in this town in 1801. Missionary societies of Connecticut had sent their missionaries at an early day into western Vermont. The two most frequently mentioned by the aged among us, are father Marshall (as he is familiarly called), a good man, but of some eccentricities of character, and the Rev. Jedediah Bushnell, so long and favorably known as pastor of Cornwall church. As the result of immigration, and the occasional labor of these missionaries, on the 7th of August, 1801, a Congregational church was organized, consisting of 13 members, by Rev. Mr. Bushnell, In this organization there were six males, and seven females. The Lord's Supper was administered, and they were left in the wilderness as sheep without a shepherd. They were poor, as were all the first settlers. In 1805 it was thought that $60.00 was all that could be raised for the most popular minister. In 1808, Mr. Simeon Parmelee, a young missionary from Pittsford, who spent two weeks here, preaching, and visiting from house to house, found a little church of 23 members. At the time he was conditionally engaged to settle at Malone, N. Y. But as he went on his missionary tour, he carried with him a pleasant recollection of his cordial reception at Westford, and the little, harmonious, warm-hearted Christian band he had left there in the wilderness.

Notwithstanding their poverty, and the paucity of their numbers,—without a meeting-house, or any place of meeting other than a barn, or a private dwelling,—within two months from the time of his first visit, Mr. Parmelee received a pressing invitation to come and spend 8 weeks with them as a candidate for settlement. They felt (what this People have ever felt) that they must have a preached gospel; and although "clouds and darkness were round about them," and though to human view the way seemed closed before them, there was nevertheless a mysterious confidence in their ultimate success. The letter of invitation was signed by eight individuals, each pledging himself to pay for one Sabbath day's preaching. To quote Mr. Parmelee's language, "For some unaccountable reason, that the missionary could never solve, he sent a negative answer to Malone, and on the first Sabbath of May, his labors commenced with this little flock, in a barn." The sequel sufficiently shows that he was preceded and led by the Divine Spirit—for no sooner had his labors commenced than the places of worship were crowded. Men, women, and children, came miles on foot to hear the gospel preached, and it became the power of God unto salvation. The cry was soon heard on every hand: "What must we do to be saved?" Before the 8 weeks had expired, over 40 persons, mostly heads of young and growing families, were rejoicing in Christian hope. A call was at once presented for the candidate to become the pastor. It was accepted, and Mr. Parmelee was ordained on the 31st day of August, 1818. in a barn, now standing about a mile S. W. of the village. The order of exercises was as follows; 1st, Prayer by Rev. James Parker, of Underhill. 2d, Sermon by Rev. Lemuel Haynes, of West Rutland. 3d, Consecrating Prayer by Rev. Jedediah Bushnell, of Cornwall. 4th, Charge to the Pastor by Rev. Benjamin Wooster, of Fairfield. 5th, Fellowship of the Churches by Rev. Publius V. Bogue of Georgia. 6th, Concluding Prayer by Rev. Amos Pettengill, of Champlain, N. Y. On the following Sabbath the young pastor was permitted to receive of those who had been previously examined, over 60 into his church. Shortly after, on one occasion, over 30 children received the ordinance of baptism. The revival continued so that within 6 months from the ordination the church numbered 100, and these were mostly heads of families.

Digitized by Google

But they had no proper place of worship, and to support their minister and to build a meeting-house, seemed nearly impossible. How could they do it? Very few of them had comfortable dwellings for themselves. Many of them had no barn, or barns, and houses half built. Their farms in many instances were not paid for, and were under heavy mortgages, and but partially cleared. Money was scarce, and farming products very low. To any but a people prizing the gospel, and zealous of the worship and glory of God, the idea would have seemed absurd and ruinous. But a meeting was called to consider the matter, which resulted in a determination to go forward at once, and build a house for God. The location, size, and style of the building were determined. Mr. Luke Camp, the principal business man and landholder at the center of the town, gave to the society two acres of ground at the west end of the village, for a meeting-house site; and to the town for the extension of this site, two acres and a half in addition.

Mr. Alpheus Earl took the contract for building the house. The outside was finished, and the ground floors laid, within a year. And there they worshiped summer and winter without stoves. and with no seats but temporary ones. The house was a large two story building, without steeple or belfry, sufficiently capacious to hold the whole town. It was ultimately finished in the old style of high square pews above and below. In this house Mr. Parmelee labored for most of the time during his long and prosperous ministry, of more than 29 years. There were of course seasons of trial, dark and gloomy periods, but there was more of sunlight, of pleasant progressive prosperity than usually falls upon the same term of years in any one man's ministerial life. From 1810 to 1817 was one of the periods of trial. In 1810, and 1812, there was much sickness, and many deaths occurred. In the latter year the spotted fever carried off large numbers. The war came on, and with it great excitement. and violent feeling. Good men oftentimes lost confidence in each other. The seasons were cold, and unfavorable, and the people here did not raise their bread. They were in debt for their meeting-house, in debt for their farms, and in debt for their supplies. Wheat sometimes was three dollars a bushel; tea a dollar and a half per pound, and calico from 50 to 75 cts. per yard, and many other things in proportion. Very many of the church and of the society became discouraged, disposed of their effects as best they could, and left for the West, or other parts. The pastor participated in this feeling of discouragement, and asked for a dismission. A council was called, and an arrangement made for Mr. Parmelee to preach one half of the time here, and the other half abroad.

In 1828 a serious difficulty broke out among the singers, which extended to the church and society, threatening the most unhappy consequences. But after a three years continuance, by the gracious interposition a revival of extraordinary power set all things right. While dark clouds of this character lowered occasionally over the way, let it be borne in mind however, that this church never had a council called to settle any difficulty during the long pastorate of Dr. Parmelee (and we may add, never from its organization in 1801 to the present day), that all along in its history, under the first pastor's care, revivals occurred —numbers of them of great power. One which we have named, in 1808; another partial revival in 1816; another in 1821. In 1824 one which shook the whole town; in 1831 the most extensive work of divine grace in which the town has ever shared—adding some 76 to this church, and numbers to the other churches.

In an anniversary sermon preached by Dr. Parmelee a short time before his dismission, are contained the following facts:—"There has been five general revivals of religion, which have brought into the church 270 members,—100 have been dismissed; 40 have died; 6 have been excluded, and one has been restored. The present number of resident members is 132,—48 males, and 84 females. There are about 20 absent members." The relation between the pastor and the church has always been affectionate and cordial, and we think should never have been sundered but by death. Dr. Parmelee justly felt that the people were able, and ought to pay him more salary. But there was an unhappiness, and misapprehension in relation to this matter, which resulted in a hasty call of a council, and in his dismission, Aug. 8th, 1837.

Thus was terminated a pastoral relation of almost 30 years standing—a relation not entirely devoid of self-sacrifice and trials, but on the whole eminently pleasant and successful, and which has left its impressions upon this people which, we trust, will last for a long time to come.

Before the week had transpired in which Dr. Parmelee was dismissed, a committee from the church and society appeared at the house of J. H. Woodward, then a young licentiate preaching in the adjoining town of Cambridge, with a unanimous call for him to become their minister. This was entirely unlooked for by Mr. Woodward, and all his inclinations and feelings decidedly rebelled against a compliance, and it was not till after he was made very sensible that it was God's will that he laid aside his objections, and reluctantly consented to enter upon his labors with a view to a permanent settlement over them. The church and society were anxious that no time should intervene between the termination of the retiring pastor's labors and the occupation of the desk by the candidate for settlement. This anxiety was gratified by the presence in the pulpit, on the third Sabbath in August, 1837, of the old pastor and of him who was to be his successor.

It was a Sabbath long to be remembered, a Sabbath of tears, a Sabbath on which the retiring pastor and a people so long blessed by his labors wept together, as he rehearsed the dealings of God with them—the trials and labors, the joys and sorrows and changes through which they had passed.

The young candidate for settlement found in Westford a plain, substantial, agricultural people—not wealthy, no large capitalists, and but few comparatively who were really poor and needy—a people with whom there was a great degree of equality in wealth, in style and refinement. He found a strong church and society for a small country parish. The church numbering about 130 resident members and a congregation averaging full 200. He found a little, shabby, irregular-looking village, with a school-house and two church edifices. The one of brick belonging to Baptists, Methodists and Universalists. The other, then an old house, which has before been described, belonging to his flock, with residences, mills, and shops, perhaps to the number of 20—mostly of a rude, cheap style—scattered somewhat promiscuously around the outer edges of a large, bare, open common. Here and then his labors commenced in the dawn of one of the most exciting and unhappy periods in the history of the New England churches. His ordination and installation did not take place till the 28th of January, 1838.

Digitized by Google

From 1815 to 1832 had been a season of unusual religious interest throughout the country. Revivals of great power had obtained all over the land. The churches had become numerous and strong. But now there was an absence and dearth of the Spirit. A reaction had come on. The anti-Masonic revolution had had its sweep, had soured and alienated some minds, had dismissed some ministers, and had nearly wrecked some churches. Tenarism (as it is here called) was having its brief day, and in this immediate section the fragments of some broken churches were floating in disorder around us. About the time of the pastor's settlement also the new measure storm which had been raging at the West, broke upon New England. This, as it seems to him, was a well-intended but mischievous attempt on the part of some ardent minds to atone for the absence of the Spirit—to bring men into the kingdom of Christ by human instrumentalities. It necessarily in its workings overrode the strong distinguishing doctrines of the Cross. The two would not harmonize. Wherever the system came there was more or less excitement and discord.

This parish was peculiarly situated during this stormy period. Essex, Jericho Corners, Underhill and Cambridge had fallen under the new order of things so that we were the center of this full half circle of churches, and hence were subject to very strong outward influences. There were also some good brethren within who were exceedingly anxious for the introduction of this system which stood knocking so loudly at our door. The pastor stood firmly and honestly opposed to the experiment. He had watched with deep anxiety its progress and results thus far at the west and the east. He had studied its character and believed he understood its machinery. After a full and earnest discussion of the whole matter in open church meeting, notwithstanding the high excitement, and some dangerous expedients resorted to, the pastor was sustained in his views by a large majority of the church and by his whole society.

While this subject was wrapping the parish in its perplexing folds, the anti-slavery excitement was drawing on. Societies had been organized. The press had become divided and had entered into a heated conflict. A new political organization had made its appearance. Agents and lecturers multiplied, many of whom were exceptionable in character, ultra, extravagant, wild, fierce, fanatical and denunciatory—mingling in a kind of chaos immediate, unconditional abolition on the soil, with no church, no ministry, no government and woman's rights. Our house of worship was often sought for discussion by this class of men on the Lord's day. The pastor took the ground that such discussions as were not unfrequently indulged in were incompatible with the sacredness of the Sabbath—the spirituality, peace and harmony of the congregation, and hence that the house could not be used for these purposes during the ordinary hours of religious worship. This for a while caused some excitement and disaffection, but resulted finally in no lasting alienation.

Mingling with these unhappy excitements have been the influences arising from the discovery and opening of the California mines, the construction and bearing of the numerous railroads in Vermont upon the spirit of speculation, and the material wealth of her people. Never, from the first settlement of this continent, was there a period with us of such a degree of absorption in the world and of such unparalleled worldly prosperity as has attended the last 15 years. In all these respects our history is not unlike that of the other churches of Vermont.

It is easy to anticipate the general bearings of such a state of things upon religion. We should expect no luxuriant growth of piety, no powerful and protracted revivals of religion, but rather a process of weakness and depletion.

The whole course of events for the last 25 years in New England has been adverse to a state of religious prosperity. Had it not been for the great revival period which preceded it, owing to the influences named, and the rapidly wasting processes of death and emigration, doubtless New England to a much greater extent than it now is would be a missionary field. God, in His great wisdom and goodness, had anticipated and provided for these times.

From the dismission of Dr. Parmelee, a period of 24 years, there have died, emigrated and been excommunicated from the church

Digitized by Google

136 members, 6 more than the number of resident members at the time, and 11 more than the present number of resident members —so that we have this humiliating fact, that the church is wasting away. There are now quite as many non-resident members as then, but the resident members are five less.

In 1840 the society built a very good church edifice at the cost of about $4,000. This church and society are in a state of general harmony and prosperity, and, we trust, ere long may receive a "visitation from the Day Spring on high."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Its history begins in the year 1821. Up to this time there had been no church in town, though—some 20 years before—Lorenzo Dow and others had preached here occasionally, there being here and there a Methodist family.

In 1821 B. F. Taylor, then a young convert, went to Burlington and invited brother Truman Seymour to come and preach, which he did, leaving an appointment for two weeks from that time. He came according to appointment, and formed a class of 12 members, appointing James Brown, leader. Mr. Seymour was a wheelwright by trade and a local preacher residing in Burlington. He preached, when at Westford, at the Stewart school-house, near where Samuel Rice now resides. It was under his labors, at the time above named, that the M. E. church of this town was organized.

In 1822 and '23 this church was united with several neighboring churches, and constituted what was then known as the Burlington Circuit, extending from Burlington to Canada line and from the lake to the mountain, having Rev. John B. Stratton for presiding elder, and Revs. Cyrus Prindle and Wm. Todd, preachers. The church in 1823 numbered 45 members, brother B. F. Taylor being leader.

From that time many changes have taken place by deaths and removals. It has been in circuit connection with the churches of the following towns: Burlington, St. Albans, Milton, Essex, and Underhill. In 1859 the Westford church stepped out single-handed with Bro. A. H. Seaver, a young man of great promise, for their preacher, who died—in the mysterious providence of God—during the first year of his labor, deeply lamented by all.

In 1860 this society and its friends erected a neat and convenient chapel where they now have preaching regularly every Sabbath. Among the preachers in the first circuit connection to this society were the following: Revs. Almon Dunbar, Cyrus Prindle and Wm. Todd. At a later date: Revs. Bates, Meeker, Hall, Harrower, Cook, Poor, Hitchcock, Witherspoon, &c. The present number of members is 70. The above facts have been kindly furnished by Rev. WM. HYDE, present preacher.

THE CALVINISTIC BAPTIST CHURCH

was organized Aug. 19, 1810, with a constituent membership of 13. They passed through alternations of prosperity and adversity for several years without a regular pastor or place of worship, being dependent on casual supplies, obliged to hold their meetings in dwelling and school-houses.

In 1822, in connection with the Methodist and some others who belonged to no particular denomination, they built a very substantial and, for the times, respectable brick house. In this house they worshiped alternately with the Methodists and others who claimed an interest in it, up to the year 1858. At this time the Baptist church became sole proprietors of the house by purchase, and immediately set about a thorough repair of it, so that now it presents a modern and respectable appearance.

The church from time to time has been favored with seasons of prosperity. Revivals of religion have been enjoyed in her midst, the results of which have been that large numbers, in the aggregate, have been added to her membership. While this is true, it is also true that the ordinary processes of reduction—such as deaths, removals, &c.—have been going on until the church at the present time numbers only 67 resident members. The above statement is from the Rev. CHARLES FULLER, present pastor.

The population and grand list of the town are as follows: Population, according to the last census, 1231—nearly 200 less than we had supposed; grand list, $3314,54.

So far as we know, this town has furnished but one state-prison convict who was born and educated here. The temperance reform was needed in this place, and has been as thorough and extensive here as in most towns. Intoxicating liquor was freely used in church and out of it. It was thought to be an indispensable guest at a birth or a funeral. In 1826 it was first refused public use on a funeral occasion by Appollos Partridge. This was a bold step and caused much talk. But it was followed by others no less startling, till the liquid fire was finally banished from all good society and common use to the abodes of darkness, secrecy and unlawful sale. In all the progress of this wholesome reform in the state the majority of this town has participated—reaping as a result the fruits of a more perfect peace and prosperity in all the departments of life.

Digitized by Google

While we have cause of gratitude for what has been done, the reform however needs to go further, imparting a more sleepless energy to its friends, saving here and there a poor misguided inebriate, striking the sparkling bowl from the hand of the young adventurer, and applying the law to the unprincipled and the lawless. Of the readiness of our citizens, both in the past and the present, to respond to the call of their country we have the best of evidence. There are those now resident among us who were engaged in the war of 1812, and in the later war with Mexico, while as many as 20 of our brave young men are in the late struggle for the suppression of rebellion and for the maintenance of the government.*

Among the college graduates this town has furnished are the following: Hon. Alvin Stewart, Rev. Francis Bowman, Rev. Ira Chase, Torrey E. Wales, Esq., Whipple Earle, Esq., Mr. S. R. Henry (who died soon after graduating), and Mr. Henry Chase.

While many of the first settlers and their descendants have been men, in their limited spheres, distinguished for intelligence and moral worth—few, perhaps none of them, have been sufficiently known abroad to entitle them to an extended notice on these pages. We shall, therefore, with very few exceptions, let them rest together, enshrined in the hearts of their successors, without trumpeting abroad their real, or seeking to give them a fictitious distinction. In the exceptions we make to this general purpose we wish not to have it understood that there may not be other names equally worthy of mention, but we bring these forward because they stand connected with published productions which are at hand, and because they are fair representations of our more gifted citizens.

The first we shall introduce is the

HON. ALVIN STEWART,

a name not entirely unknown to the public. A native of Westford, and a graduate of the University of Vermont, he gave himself to the profession of law and became quite distinguished as a lawyer at Cherry Valley, N. Y. From this place he removed to the city of Utica. Here his mind seemed called to the then unpopular subjects of abolition and temperance. To these reforms he devoted much of the residue of his life. He died in the city of New York, May 1, 1849. The following is taken from an obituary notice in one of the New York journals:

"Perhaps no living man in America, certainly none in the state of New York, has done more signal service for the cause of human freedom than Alvin Stewart. He was a man—an original man, copying nobody, imitating nobody, and inimitable in himself, both as to genius, mode of expression and the character of his mind and manners, with no earthly motives to gratify, while to entirely refrain from the agitation of this subject would have saved him from a world of odium and malignant misrepresentation. He obeyed the convictions of his inner man, giving to persecuted reform the support of his superior talent and personal influence."

His writings are numerous, but we must content ourselves with a solitary extract, taken from a speech delivered in Pennsylvania Hall, May, 1838, on the great issues between right and wrong. In speaking of the flight of the children of Israel from Egypt and the treatment they received at the hand of the king of Edom, he says:

"Here we have an awful demonstration of God's detestation of a nation which could dare attempt to arrest or impede the progress of fleeing fugitive slaves who sought a passage through a neutral country to a land of freedom. For that crime the malediction of the Most High has brooded over the land of Idumea. Oh, what a solemn fulfillment of that prophecy! Look at Petra, the city of the rocks in the mountain, the wonderful capital of this heaven-doomed land—this nest of one of the world's great empires girded about with everlasting mountain barriers. Behold her theaters, temples and catacombs vying with imperial Rome in the days of her Cæsars, cut from her granite mountains with rocky roofs one thousand feet in thickness, culminating above. Behold her mighty palaces, without mortar, without joints, chiseled out of primeval rock, perfect after the long lapse of centuries as when first opened! Yet this ancient abode of polished life, which felt the movings of a mighty ambition, has for twenty centuries been abandoned of God and forsaken of men, only tenanted by the obscene bird and loathsome serpent, the sole inmates of the palaces of kings and lodgers in the chambers of departed greatness. No man abides in this land, no man says this is my home. A land once red with the blood of the grape and thronged with populous life, it has become a sterile and majestic solitude, borne down by the withering curse of God for the crime of opposing the escape of fugitive Hebrew slaves from the land of the spoiler. Here stands, and will stand to the end of time, the witness, telling to each generation of the world, as they flow down the long stream of ages: 'Here was once a crime committed by man against man—by a nation in prosperity against a nation of fugitive slaves flying in distress.' The punishment was inflicted in the zenith of her glory, and she is the only country on the globe which has been depopulated from century to century, as an enduring testimonial of God's wrath.

* Written during the first year of the war.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

As the solitary traveler wanders over the ruins of Petra, he is alarmed as echo sends back her voice in answer to his footsteps, from the lonely temple, the deserted palace and silent catacombs; astonished he lifts his eye surrounded by ever during backs of rocks, and beholds the only living being, an eagle in the regions of the blue sky, revolving in his noontide gyrations over the doomed city of the mountains. The flight of the Hebrews from the house of bondage, took place at a period when Egypt was the home of science—the Gamaliel at whose feet the learned and inquiring of other nations sat. She was the head of the families of the earth, and within her borders were locked up those discoveries which have since astonished mankind. In the contest between Israel and Egypt, therefore, it was enlightened strength contending against ignorant weaknesses. There was too much power to decide the question by reason, and argument, on the side of the Egyptians, and too much feebleness on the part of the Hebrew. But we are somewhat struck at the superior refinement of the haughty slave holders of Egypt as compared with those of the United States. Pharaoh as the representative of supreme power, tolerated Moses and Aaron with rights denied by an American Congress, and by southern slave holders to wit; the rights of petition and free discussion.

For this matter was discussed no less than seven or eight times in the palace of Egypt, and Pharaoh never denied the right of petition but once, and that was when he told [illegible] not to come before him again. But that was at the time when Moses had ceased to petition, as the business was lodged in the hands of the angel of death."

JOHN WORTHINGTON WOODWARD,

was born in Westford, June 16th, 1839.—He was a bright, open-hearted, ingenuous boy, warm in his attachments and his resentments, a favorite wherever he went. He was fitted for college mainly at Johnson, and entered the freshman class in the University, Aug. 1858, at the age of 19. His college course was several times interrupted by ill health, but it was on the whole an honorable and successful one. His exuberant spirits and love of excitement led him sometimes to engage in those frolics which are apt to glide insensibly into something that merits a severer name, but so far as I know, Woodward was never chargeable with any of those actions or habits which degrade and taint the whole moral character, such as lying, deceit, or meanness in any of its forms. He entered with great ardor and enthusiasm into college friendships, and he has left behind him among his college associates those who mourn for him as tenderly as for an own brother. His talents were considered by his instructors to be of a very high order, and such as promised to make him conspicuous and influential in society. He had a special relish for the higher departments of literature—for poetry, oratory, and romance, and his reading in these departments was extensive and careful. He was passionately fond of music. Indeed his soul seemed spontaneously to attract itself to and to delight in that which, by any form of expression, in literature, in harmony, or in life, is adapted to awaken noble and lofty feeling. "One of the finest traits in John's character," says his most intimate college friend in a letter to me, "was the profound love and veneration which he felt for his father. He was impulsive, often thoughtless, always gay and fun-loving, and would sometimes engage with hearty zest in enterprises not approved by the laws of the University. But when his father questioned him, there was no shifting, no deceit—his answer was always frank, straight forward and truthful. He often told me that he never could and never would deceive his parents—and I do not think he ever did."

Young Woodward received the honors of the University in Aug. 1862, and almost immediately made his preparations for entering the military service of the United States. It was with great difficulty and only by a continual struggle that he was kept from joining the army before the completion of his college course. He felt it a reproach, as he said, that his father and only brother were in the field, and he left at home with the women. Every one who knew him, foresaw what his career as a soldier would be. Brave almost to recklessness, never so much at home as in perilous enterprise, and yet clear-headed while in the midst of the greatest excitement, every body said he was admirably adapted for a cavalry officer. He received his commission as Captain on the 19th of Nov. 1862, and left for the seat of war with the company he had recruited and drilled in the January following. His conduct in the field more than justified the anticipation of his friends. Along with his unquestioned bravery he soon showed capacity for command, and that combination of daring and judgment which is so valuable in a leader of cavalry. He was at different times entrusted with the command of detachments sent out on those important and desperate enterprises required of this arm of the service, and his success was such as to attract the notice and win the complimentary mention of his superior officers. On the third day after the late battle at Gettysburg, the Vermont Cavalry with other regiments under Gen. Kilpatrick were attempting to harass the enemy, then on the retreat between Hagerstown and Williamsport. While holding a position on the Williamsport road, supported by portions of the 5th New York and Elder's battery, they found themselves outnumbered and outflanked. It was while bravely attempting to rally his company to face this overwhelming attack that Capt. Woodward was shot simultaneously through the brain and the heart. The whole force was obliged to fall back and leave their dead in the hands of the enemy. It was not till nine days afterward, when our troops re-occupied Hagerstown, that Mr. Woodward was able to recover the body of his son, which in the mean time had been rifled and buried, and was with difficulty identified. It afterwards received Christian burial in the Presbyterian graveyard of Hagerstown—and let all of us who knew Capt. Woodward, remember to the everlasting honor of the clergyman and inhabitants of Hagerstown, that they showed the kindest sympathy for his father in his great affliction, they attended the burial of the remains, and strewed flowers over the grave. And thus ended the earthly career of one who so lately went from among you in all the bloom and promise of early manhood. You will not see his face again; that clear, ringing voice, which so often sounded forth the praises of God in this house, and which so often cheered his comrades on to daring and victory on the bloody field, you and they will hear no more.

FUNERAL OF CAPTAIN WOODWARD.

The services in memory of Capt. John W. Woodward, Co. M, 1st Vt. Cavalry, took place in Westford yesterday. The church was filled to overflowing with mourners and sympathizing friends from a number of towns. Prayer was offered by Rev. C. C. Torrey, of Westford, followed by a

HYMN

Written for the occasion by Rev. O. G. Wheeler, of Grand Isle.

O God, to Thee we early gave
Our child, to take away or save:
Since Thou hast claimed him, why should we Withhold Thine own? We yield to Thee.

Around our darling's budding brow
Hope twined her sweetest sun-lit glow,
His future seemed a path of light:
We deemed, for him, no joy too bright.

By learning trained, we hoped to see
Him give his life, O Lord, to Thee,
With sword of truth, and helm of right,
For Christ and for his cross to fight.

But other work to him was given
Than winning souls to Christ and Heaven:
God bade him heed his country's call,—
He heard, and gave to her his all.

"Charge, soldiers, charge the trait'rous foe,
God bids you strike the avenging blow!"
His work is done, and angels bear
Him to the loved that wait him there!

The funeral discourse, by Prof. M. H. Buckham, of the University of Vermont, followed. From the text, Matthew x. 30: "But the very hairs of your head are all numbered," the speaker drew the lesson that God's providence extends to the separate events of human life, and His kind and loving care to the separate individuals of the race, and that what He thus orders for His children is always best. These truths he enforced in a simple, thoughtful, practical and exceedingly impressive discourse. Embodied in it was a truthful and touching biographical sketch of Capt. Woodward, from which we were permitted to make the above extract. It is a bright and honorable record.

The services closed with the singing by the choir of the following Lines:

Away from his kindred and scenes of his youth
He sped at the summons of freedom and truth,
He rushed to the conflict, nor counted the cost;
He has fallen, how soon! but he died at his post.

Even strangers wept freely that thus in life's bloom,
One so gifted, so noble, went down to the tomb;
He charged with the foremost in front of the host,
But he fell for his country—he died at his post.

He faltered not, swerved not, unmindful of fear,
Though foemen surrounded he rode with a cheer,
And breathed the last message, while yielding the ghost
"Tell my kindred and dear ones, I died at my post."

He covets no monument chiselled in stone,
To tell of the laurels his valor has won,
But asks to be cherished by those he loved most,
As a friend of his country who died at his post.

Our young hero's deeds we will never forget—
His virtues are fresh in our memories yet,
His name is embalmed withthe patriot host,
With the Martyrs of freedom he died at his post.

All the services, music, prayers and sermon were appropriate, impressive and in keeping with the subdued and solemn spirit of the occasion, stirring the large audience at times with strong emotion, and conveying a wholesome lesson to all whose privilege it was to be present.*

*The writer of this history is indebted to Dr. Parmelee and to Miss Amire Bryant for some important facts used in this communication.

Digitized by Google

[The following illustrative anecdote, too good to lose, we clip from Mr. Milliken's Vermont Record.—Ed.]

Rev. Simeon Parmelee, well known in Northern Vermont, and for many years a settled minister in the town of Westford, used to relate the following respecting one of his parishioners, who never was known to engage in any religious conversation, so strongly was he attached to things earthly. Mr. Parmelee called one day to have a talk with him. He wished to have the minister walk over his well cultivated farm, which request was complied with. After looking at his stock and crops, he waited for an opportunity to change the subject to things of a religious nature. At last the minister thought the time had arrived, when he said, "All these things are good enough in their place, but thou lackest one thing." "Yes, yes," said the farmer, "a good cart, and I'll have it too." The minister gave it up.

VERMONT.

"THE STAR THAT NEVER SETS."

BY MRS. S. B. HERRICK.

Formerly of Westford, now a resident of Rockford, Il.

Thou wearest still thy radiance, beauteous star,
Though others in thy galaxy are dim,
With pride and joy we watch thy beams from far,
And list the chorus of the grave old Hymn
That, gently lulled amid thy rocks and hills,
Had almost slumbered,—yet whose waking thrills
Thy every heart string—kindling fresh the fires
Upon the sacred shrine of Liberty,
That burned within our noble patriot sires
And led them forth to death or victory.—
We knew thy heart as true, thine arm as brave
As when in weakness thou thy part didst bear
To force the British Lion to his lair.
We knew thy heart as true, as when, to save
From his stern grasp our cherished virgin soil
Thou sharedst danger, suffering and toil,
Till the proud Eagle reared his eyrie high
And o'er his fair domains, with dauntless eye
Kept his keen vigils,—yes, we knew thee true,
Strong with a will to dare, and arm to do;
And yet we watched from far with eager eye,
For lesser stars to many a vision fade,
When greater with each other seem to vie,
Mingling their kindred beams to pierce the shades
That gather swiftly on the evening sky.
But when we saw thy noblest sons arrayed
For the stern conflict with a traitor foe,
With bosoms bared to meet a deadly blow,
Or plant our glorious flag where darkly now
Vile treason rears its venomed, hydra head,
We bowed in reverence, and the golden chain
That distance had dissevered, clasped again;
Thy hills and vales, and streams, and mountains wore
A radiance they had never known before,
E'en when we squandered childhood's rosy hours
Amid thy forest shades, and wildwood flowers.

Oh, many a cherished home,
Nestled away among thy quiet hills,
Amid the music of the murmuring rills,
And flocks that idly roam,
Waits for a footfall on the dewy lawn,
With evening's shadow,—and at early dawn
Listens in vain to hear
One echo of that voice, so soft and clear.

And many a mother now,
Who on her infant's brow,
Saw the pure seal, placed by a holy hand,
Has said "Thy will be done"
And laid her cherished one
Upon the altar of her native land.

And many a maiden keeps
Her vigils lone, and weeps
For the brave heart that echoes to her own.
Hushed is the childish glee,
Around the mother's knee,
As her sweet voice pleads for the loved one gone

Pray on, ye noble ones!
So shall your sires and sons,
Unsullied bear your beauteous ensign high.
Thus toiling for the right,
Strong in Jehovah's might,
'T were sweet to live—'t were noble thus to die.

OUR NATIONAL FLAG.

BY W. GIBBS.

[The following song, written by W. Gibbs, Esq., has been recently set to music by Professor P. J. Whipple, of Iowa City (himself a native of Westford), and published by a musical firm in Chicago.]

Forget not the flag of our nation,
Vermonters wherever you roam,
Though ever so humble your station,
Stand by the old flag of our home.

CHORUS.

Our National Flag! Republican Flag!
The "Star-Spangled Banner" defend,
For proudly it waves, over patriot graves,
And there it shall wave to the end.

Those colors emblazoned in story
Were pencilled in Liberty's stain,
Deep traces of crimson to glory
By many a warrior slain.
Chorus,—Our National Flag, &c.

So soon shall the shades of oppression
That battle-field banner deface,
So soon shall their names by secession
Be severed in shame and disgrace.
Chorus.

Preserve it, and be its defender
From danger, at home and abroad,—
Resolved it shall never surrender,
In the name of our country and God.
Chorus.

While Union exists in our mountains,
And Liberty worships each crag,
While freedom flows forth from our fountains,
We'll stand for the National Flag.
Chorus.

Though Presidents, frightened, neglect it,
It cannot be trailed in the dust,
The yeomanry now will protect it.
The people are true to their trust
Chorus.

WILLISTON.

BY HARRY MILLER.

Williston, a town situated in the center of Chittenden County, was chartered by Gov. Wentworth, June 7th, 1763, and according to the original charter, was bounded north by Winooski river, which separates it from Essex and Jericho, east by Bolton, south by Huntington and Hinesburgh, west by Burlington, which line at that time was about one mile west of the village of Williston. It was called Williston in honor of Samuel

Digitized by Google

Willis one of the grantees. The settlement of this town was commenced in May, 1774, by Thomas Chittenden and Gen. Jonathan Spafford, who came on together, and located on the river, taking up large tracts of excellent land adjoining each other. In the spring of 1776 they were joined by Elihu Allen, Abijah Pratt, and John Chamberlin. These families had but just arrived when the enemy advanced from Canada and the settlement was abandoned. Chamberlin was attacked in his house by the Indians, and a hired man and child killed. The settlers returned after the war, and in 1786 the town was organized. Robert Donnelly was the first town clerk, Joel Brownson, constable; Jonathan Spafford, Dea. David Talcott, Asa Brownson, selectmen. Jonathan Spafford was the first representative to the Legislature. In 1794 the town was divided and the town lines altered by giving 10,000 or 12,000 acres off the east part of the town to help form the town of Richmond, and receiving the same amount from the east part of Burlington, making Muddy Brook the present west line between Burlington and Williston. Richmond has since been organized, and forms the present east boundary of the town. St. George and Hinesburgh now lie on the south, Essex and Jericho on the north. This town will take rank with the best in the state for beauty of scenery and excellence of climate and agricultural productions.

Williston was settled mostly by men from Connecticut and Western Massachusetts. Among them were the Murrays, the Talcotts, the Spaffords, the Millers, Brownells, Frenches, Isbams. They were usually men of large families, of respectability and enterprise, and accustomed to the hardships and difficulties of a frontier life in a new country. The present inhabitants are to a great extent composed of the descendants of these men.

Hon. LEMUEL BOTTOM was among the most substantial and enterprising of these early settlers. Coming into the town in 1786 he at once became a leader and for many years enjoyed the entire confidence of the community, and held many of the most important county and town offices. He died in 1815.

Col. ISAAC MCNIEL was another early and prominent inhabitant. He came to this town from Litchfield, Conn., and was the first lawyer that settled in Williston. He was a man of education and ability, and held many offices of trust in the town and county. He died in 1807.

JONATHAN SPAFFORD (who has already been named as one of the earliest settlers) was a man of great energy and enterprise, well qualified to lead the life of a pioneer and to assist in laying the foundation of a prosperous settlement. He lived in Williston many years, enjoying the highest respect of all the inhabitants, and finally died, at an advanced age, in the province of Upper Canada.

SOLOMON MILLER was also one of the earliest settlers. He was born in West Springfield, Mass., in 1761. He entered the Revolutionary army and was at the battle of Bennington, and at the taking of Burgoyne. After the war he removed from Massachusetts to Vermont, and first settled at Wallingford, in the county of Rutland, where, in connection with Judge Nathaniel Chipman, he was engaged for a time in the iron business. In 1786 he removed to Williston and located on land which forms the center of the present village. He was soon elected town clerk, which office he filled for many years. For 20 years he was clerk of the Supreme and County Court for the County of Chittenden, and was Judge of Probate about the same length of time. For several years also he was a member of the old Council of the State. He died in 1847, in the 87th year of his age.—WILLISTON, 1863.

WILLISTON—CONTINUED.

BY RUSSELL S. TAFT, ESQ., OF BURLINGTON.*

In the early history of the country, Williston was one of the most important places in this section of the state; it was the residence of Thomas Chittenden who for some 18 years was the governor of the state; and being more rapidly settled than some of the adjoining towns, was, for a long time, the center of a large business, and numbered among its citizens a large number of the leading and prominent men in the county. At the census in 1791, there were 471 inhabitants in town, Charlotte being the only town in the county more populous, which was probably caused by the nearer location of Charlotte to the southern settlements, in this state and Connecticut, where most of our early settlers emigrated from; it was the 66th town in the state at that time. In 1800 it was the third town in the county, containing 836 population—in 1810 it increased to 1185, and in 1860 it was 1479.

*A native of Williston.

Digitized by Google

Williston was represented in the convention at Westminster—which declared Vermont a free and independent jurisdiction or state—by Col. Thomas Chittenden.

Some noted instances of longevity have existed in this town. Thompson's History gives the following: Susannah Hart died 1830, aged 104; Susannah Wells died about 1811, aged 104; Mrs. Rachel Man, aged 96; Mr. Zacariah Hart, below referred to, aged 103; Capt. John Munson died in Williston, about 1864, aged 94.

Williston is one of the best agricultural towns in the state, containing no mountains within its borders, it is beautifully diversified with "hill, plain, and valley," with large tracts of level, and comparatively no waste land. A great variety of soil exists, from the lightest sand to the stiffest clay: no grain, which can be gr own in this northern region, but finds its congenial home here; the pastures upon the hills are not excelled in their verdancy and freshness; and the intervals along the banks of the Winooski, and the upland meadows, are unrivaled.

The forest trees most common in this town are the maple, beech, birch, pine, and hemlock; while almost all those mentioned in the list of trees given by Prof. Thompson in his history of Vermont, are found scattered through the town. Much valuable timber has been cut, especially the pine, on the sandy tracts in the north-western corner of the town.

EARLY SETTLERS—JONATHAN HART

was one of the early settlers in the westerly part of the present town, then the east part of Burlington; he purchased the right which belonged under the charter to Thomas Van Wyck, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, on the 29th day of September, 1789.

ZACARIAH HART,

brother of Jonathan, purchased of him a part of the same land, on the first day of March, 1790; and lived in town until the time of his death, which happened on the 26th day of March, 1852, at the very advanced age of 103 years. He resided in the north-west corner of the town, near Hubbell's Falls.

PHILIP WALKER,

one of the earlier inhabitants, settled in the south-west part of the town, purchasing of Ira Allen lots Nos. 69 and 71, in the fall of 1790, and resided in town until the time of his death, which occurred about the year 1840. He came into this state originally from Hoosac, and lived in Ferrisburg before he moved to Williston. During the winters, in his earlier life, he passed much of his time in hunting in this state and in the Canadas.

JOHN DOWNER

was another of the "oldest inhabitants," settling upon the hill south of the "French place," and lived until quite an old man, dying about the year 1851. He made a purchase of land of Ira Allen, in 1792.

ISAAC FRENCH

came into town quite early and purchased 500 acres of the best land in town, of Ira Allen.

JEREMIAH FRENCH,

a brother of Isaac, came originally from Connecticut to Manchester, in this state, and afterwards to Williston. He lived in the westerly part of the town; was one of the most esteemed men in the community where he lived, and was honored by his fellow citizens with many offices of trust. An honest, upright, and intelligent man, he died leaving a large landed property of great value.

WILLIAM HENRY FRENCH, son of Jeremiah French, was born on the 4th of May, 1813, in Williston, and resided there—with the exception of a few years while he held the office of judge of probate—until his death, living at the time of his decease upon his farm which descended to him from his father, and upon which he was born.

During his whole life he was an influential and prominent citizen. He was called upon by his fellow-citizens to fill almost all the various offices of importance and trust in his native town. He represented Williston in the legislature in the year 1838. He was instrumental in the formation of the third or liberty party, and was its candidate for member of the 28th Congress, running against Hon. Geo. P. Marsh. In 1844 and 1845 there were no elections made in Williston for town representative. In 1846 the liberty party, having become quite respectable in numbers, nominated and elected Mr. French —he being at that time one of the twelve members of the legislature belonging to that party, and the only one from Chittenden county. He was reëlected a member in 1847, and in the following year he was elected by the legislature judge of probate for the district of Chittenden. In the year 1852 he was elected by the people judge of probate, and received at their hands eight successive reëlections. In the capacity of judge he became widely known to the people of his county, and wherever his acquaintance extended he was extremely popular; the fact that in all elections where he was a candidate he ran ahead of his associates on the ticket, is sufficient evidence of his popularity. He was a genial, whole-souled man; generous even to a fault; taking a deep interest in public affairs, and ever alive to the sufferings and wants of the poor and needy; to no one could the poor better apply for relief in their hour of distress than to him, and many a fugitive and wanderer—seeking an escape to Canada, from the "land of the free," by means of the underground railroad—has found food and shelter and a conveyance to speed him on his way at the Judge's house. He was a member of the Masonic order and a prominent Knight Templar, having held the office of Grand Captain General in the Commandery of the state. He was a severe sufferer, during the latter part of his life, from asthma and rheumatism. He died the 29th of May, 1866, aged 53 years and 25 days.

Digitized by Google

UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY.

The First Universalist Society in Williston was organized at a meeting held on the 18th day of February, A. D. 1844, at the town-hall, having for its objects, as stated in its constitution, "The purpose of sustaining the preaching of the Gospel, and promoting the cause of truth, righteousness, humanity, liberty and charity;" objects indeed worthy the efforts of any organization.

The number of members at first was 51, and from the time of its organization the society has maintained a vigorous existence, subject to the changes peculiar to such bodies. It has always been, and is now, composed of a large share of the liberal-minded and substantial people of the town. The society worshiped at first in the town hall, but in 1859 they built a very neat and commodious brick house of worship near the center of the village, on the south side of the main street, next east of the Methodist chapel, which was dedicated in 1860.

Rev. Eli Ballou was the first pastor, and since the termination of his connection with the society it has enjoyed the labors of the following clergymen: Revs. John Gregory, Alson Scott, Hiram P. Cutting, Hervey Elkins, Joseph Sargent and John J. Lewis.

Joseph Sargent, while engaged as pastor, was appointed Chaplain of the 13th Regiment Vermont Volunteer Militia, and died while in service. The following notice of him is taken from the Universalist Register:

"Rev. JOSEPH SARGENT, Chaplain 13th Regt. V. V. M., died of typhoid fever, at Camp Carusi, near Occoquan, Va., April 20, 1863, aged 46 years.

He was born in Warner, N. H. Nothing is known by us of his early life. He prepared for the ministry with Rev. S. A. Davis, and preached first in Sullivan or Cheshire County, in his native state. His first settlement in Vermont, his adopted state, was at Barnard, where he preached two or three years. Thence he moved to Barre, where he was constantly employed eight years. By his untiring efforts, the society was enabled to build the substantial church edifice in which it now worships, the erection of which in a favorable locality probably saved the society from decay. While in Barre, Mr. Sargent took a leading part in many of the social enterprises of the place, laboring for the cause of education, being chiefly instrumental in forming a town Library Association, and twice representing the place in the lower branch of the state legislature. He was next engaged as state Missionary, one year, in which capacity he was very successful. He then removed to Plainfield, and took charge of the Universalist Society in that town two years. Desiring better opportunities to educate his children, he moved to Williston, where, after two years service as pastor of the Universalist societies in Williston and Essex, he was chosen, in the autumn of 1862, Chaplain of the 13th Regt., V. V. M. Having a kind, sympathetic heart, and great facility in ministering to the sick, with an inexhaustible fund of mirth, he was very useful to the soldiers, who loved him with passionate fondness. He left a wife and four children,—one of whom, the oldest, a young lady of great worth, has since joined him in the better life. Devoted friends, wherever he was known, cherish his memory with deep affection."

Rev. John J. Lewis, the present pastor, is a man of great worth and promise, a graduate of Tufts College, Mass., and under his pastorate the society is enjoying a prosperous life.

Congregational Church in Williston.

BY REV. J. W. HOUGH, PASTOR.

The town which gave to Vermont her first Governor early made provision for its own religious culture. In 1788 measures were taken to "hire a minister;" in 1789 meetings were "holden in the house of Nathan Allen, the one-half, and in the house of Mr. Walston or in Mr. Anger's barn, the other half;" and, in 1790, it was "voted to build a meeting-house to accommodate the whole town." The division of the religious society, consequent upon the change of the town boundaries, delayed the execution of this purpose for some years; and though it was voted, in 1793, "to draw logs to the mill this winter for boards for a meeting-house," and in 1795 the site was chosen "on a knoll southerly of Dr. Winslow's barn," the building was not commenced till 1796. It was 50 by 57 feet, and built in the style of "ye olden time," with galleries upon three sides, square pews, and a lofty pulpit standing upon a single shaft.

The preaching of the gospel had been enjoyed as yet only during brief periods. In 1791 we find the curt record, "Voted to discontinue Mr. Abiel Jones as minister in this place." Mr. Bradley was "hired on probation" in 1792. Mr. Hutchinson "preached two Sabbaths" in the winter of 1794.

The church was organized Jan. 23d, 1800, with 16 members. Rev. Aaron C. Collins was installed as its first pastor January 29th, of the same year. His settlement was effected upon the following somewhat singular conditions: "We are unanimously of opinion that Rev. Mr. Collins ought to receive $300 annually, as a salary, for 16 years and a half; and after the expiration of said 16 years and a half $333,33 annually so long as he shall continue our minister; but if the said Mr. Collins shall be dismissed, otherwise than by death, at any time before the expiration of the said 16 years and a half, he is to pay, or cause to be paid, to the society, in neat cattle or grain, within one year from his dismission, ten pounds for each year in which he has not served said society the term of 16 years and a half. And the said Mr. Collins is to receive his salary in the following manner, to wit: $50 in cash, $100 in wheat and the remainder in beef, pork, or grain, to be paid in the month of December, annually."

Mr. Collins was dismissed "otherwise than by death" May 4, 1804. In 1813 the church was reorganized, as the only means of eliminating certain heresies which had crept in. Rev. James Johnson became its pastor in 1818, followed by Rev. Josiah Goodhue* in 1824; Rev. Mr. Hurlbut, in 1834; Rev. Simeon Parmelee, in 1838; Rev. Luther G. Bingham, in 1843; Rev. A. D. Barber, in 1852.

The present edifice, erected in 1832, was rebuilt in 1860, and the present pastor installed August 15th, of the same year. The whole number of members since the reorganization, in 1813 has been 447; the present number is 84.

Williston, 1863.

Williston Academy.

BY J. S. CILLEY, A. M.

In the fall of 1828, Rev. Peter Chase, at that time pastor of the Baptist Church in Williston, purchased a site upon which he soon after erected a building to be used for a High School, or Academy. Upon the completion of the building, Mr. Chase opened a school for the young of both sexes, which was conducted by him for some length of time, with a very good degree of success. The school though not large was yet sustained with considerable interest by the people of the town and vicinity. Mr. Chase was succeeded both as teacher and pastor by Rev. William Arthur, a very acceptable and efficient teacher. Rev. Josiah Goodhue, then pastor of the Congregational Church, a good teacher and a very excellent man, succeeded Mr. Arthur. Homer Benson, then preparing for the ministry, was the successor of Mr. Goodhue, and he, in turn, gave place to Augustus Gould, afterwards a lawyer, Leonard Whitney a native of Williston, and since then a minister of the gospel, succeeded Mr. Gould; Mr. Bates, now a minister in New Hampshire, succeeded Mr. Whitney, and was the last teacher in the building erected by Mr. Chase.

The building was purchased by the Baptist Church, and used for a meeting-house.

This school, under the direction of the several teachers named, was attended with a good degree of efficiency and success. Its loss, and the need of greater facilities for the education of their children than the schools of the town then afforded, were felt by the people, and they soon began to devise a plan for building a new Academy. In 1841, contributions being made for this purpose, a substantial building of brick was erected near the site of the old Academy. The house completed, Mr. Emerson Hamilton was engaged as principal, and under his instruction the school was eminently prosperous. Mr, Hamilton made teaching his profession, and after faithful and efficient service in this school, he took charge of a public school in Oswego, New York, where he still remains.

*The historian of the town of Shoreham, who died at Whitewater, Wis., in the spring of 1863.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

E. R. Lyman, now a minister, was the successor of Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Lyman was a very successful teacher, and under his direction the school was still prosperous.

Upon the retirement of Mr. Lyman, Patrick H. Sanford, at present a successful lawyer in Illinois, became the principal. For two or three years Mr. Sanford conducted the school with very great success. Under his charge the school was larger perhaps than ever before, the number of students being at times as high as 120.

After Mr. Sanford, the school was taught by Messrs. Bow, Corbin, Lamb, Perry, Rev. H. P. Cutting, and others. Most, if not all of these teachers were competent and faithful, but each being connected with the school for short periods of time only, it did not prosper constantly as before.

Desiring greater permanency in the school, and laboring to secure it, the people nobly and generously contributed for the improvement of the school building, and during the summer of 1858 they expended in enlarging, repairing, and furnishing it, the sum of $1500. The Academy is now large, pleasant, and very convenient. September 1st, 1858, the school was again opened under the direction of J. S. Cilley, as principal, in whose charge it still remains. Since that time it has been very well and steadily sustained, the number of students per term being on an average about 100.

Williston Academy has always afforded ample facilities for the acquisition of a sound, thorough, academic education, and many have gone forth from it to hold honorable positions in business, and to take high standing in College.

This Academy has no fund, and depends entirely for its support upon the tuition paid by the pupil.

Its life in the past has been sustained by the energy and labor of teachers, and the generosity of patrons, and so only will it live in the future.

Thomas Chittenden,

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

Written for the Vermont Historical Magazine, at the special request of the Editor, in 1862 or '63, and read before the Lyceum at Winooski Falls, Dec. 14, 1866.

BY HON. DAVID READ.

It is always interesting to look into the early history of a people, and note their progress as they strive to establish social order and civil authority among themselves. The multiform plans and numerous incidents that attend the movements of independent thinkers and co-workers, while giving life and power to new states and new forms of government, furnish a rich theme for study and speculation. The transition from a disorganized and irresponsible state to a fixed condition of civil polity and law, is always attended with discordant men and measures. And during such a transition new theories and new characters, adapted to the occasion, seem to spring into existence from unknown and unsuspected sources. The peculiar condition of the early settlers of Vermont; the wrongs they suffered in connection with the disputed title and enjoyment of their lands; their persistent defence of their possessions; their recognition of no sovereign power or authority over them; their limited numbers and disordered state, without any laws or rules of action, all contributed, at an early day, in our little commonwealth, to make heroes and statesmen of ordinary men, and to initiate the growth and development of the most perfect system of republican liberty and equality in this wide world. Strife and agitation, heroic daring, sober and sharp diplomacy, far-sighted plans, war and bloodshed, contentions and summary measures, all came in to illustrate the diversity of character possessed by these brave and patriotic founders of our state. The names and memories of those men are held, I trust, in sacred regard by us; honest, humble and rude statesmen as they were, our state independence and government was the work of their hands—a work having for its end the most perfect liberty, equality and justice. Among those men none stood higher in the love and confidence of his cotemporaries than Thomas Chittenden. He was selected as the first Governor of the state, which office he held for twenty successive years, save one; and, in truth, was the fixed star that guided us on our way from helpless anarchy to order and independence. A notice of his life and services is the purpose of this article.

THOMAS CHITTENDEN was born at East Guilford, Conn., Jan. 6, 1730. His father was a snug farmer, and Thomas found, when a boy, but little leisure time for study or amusement. He was educated to habits of industry and economy, and had but little to do with the artificial forms of society. A common school education completed his early advantages; and, indeed, the little time he had to spare from labor was not devoted to books and study so much as to his favorite athletic sports, which he highly enjoyed with his juvenile associates. And it is not doubted but those tests of nerve and strength had their utility in fitting him for the bold pioneer life and public duties of a later day. At the age of eighteen, when boys are apt to make new discoveries and enter upon wild and fascinating schemes, he began to feel that his yearly round of toil and labor on the farm was getting irksome, and should be changed to some employment more agreeable to his taste and of higher promise in its results. Thereupon, he determined to try his luck at sea, where he could have a fair opportunity to experiment with fortune, test the novelty, and, in his imagination, enjoy the charms and bounties of a sailor's life.

He found a merchant vessel about to sail from New London to the West Indies, on which he enlisted as a common sailor. At that time France and Great Britain were at war; but Thomas, having then given but little attention to international affairs, was moved more by the new and bright prospects before him than by any apprehension of danger from a public enemy. They sailed along the stormy coast of the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida, and passed the Bahama Channel; but, before they reached their port of destination, a French man-of-war picked them up, appropriated as much of the cargo as they wanted, and destroyed the vessel. In the mean time, to dispossess themselves of the trouble of taking care of the crew, they landed them upon one of the West India Islands, and left them there to shift for themselves—pennyless and destitute of every thing but the clothes on their backs.

Thus it turned out that the young adventurer's first essay, in his fancied career of happier days and times, was brought to a sudden and disastrous termination. He found himself in a strange land with no living soul to give him aid or comfort but his equally helpless comrades. Under this state of affairs, he soon began to undergo a sort of mental discipline that turned his thoughts with suspicion upon his golden plans, and caused him to put less confidence in this world's promises. He endured many privations and sufferings while upon the island, and at length found an opportunity to work his passage home, fully satisfied with a seafaring life, and content to resume his labors on the farm.

In October, 1749, then less than twenty, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Meigs—a person of congenial education and habits, of a robust constitution and strong mind, and a heart ever overflowing with kindness and good humor. Through her whole life, even while her husband held the most dignified and responsible office in the state, she paid but little regard to the distinctions of wealth or caste, and treated all that were well disposed, as entitled to the same rights and attentions. Indeed, she was a fitting mother for democratic Vermont.*

They settled in Salisbury, a new town in northwestern Connecticut, where they resided twenty-four years, and Thomas Chittenden, from his practical sound sense and sterling qualities, soon became a leading man in the town; he was more or less engaged in town business, represented the town six years in the Connecticut legislature, was colonel of militia, and held divers minor offices. He steadily pursued his farming business for an employment, was prosperous, and accumulated a handsome property. While he

* In illustration of her character, it may be noted, that a party of gentlemen and ladies one day made a formal call at the Governor's, at Arlington. Dinner was announced to the company and at the same time, by the tin horn, to the workmen in the field; and, as they approached the table together, it was modestly asked, by one of the lady guests, whether the servants usually came to the same table with the family. Mrs. Chittenden at once saw the bearing of the inquiry and replied, "They do; but I have been telling the Governor, as they did the work, we ought to give them the first table and take the second ourselves."

Digitized by Google

resided in Salisbury the process of granting new townships in western Vermont, by the Governor of New Hampshire, had been in progress. In the mean time the long protracted wars between France and Great Britain, contending for the dominion of this continent, had been brought to a final issue, resulting in the cession of the Canadas to the British crown; the restoration of the bordering country, covering Vermont, to a state of peace and safety; and the removal of all present danger from the occupation and raids of a babarous enemy.

This opened the territory of Vermont for settlement, and, invited by the fertility of her soil and the prospective value of her lands, a rush of emigration from the old New England States followed; and the valley of lake Champlain—which for more than a century had formed the middle space and field of contention between two powerful nations—was now released from its blockade, and flung open to the free ingress of enterprise and civilization. Col. Chittenden fully appreciated these advantages; and, joining with one of his neighbors in Salisbury, Col. Jon. Spafford, they purchased a tract of land on Onion river (containing several thousand acres) in the township of Williston, and in May, 1774, after dividing their lands, they removed their families on to them.

Col. Chittenden had made no preparation for the shelter of his family; and as a temporary protection, until the log-house could be built, flung up a shanty covered with bark and spread with hemlock boughs. But they plied themselves faithfully to the building of the log-house, and in a few days were securely tenanted in one of those delectable abodes of comfort and freedom—having a family of ten children beside their workmen.

They had four sons and six daughters. The sons were Noah, Martin, Giles, and Truman. Noah was a farmer and lived in Jericho, on the intervals opposite the residence of his father. He was first sheriff of the county of Chittenden, which place he held for several years; judge of the county court; judge of probate; town representative, and councillor.

Martin graduated at Yale College, made farming his profession, and settled in Jericho near his brother Noah, as indicated by the two large brick dwellings still standing. He was several years town representative, clerk of the court, judge of the county court, member of the corporation of the University of Vermont, ten years member of Congress, and two years Governor of the state.

Giles was a farmer, and took up his residence upon the interval on the Williston side of the river, below his father's. He was town representative and colonel of militia; but thought less of office than he did of doing a favor to a friend or neighbor and indulging himself in acts of generosity and kindness.

Truman, the youngest of the sons was also a farmer, and settled on the farm west of and adjoining his father's. He was justice of the peace thirty years, judge of probate eleven years, judge of the County Court seven years, state councillor for twelve years, and twenty-six years a member of the corporation of the University of Vermont. He represented the town four years, and was ever employed in some public duties.

His principles always aimed at truth and justice, and his example was a public blessing. He possessed a sound judgment and quick, penetrating mind, and sometimes indulged in wit and sarcasm.*

The eldest daughter, Mabel, married Thomas Barney of Williston, a highly respectable citizen and farmer.

The second daughter, Betsey, married James Hill of Charlotte, also a farmer of wealth and respectability.

The third, Hannah, married Col. Isaac Clark of Castleton, a man who was fond of military life, and distinguished on many occasions, especially during the war of 1812, for his heroism and bravery; for his astonishing skill in the use of the rifle, he went by the popular name of "Old Rifle." He was a man of uncommon perseverance and energy, and his name is identified with the history of this state, and the last war with England.

The fourth, Beulah, married Elijah Galusha of Arlington, who died in about two years—she afterwards married Matthew

* One time, when Martin was spending vacation at home, the other boys, feeling that they did rather more than their share of the work, got him out in the morning to help do the chores. They were trying to learn a young calf to drink. Martin got perplexed, at the operation, and broke out, "What shall we do with the paltry fool?" "I can't tell," says Truman, "unless we send him to College." "Send him to College!" says Martin, "I should want a smarter calf than that." "Just the one, rejoins Truman, "he should be sent and made to know as much as others."

Digitized by Google

Lyon, the young Irish adventurer, who forsook home, and became indentured to pay his passage to America. He was Secretary to the Governor and Council, and 15 years a member of the state legislature; judge of Rutland County Court, and in 1796 elected a member of Congress, and re-elected in Feb. 1799—he removed to Kentucky in 1801, and was one year a representative in the Kentucky legislature, and six years a representative to Congress from that state. He was appointed Indian agent by the U. S. Government in Arkansas, and was elected the first delegate to Congress from that territory; but before taking his seat, died on the Arkansas river, near little Rock.*

The fifth daughter, Mary, married Jonas Galusha of Shaftsbury. He represented the town seven years; Sheriff of Bennington county one year; twelve years state councilor; judge of Bennington County Court, judge of the Supreme Court, and nine years governor of this state. He held the office of governor from 1809 to 1819 inclusive, except two intervening years (1813–14) held by Martin Chittenden—they were opposed in politics, and rival candidates for governor.

The sixth daughter, Electa, married Jacob Spafford of Richmond, son of Gen. Jon. Spafford above mentioned, a farmer.

None of the ten children of Gov. Chittenden are now living; but there is a numerous progeny of the highest respectability, scattered over this and several other states, some of whom hold important places of public trust. In looking over the above memoranda of his own children, one cannot fail to be struck with the numerous instances of honor and trust conferred upon the family. Indeed an enduring popularity seems to attach to himself and his posterity; and we may venture to say, that no single family in Vermont has ever received a greater share of public confidence, or been more worthy of it.

When Col. Chittenden removed into Vermont, nearly the whole country from Connecticut River to Lake Champlain, was a dense wilderness, and the question of state sovereignty and jurisdiction over this territory, which for a long time had been agitated between New York and New Hampshire, still remained unsettled. While the country was used only as a barrier between the English and French settlements, and rarely trod but by the wild beast and the savage, the old charters of the Crown were scarcely worth looking up, and for more than two hundred years lay undisturbed upon their dusty shelves. But when peace covered the land, and the richness and value of the country became known, both New York and New Hampshire began to hunt up their moth-eaten titles. The charter of King James I. to the "Great Council of Plymouth," of eight degrees of latitude, extending from Virginia to the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and westward from sea to sea; and the subgrants of the Plymouth company to Mason of a part of New Hampshire, and to the colonies of Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay, and the commission of King George II.—one hundred and twenty-one years after—to Benning Wentworth, authorizing him to make grants of townships, between Mason's line and a prolonged line north from the N. W. corner of Massachusetts, was relied upon by New Hampshire, as evidence of her title to the soil, and right of jurisdiction over it.

On the other hand, New York claimed title under the royal grant of King Charles II. to his brother Duke of York, of all the lands between Connecticut river and Delaware Bay, and under a decision of the king (Geo. III.) made in 1764, just one hundred years after the above grant to the Duke of York, establishing the west side of Connecticut river as the eastern boundary of New York. Which decision was resisted by New Hampshire, as well as by a majority of the settlers, upon the grants, as having been obtained by fraudulent practices and representations on the part of New York. Moreover, the grantees, and even the king himself, regarded the decision as settling the jurisdiction merely between the two States, without effecting in any way the title to the lands. Under this view of the case, no one felt a disposition to disturb the matter; and if New York had been wise, we should now doubtless have formed a part of that state. But the king, as well as all parties concerned, was taken by surprise, when he learned that the New York speculators claimed from his decision the absolute fee simple of the soil; and had began to harass the grantees under New Hampshire, with writs of eject-

* See article on Chittenden County, p. 456.

Digitized by Google

ment, returnable before their judicial dependents at Albany.

The New York claimants recovered in all cases of course, issued their writs of possession, and sought to drive the innocent grantees, who had once bought and paid for their lands, from the use and occupation of them—lands they entered upon in good faith, and on which they had made their improvements, erected their buildings and established their homes. Under these circumstances, as they had no chance of obtaining either justice or equity, before the courts at Albany, much less from the hands of the grasping speculators who controlled those courts, they resolved to defend their premises against every attempt on the part of New York, to dispossess them—by the force of arms if needs be. And here commenced the Beach Seal and Catamount War.

When Col. Chittenden removed into the disputed territory, this war had been in progress, in overt acts of aggression and defence, about seven years; and the spirited defence, and many amusing incidents, that took place in the course of that time, would be out of place if repeated here. Suffice it to say, during that period, the protection of the territory and rights of the grantees were managed by the Allens, the Fays, Robinsons, Warners, Baker, and Cochran. They were the active spirits, and the law-making, law-deciding, and law-executing power of the time. They did it all their own way—repulsed all interference with the possessions of the grantees—resisted outside courts, lawyers, and sheriffs—passed resolutions of contempt upon New York statutes, judgments and proclamations—broke up surveys, justice courts, county courts and posses, acting under the authority of New York—instituted a "judgment-seat of their own, to try offenders—and used the Beach Seal and other ingenious modes of punishment, upon such as they caught and found guilty of disloyalty to their cause.

As might be expected, these proceedings did not satisfy the demands of the New York claimants, or tend to an immediate settlement of the controversy. It was during this stormy time, that Col. Chittenden removed into Williston, and identified himself with the Green Mountain Boys, and the fortune that awaited them. The whole population of the territory at that time, consisted of about sixteen hundred families. Great Britain and her colonies had not yet come to blows; and the time when such an event would happen, if ever, was not calculated. Indeed, they were not aware how soon and sudden the war of the Revolution was to fall upon them, and become the absorbing theme, overshadowing every other consideration whether of a public or private nature. As yet, however, the grantees, unconcious of the near approach of the great contest for national independence and freedom, had their armor on, to defend themselves against the aggressions and laws of New York.

At this period Gov. Tryon attempted a negotiation with the grantees; which, however, was suddenly broken off by the encroachment of New York Surveyors, and measures of retaliation, in the destruction of property, and breaking up of a New York settlement, on Otter Creek. More incensed than ever, the New York legislature, as if made mad for their own destruction, passed the unwise and diabolical act of March 9th, 1774,—more disgraceful and tyrannical, than any act that ever found its way upon the statutes of a civilized people. This increased the excitement of the grantees; and Ethan Allen, as their recognized leader, came out with a document, ridiculing and denouncing the acts of the New York legislature, and challenging them to come on and try titles force by force—thus ending all hope of reconciliation.

But the storm that was gathering in the west, and just ready to enter upon the work of violence and bloodshed, was hushed by the uprising of another in the east of greater magnitude and more sublime threatenings. The scepter of Old England flashed above the clouds, and threatened annihilation to her rebellious colonies—and indeed the storm burst upon them, as suddenly as it was unexpected. Without means or preparation to meet so formidable a foe, the colonies could do but little more than stand to the rights they demanded, and let the tempest come. Yet so strong was the pressure of public feeling against the oppressive acts of the home government, especially among the liberty-loving people of New England, that the courts and officers of the Crown were held in contempt—culminating in the first outbreak and blood of the revolution, on the breaking up of the royal court at Westminster in our own state; and let it be noted, that this was done by men whom New York had declared as outlaws and felons without benefit of clergy.

Digitized by Google

Col. Chittenden, who had just entered upon his new home, and who was in the future to take so prominent a part in these two formidable contests, was not unmindful of passing events. In addition to their bearing upon the questions of national independence and state sovereignty, and the future condition of the country and people, his home and property were at stake. If New York maintained the ground she assumed, the title to his large landed estate would be abrogated. If England should succeed in putting down the revolution, the property of such as rebelled against her would be liable to confiscation—and to avoid these perils, two great victories must be achieved; one over a powerful state, and the other over an empire.

The stirring events of the spring of 1775, which so directly followed the massacre, and the breaking up of the royal court at Westminster passed rapidly along, one after another. The battles of Lexington and Concord, and Bunker Hill; the capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point; and the organization of the army, and siege of Boston, all took place within a few weeks of each other, while he was getting his new farm into a condition to support his family. His location was rich and beautiful, and he labored with a full heart, cheered on by the charming scenery which surrounded him. It was secluded and wild as nature could make it, but was a paradise of wooded hills and valleys, shady trees and vines, planted by a hand more skillful than the hand of man. But war was now upon his borders, and the sly savage lurked in the dark corners of the forest around him—spying out his movements, and seeking opportunity to kill and plunder.

There were at this time about 40 families, all told, on the river and lake shore; and a small block-house in Jericho, on the opposite side of the river below Col. Chittenden's, had been flung up and garrisoned; but as our troops fell back from Canada in the spring of '76, they became alarmed at their situation, and the garrison abandonded the fortification, leaving the defenceless inhabitants without any protection,* and the only alternative they had was to flee from their homes and take shelter among their friends at the south. Col. Chittenden, wife and ten children went on foot by marked trees to Castleton, carrying their provisions and other effects upon two horses, except their heavy articles of iron-ware, which they sunk in the duck pond before leaving. He resided at Arlington, mostly, until his return to Williston in 1787.

When Col. Chittenden first came onto the grants he was well known as a sound and able man, and was at once looked up to as a sort of father in the land. He had not long resided here before the subject of making the grants a free and independent state began to be discussed. He was strongly in favor of this measure, as the only practicable mode, in his opinion, of quieting the titles and settling the contested question of jurisdiction, between New York and New Hampshire, over the territory. And the first notice we find of his being called to any public duty, after he came here, he was elected, in 1776, a delegate to the Convention at Dorset, to consider the propriety of this important measure. As yet the people of the grants had not attempted to exercise self-government in any organized form, and their previous history throughout shows them in no other condition than one approximating to anarchy; having no other authority than that exercised by tribunals, chiefs and military leaders, acclaimed into place, and when disliked, acclaimed out again.

By a unanimous vote of the Convention, it was resolved "to take suitable measures, as soon as may be, to declare the New Hampshire grants a free and separate District." And a committee—consisting of Thos. Chittenden, chairman, Ira Allen and others—laid before the Convention the first governmental covenant or compact ever acted upon by a Convention of the people of this state, which was unanimously adopted and signed by the members of the Convention.† And at the adjourned meeting of the same Convention, holden at Westminster on the 15th of January following, a new and separate state was voted, and a committee was appointed, of which Col. Chittenden was one, to present to the Convention the form of a

*See No. V. of this work, pp. 46 and 462.
†State Papers, p. 67.

Digitized by Google

Declaration of Independence; and the next morning they made their report, proclaiming to the world the existence of a new, separate and independent state, under the name of "New Connecticut alias Vermont," which report was unanimously accepted by the Convention. At the close of the Convention the committee addressed a communication to Congress, stating the doings of the Convention, and asking that Vermont "be admitted to the Union, and that delegates therefrom take their seats in the Continental Congress." Which petition and proffered representation Congress were not wise enough to accept.

Although a long and bitter controversy, both with New York and New Hampshire, awaited the new state before she was admitted into the Union, yet a starting point was now initiated, from which the people could proceed to build the superstructure of a government among themselves, and they lost no time in proceeding to establish the organic law of the state; and the most democratic, free and enlightened constitution of any state in the Union, was the result. The sagacity and profound statesmanship of the men who performed this work, excited the admiration of all the states, New York excepted. Among these men Thomas Chittenden stood preëminent. He was also a leading member of the Convention that adopted the first Constitution at Windsor, July 2, 1777. His power of discrimination seemed to be intuitive, and when the draft of the Constitution was reported to the Convention, his peculiar mode of criticising its provisions and judging of their effect upon the liberty and happiness of the people, the great object in view, attracted the attention and confidence of the members. His sound judgment and common sense mode of weighing subjects that came before him, were equivalent to much learning and experience, and no one in the Convention could penetrate deeper into the practical workings of conventional law, than he. The ability and patriotism he had shown in this, as well as the previous conventions, secured to him the confidence, in a high degree, both of the people and members; and when the Convention was so suddenly brought to a close by the approach of Burgoyne up the lake, and the evacuation of Ticonderoga, in the few moments they had to spare (during the storm of the elements that kept them in the house), after passing in turn the several sections of the Constitution, a Council of Safety was organized, to conduct the functions of the new government, and he was appointed chairman of that body.

The Constitution was yet regarded as an unfinished thing, not having been satisfactorily revised nor submitted to the people for their ratification;* and it became necessary to form a provisional government to meet the emergency—and it must be done without an hour's delay. It was therefore proposed to appoint a Council of Safety, invested with all the powers of government, both civil and military; and this extraordinary body was at once created—its powers were unlimited and absolute; in fact, the urgency of the occasion obliged the Convention, at once, to fling into the hands of a few men the legislative, executive and judicial powers of the state, and entrust them with the life, liberty and property of every individual in it.†

The Council of Safety held its first meeting at Manchester, July 15, 1777, and their first movement was to send dispatches to Massachusetts and New Hampshire for aid to make a stand against the common enemy; which resulted in bringing Gen. Stark and a command of about 800 men to join the Vermont troops, preparatory to the battle of Bennington.‡ The Council, in the mean time, went to work in earnest to raise and equip men from the grants to aid in the impending crisis. For some days the subject was discussed with deep anxiety, and no mode could be hit upon to raise the means necessary, nor the men without the means. Meanwhile one of the members of Council,§ discouraged at the prospect, and moved either by fear or treachery, abandoned the Council in open day, picked up a few followers, and fled to the enemy's camp. It was a dark hour—the scouts and savage allies of Burgoyne were scouring the territory, laying waste the defenceless frontier, and robbing the peaceful inhabitants. There was no public treasury, no time for taxation, no credit to borrow, and the whole population, and in fact most of the members present were poor.

* Which was in fact never done.

† The adjournment of the Convention and the battle of Hubbardton took place the same day.

‡ The Council of Safety consisted of Thos. Chittenden, President; Ira Allen, Secretary; Jonas Fay, Stephen Fay, Moses Robinson, Sam. Robinson, Matthew Lyon, Benj. Carpenter, Nathan Clark, Gideon Olin, Thos. Rowley, Paul Spooner, Jacob Bailey and Abel Spencer.

§ Abel Spencer, of Clarendon.

Digitized by Google

After a long and tiresome debate and intense thought upon the subject, the members of the Council sunk down into silence and despair. At length the president, unwilling to give up, rose from his seat, and with a strong and earnest voice is reported to have addressed the Council as follows:* "We have sent a dispatch requesting aid of New Hampshire. But how can we expect they will do any thing till we do something for ourselves—till they know whether they will find among us more friends to feed and assist than enemies to impede them? And I submit to you, gentlemen, whether it is not now high time to act to some purpose. If we can't vote taxes, we can contribute towards raising a military force, if you will agree to raise one. Instead of being disheartened by the traitor Spencer, who has perhaps providentially left us before we had settled on any plan of operations which he could report to the enemy, let us show him and the world, that the rest of us can be men! I have ten head of cattle which, by way of example, I will give for the emergency. But am I more patriotic than the rest of you here and hundreds of others in the settlement? My wife has a valuable gold necklace; hint to her to-day that it is needed, and, my word for it, to-morrow will find it in the treasury of freedom. But is my wife more spirited than yours and others? Gentlemen, I wait your propositions." This appeal was near enough related in its tone to the immortal harangue of Brutus on the death of Cæsar to be cousin germain to it, at least, and it had its effect upon those who listened to it.

Ira Allen found a way during his sleepless hours of the night, and in the morning proposed a commission of sequestration, "invested with authority to seize the goods and chattels of all persons who had, or should join the common enemy, sell them at public vendue, and the proceeds paid to a treasurer, to be appointed by the council."†

The proposition was at once adopted, commissioners of sequestration were appointed, and men dispatched in every direction to seize tory property. In fifteen days a regiment was raised, placed under the command of the brave Col. Herrick, the first to attack the entrenchments of the enemy at Bennington. By this force, the victory at Bennington was secured.

No chain of events during the revolution damaged the enemy more, or resulted more gloriously to our arms, than those that directly followed the proceedings of the Council of Safety. Not only the battle of Bennington was won, but the army of Burgoyne fell as a consequence; and Ticonderoga, Lake Champlain, and the whole northern frontier, was evacuated by the enemy, and re-occupied by our troops; while the British vessels upon the lake, and a large amount of artillery and military stores, fell into our hands.

The part taken by the Vermonters in the defeat of Burgoyne's campaign, together with their bold and heroic stand in declaring their independence, and entering upon the work of establishing a Constitution and State Government of their own, all in progress at the same time, together with the marked ability of her leaders and the heroism and success of her troops, gained a prestige to the state, that secured her independence forever.

The Council of Safety summoned the constitutional convention to meet again (24th of Dec. 1777) and complete their work. They met and revised the constitution, fixed the day of general election under it, and the meeting of the general assembly. Indeed, nothing could more clearly express the disinterested patriotism of the Council of Safety, than their acts. Instead of availing themselves of the extraordinary powers they held, to usurp the government of the state, or promote private and selfish ends, they were true to their trust, and labored in the most faithful manner to serve the people of the state and the cause of the Union. They were obliged to decide all cases that came before them, whether civil or military, as no proper legislative or judicial body had ever existed in the state. In short, they were appointed for the very purpose of exercising dictatorial powers. They imposed fines on some; banished others from the state; confiscated lands, as well as personal property; decided all matters in controversy between parties, whether on contract, trespass, title to lands, or otherwise; settled the estates of deceased persons, and even granted bills of divorce. But these arbitrary assumptions of power were of small account, compared with their general supervision over the military and political movements in the state.

*See address of Dan'l P. Thompson, read before the Vt. Hist. Society in October, 1850, p. 14.

†This was the first example of the kind in the Revolution. Ira Allen originated the measure, and it was followed by Congress.

The general election under the new constitution soon however took place (March 3, 1778), and representatives and a governor and other state officers, for the first time in the history of the state were chosen; and for the first time the legislature met at Windsor, March 12, 1778. On counting the votes for governor it was found that Thomas Chittenden was elected by a large majority of the people—and other state officers having been duly elected and qualified, Vermont, as a state, had an organized, live, and working government of her own; and the business of putting the machinery of government into practical operation, at once engaged the attention of the legislature.

The state was divided into counties, military and probate districts; courts were established; judges, sheriffs, and military officers appointed; county and town elections provided for; and laws passed—some of them quaintly enough, "as they stood in the Connecticut Law Books."

But the most important of their acts was the adoption of the Common Law of England as the law of this state.

It will be noticed that Gov. Chittenden's first election was to complete the year from March to October—the 2d Tuesday of the latter month having been the time fixed in the constitution, for the annual meeting of the legislature. On counting the votes at the October session it appeared that he was again elected Governor by a large majority; to which office he was afterwards annually re-elected to October, 1797, except one year.

While the organization of the state government was in progress, Gov. Chittenden, by means of his new position as chief magistrate, was called upon in a great measure to direct the policy of Vermont, in her relations with New York and New Hampshire. The breach between this state and New York, especially, was made wider and deeper by the bold measures taken in opposition to her authority. She began to look upon the subject with deeper solicitude than before, and now sought to obtain by fair promises, what her tyrannical course of legislation had failed to accomplish. Gov. Clinton came out with a proclamation (Feb. 23, 1778) just previous to Gov. Chittenden's first election, informing the settlers that they had labored under many grievances from the unwise policy of New York, especially in passing the obnoxious Act of the 9th of June, 1774; "which grievances (says he) in some measure extenuate their offences, and which ought to be redressed." Whereupon he proposed to the settlers, under the protest, however, "that New York intended to maintain her supremacy over them," to make overtures to them to induce their voluntary submission to the authority of that state. He pledged the public faith of New York to comply with his overtures, assured "protection" to all who were loyal to the state, and "compulsive obedience" to such as refused allegiance.

The above proclamation required no official answer from Gov. Chittenden—but under the co-operation of himself and council, Ethan Allen was made the lion of the occasion to get up a semi-official reply to Gov. Clinton.

In the meantime a new complication in the affairs of the state presented itself—the townships on the east side of Connecticut river proposed to separate from New Hampshire, and unite with Vermont. The proposition was so inviting, that it met, at first, with great favor among our people—but the policy of allowing such a measure to be entertained, at that particular crisis in our affairs, was quite another matter. Its adoption would dismember New Hampshire; and the other states, and Congress especially, where our petition for admission into the Union was lying—would see in it a grasping disposition; and the agitation of the subject would not fail to produce local dissensions among ourselves. The subject, however, came before our legislature, and they, to fling off the responsibility, submitted the proposition to the decision of the people. A majority of the people voted for the annexation—some in view of enlarging the state by the addition of so desirable a section of country; others, to bring the literary institutions at Hanover into our midst and make it the capital of the new state; while the people on the west side of the mountain, especially near the Lake border, opposed the measure as adverse to the interests, both public and private, of this section of the state. But the legislature at their adjourned session in June, 1778, in pursuance of the vote of the people, admitted said towns; of which the government of New Hampshire was duly notified.

Digitized by Google

We were now virtually an independent republic standing upon our own platform of nationality, and at war with New York on one side, and New Hampshire on the other, with a powerful foreign enemy hanging upon our northern border, with her savage allies. New Hampshire, as might be expected, at once entered upon measures to raise a military force to reclaim her revolted territory. Thus the little state of Vermont, with a population, all told, less than the present county of Chittenden, had three wars on hand, with her own people not wholly free from domestic strife. Governor Chittenden, who, as yet, had not held the office of chief magistrate but little more than three months, felt the weight of his responsibility—for on him, in a very great measure, rested the duty of delivering the state from the imminent prospect of the loss of all she had gained. He had been prudent, yet at heart opposed to the policy of acceding to the wishes of the revolted towns in New Hampshire. Indeed the very existence of Vermont seemed to hang upon a change of the popular sentiment at home, as to the admission of those townships, and the diversion of the storm that threatened her from without. President Weare of New Hampshire addressed a communication to Governor Chittenden, complaining of the course taken by Vermont, expressing his fears that it would lead to anarchy and armed opposition, and besought him and the people of the grants, "for the sake of their future peace and tranquility, to relinquish every connection, as a political body, with the towns on the east side of Connecticut river." Congress, also, under the complaints of the New York and New Hampshire members, had the subject before them, and threatened to interpose their power and authority in the matter.

Gov. Chittenden convened his council, and they concluded to send Ethan Allen to Philadelphia, to learn the views of Congress on the subject, and exert his influence against any immediate action by that body. Allen returned in Oct. while the legislature was in session, and made his report to the Governor and council, and general assembly, that he had the assurance of Congress that they would suspend action on the subject, until he could return and represent their views; and gave it as his opinion, "except this state recede from such union, immediately, the whole power of the confederacy of the United States of America will join to annihilate the state of Vermont, and to vindicate the state of New Hampshire, and to maintain, inviolate, the articles of confederation, which guarantee to each state their privileges and immunities." Such, says he, were the views of Congress—"upon which I stake my honor."

The perilous condition of the state—the danger of losing the government they had erected—the growing disaffection of Congress—the threatening aspect of the common enemy—and the advantage they had flung into the hands of New York to renew her complaints, were now seen by the people; and they felt as anxious to remedy those evils as they had been in producing them. The result was, the next legislature, with their instructions from the people in their pockets, resolved that the said union be dissolved, and made totally void.

The quiet influence of Gov. Chittenden had been exerted to produce this result—and he at once sent Ira Allen to lay before the President and council of New Hampshire the proceedings of the legislature, and to negotiate a final settlement of the controversy with that state. But the end had not yet come. Massachusetts, anticipating a collapse of the government of Vermont, renewed her claim; and New Hampshire was not now content with the mere restoration of the sixteen towns, but insisted upon her old claim of jurisdiction over the whole state.

New York, New Hampshire and Massachusetts now all fell upon Vermont, to crush out her government and divide her garments between them; and a convention was called at Brattleborough, in the interest of those states, and a military association formed in Cumberland county, to overturn her government.

Such were the multiplied difficulties, and overshadowing events, which Gov. Chittenden had to contend with during the first fourteen months of his administration. The stakes had been lost and won again; but now a blow was aimed at the very existence of the state, with greater deliberation and concert than ever before. The first move of the governor and council was to direct Ethan

Allen to raise a military force, and put down the movements in Cumberland county. At this particular time, moreover, the people of Vermont were suffering severely from destitution and quasi famine, produced by the perversion of labor to the defence of the country. And in numerous cases where crops were put into the ground, they found no harvesters. At this state of affairs, in Cumberland county, Gov. Clinton became alarmed, and wrote a pressing letter to Congress, urging them to interpose in the matter and prevent the effusion of blood. But while the entreaty of Gov. Clinton was under the consideration of Congress, Ethan Allen marched with his men into that county, captured Col. Patterson, (the appointed leader of the New York insurrectionists) and several of his officers. On this result of the purpose of the conspirators to overthrow the government of Vermont, Gov. Clinton renewed his appeal to Congress to interpose their authority. Congress thereupon appointed five commissioners to repair to Vermont, and inquire into the reasons why the people refused to become citizens of the states that claimed jurisdiction over them; and to take every prudent measure to settle the controversy—but the commission wholly failed in its object.

The commission submitted to Gov. Chittenden a series of interrogatories, with a view of eliciting from him the facts in relation to the controversy; and the answer of the Governor showed the deceit practiced by New York, particularly in the overtures held out in Gov. Clinton's proclamation. He points out a blind clause in the proclamation, sweeping away near all the lands of the grantees of New Hampshire and Massachusetts Bay, and making the proclamation in fact what he called it, "a mere shadow, without the substance." He, moreover, showed, by his answer, that the people of Vermont would never voluntarily return to the jurisdiction of New York (titles or no titles), but were willing to submit the whole controversy to the decision of Congress.

Congress then came out with a series of resolutions declaring that the officers arrested by Ethan Allen ought to be immediately liberated; that the internal peace of the United States was endangered; that it was the duty of Vermont to refrain from exercising power over the friends of New York and New Hampshire, and evidently looking to a restoration of Vermont to the government of New York. These resolutions were sent by express, by John Jay, President of Congress, to Gov. Chittenden, and by him laid before the legislature, then in session in Manchester. The first thing done by the legislature was (Oct. 15th) to appoint a joint committee from the house and council, consisting of Ethan Allen and others, to form a plan of defence against the neighboring states; and, meanwhile, appointed a delegation to Congress to vindicate the right of Vermont to independence, and agree upon articles of union with the United States.

Previous to this, however (Aug. 5), Gov. Chittenden had addressed a lengthy communication to Congress,* in justification of Vermont for the course she had taken. On the subject of Gov. Clinton's complaints, especially his hints at coercive measures, as issuing orders to the militia of New York to hold themselves in readiness, he says: "I have issued like orders to the militia of this state; and notwithstanding I am sensible that the assistance of every power which has and continues to operate for the happiness of these independent states, ought to be exerted wholly for their defence and security, yet the free-born citizens of this state can never so far degrade the dignity of human nature, or relinquish any part of that glorious spirit of patriotism which has hitherto distinguished them, in every conflict with the unrelenting and long-continued tyranny of designing men, as to tamely submit to his (Gov. Clinton's) mandate, or even to be intimidated by a challenge from him." In the mean time the delegates sent from Vermont, to negotiate terms of reconciliation and admission into the Union, were allowed no hearing, and took their leave of Congress and returned to their homes.

The very existence of Vermont, at this critical period, depended upon the firmness and wisdom of her statesmen; and, as events proved, they were adequate to the task. On the 10th of December, the governor and council published "An appeal to the candid and impartial world,"† taking the ground that they could not submit to the arbitrament of Congress things too sacred to be submitted to arbitration; that Congress had no right

* See Henry Stevens' papers, marked "Letters, 1779."
† Drawn up by Hon. Stephen R. Bradley.

Digitized by Google

to interfere with the internal policy of Vermont, as the state existed independent of the other states, and not accountable to them "for liberty, the gift of the beneficent Creator;" and—not being represented in Congress—she is not bound by resolutions passed without her knowledge and consent; nor had Congress the right to assume to herself "power to judge and determine in the case;" and—after having spent so much blood and treasure in the national defence—"they should not now give up every thing worth fighting for * * to the arbitrament and determination of any man, or body of men, under heaven."

After this notable appeal, Congress came out with a new set of resolutions, reiterating her former policy, and aiming at the distribution of Vermont among the states that claimed her—but postponed the consideration of the subject for the present. Governor Chittenden accidentally received a copy of the above resolutions, and taking the advice of his council addressed the President of Congress in a lengthy communication, denying the right of Congress to interfere with the liberty and independence of Vermont, and repudiating the idea of being divided up among the other states, as downtrodden Poland had been divided between Russia, Hungary, and Prussia—that the posterity of the valiant and brave people of Vermont would not call them blessed, "if they should tamely surrender any part of it"—that it was highly probable Vermont, by her indefatigable exertions, had protected the northern part of New York from the ravages of the common enemy, while the representatives of that state were seeking her destruction—and in the course of his communication makes the following significant allusions: "The people of Vermont are, if necessitated to it, at liberty to offer, or accept terms of cessation of hostilities with Great Britain, without the approbation of any other man or body of men: for, on proviso that neither Congress, nor the legislatures of those states they represent, will support Vermont in her independence, she has not the most distant motive to continue hostilities with Great Britain, and maintain an important frontier for the benefit of the United States; and for no other reward than the ungrateful one of being enslaved by them." * * "Considering the claim of Great Britain to make laws to bind the colonists, without their consent, to be an abridgement of the natural rights of mankind, the resolves of Congress are equally arbitrary; and they furnish equal motives to the citizens of Vermont to resist the one as the other." * * "Those resolves serve only to raise the expiring hopes and expectations, and to revive a languishing flame of a few tories and schismatics, in this state, who have never been instrumental in promoting the common cause of America." This communication, which was written with great force and ability, closed by renewing the offer of Vermont to become a member of the Union; and it made a very sensible impression upon Congress.

Ira Allen, who was a member of the Council, and Stephen R. Bradley, were again selected to go to Philadelphia, as delegates to Congress to attend upon the deliberations of that body; and were commissioned by Gov. Chittenden under the broad seal of the "State of Vermont." They were not, however, allowed seats in that body, and Congress having put off the further consideration of the subject indefinitely they remonstrated against the course pursued, and closed by saying, "If the matter be thus pursued, we stand ready to appeal to God and the world, and Congress must be accountable for the consequences"—and having sent in their remonstrance to Congress, left for their homes.

Under these protracted trials, Vermont, baffled in all her attempts to gain a fair (not exparte) adjudication of the controversy, changed her policy, and resolved, if she must fight, to enlarge her boundaries to the size of a respectable state, and enhance her population and power. And now by the action and assent of nearly the whole people of the district of territory, lying between the Mason line in New Hampshire, and the Hudson river, and extending north to the Province line, they united under the government of Vermont, and were received into union by the concurrent action of the Governor, Council, and General Assembly of the State. This measure united all parties; and the malcontents, even, in Cumberland and Gloucester counties, came into it; an act of amnesty was passed, and all judgments, fines, forfeitures, and penalties, remitted against such as had professed to be the subjects of New York.

The territory now united under the government of Vermont embraced a most desirable country, and was of sufficient extent to form a powerful state. It covered both shores of Lake Champlain, and commanded the key of all military and warlike movements, on the part of Great Britain, into the United States by way of the St. Lawrence; while the rich valley of the Connecticut and for fifty miles beyond, with its literary institutions, came into the new state. The boldness of the measure excited the admiration of all, and added greater dignity and importance to the position occupied by Gov. Chittenden, as chief magistrate of the state. It had a beneficial effect in more ways than one. It not only produced union and strength at home, but struck terror into New York and New Hampshire, and made the public enemy far more pliable in their negotiations with the leaders of Vermont, under the belief that this new acquisition to her territory would add just so much more to the British crown, and open to their occupancy and use the entire valley of Lake Champlain, for striking at the heart of the confederacy and guarding her Canadian provinces.

Gov. Chittenden, though not the most active man,* nevertheless—from the position he occupied as governor of the state—stood at the head of that little, and I feel justified in adding, patriotic band of secret negotiators, on the part of Vermont, who had two great objects in view—an acknowledgement of the independence of the state by Congress and the protection of the frontier by holding the enemy in check.† It was a perilous experiment, but they succeeded in accomplishing both purposes. Congress, under the influence of the more important states of New York and New Hampshire, had uniformly turned the cold shoulder to Vermont and not permitted her even to share in the deliberations of that body, when the subjects that involved her vital interests were under consideration. The people of Vermont felt that this was an ungrateful return for the blood and treasure they had expended; they had not forgotten the battles they had fought and patriotic efforts they had made, in defending the country against the common enemy; and they had good reason for adopting any measures to ensure their independence, and protect themselves against the calamities of foreign invasion.

The secret negotiations, however, were not initiated by Vermont; indeed, she only sought to turn to her advantage—as well as to the advantage of the whole country—a movement and correspondence commenced on the part of the British generals—first indicated in a letter from Col. Beverly Robinson to Ethan Allen—by which they aimed to profit by the contest going on between Vermont, on the one part, and New York, New Hampshire and Congress, on the other. "Gen. Allen immediately communicated the contents of the letter to Gov. Chittenden, and some confidential persons, who agreed in opinion that it was best not to return an answer." After waiting ten months, Col. Robinson wrote again; and to this, also, it was arranged that Allen should make no reply, but send both letters to Congress, asserting the right of Vermont to independence, avowing his loyalty to the Union, and maintaining that the state had the "right to agree on terms of a cessation of hostilities with Great Britain, provided the United States persisted in rejecting her application for union with them." About a month after this,* Gov. Chittenden appointed Ira Allen "to settle a cartel with the British in Canada for an exchange of prisoners, and also to procure an armistice between Vermont and the British"†—who at this time had ten thousand troops in Canada, and the frontier was powerless against them, and wholly dependent upon their mercy.

This matter was now fairly introduced to Congress in the form desired, and a most able and shrewd agent selected to manage the affair with the British officers. Only eight persons at this time were in the secret,‡ and all agreed that an armistice was necessary to save the state from destruction by her enemies, both foreign and domestic—" and this was fixed upon at every hazard." May 1, 1781, Col. Allen set out for the Isle aux Noix, and Maj. Dundas, commandant of the post, kindly received him. A cartel was settled for the exchange of prisoners and the papers

* This was Ira Allen.

† The depredations of the enemy, the fall previous in the burning and massacre at Royalton, and other raids, will be recollected.

* April, 1781.

† See Ira Allen's History of Vermont; also Biography of Ira Allen, ante page of this work.

‡ Thomas Chittenden, Moses Robinson, Sam'l Safford, Ethan Allen, Ira Allen, Tim. Brownson, John Fassett and Jos. Fay.

Digitized by Google

executed; but nothing in relation to the armistice was reduced to writing. Indeed, Capt. Sherwood and one other (Geo. Smith, Esq.), were the only persons on the island who were entrusted with this part of the business by Gen. Haldimand, the British commander in chief, who had his headquarters at Quebec. A correspondence was opened with Gen. Haldimand, messengers sent back and forth, and the army, in the mean time, remained inactive. Gen. Haldimand sent his adjutant general, Maj. Lunno, to the Isle aux Noix, and he and Col. Allen—seeking a retired spot on the island—talked up the business of the district of Vermont becoming a British colony. Col. Allen objected to putting anything in writing himself, but consented that Major Lunno might jot down his views for transmission to Gen. Haldimand. This was all the bond that was executed on the subject by Col. Allen, and in return he received "a verbal agreement that hostilities should cease between the British and those under the jurisdiction of Vermont, until after the session of her legislature (to meet in June following), and longer, if prospects were satisfactory." After a talk of 17 days Col. Allen returned and made report to the governor and council, as to the cartel, and to the governor and his secret associates as to the armistice.

The legislature met at Bennington in June, having a representation from her newly acquired territory both on the east and west—and also a large representation of spies sent by Congress and other states to watch the movements of Vermont and her leaders; and from Canada, to see whether Col. Allen would prove faithful to the British interests, and entitle Vermont to a further suspension of hostilities. The subject of Col. Allen's mission to Canada, in due time, came up before the joint assembly, and Gov. Chittenden being called upon rose from his seat and stated to the assembly, "that in consequence of the application of several persons, who had friends that were prisoners of war in Canada, he had by the advice of the Council appointed Col. Ira Allen to go to the Isle aux Noix to settle a cartel for the exchange of prisoners in behalf of the state. That Col. Allen, with difficulty, had completed the business; that if the grand committee wished for further particulars respecting the mission and conduct of Col. Allen, he was then present, and could best inform them; to whom he referred them."

Col. Allen rose, and observed to the committee, that he had received an appointment and commission from the Governor and Council, to go and settle a cartel with the British in Canada, for an exchange of prisoners; that he had very happily succeeded in his mission; but not expecting to be called on, had left the commission and all the papers at home, and if desired would produce the writings for the inspection of the committee the next day.* The next day he read his papers and properly explained them; "and, on the whole, it appeared, that the British had shown great generosity in the business." Col. Allen mentioned "that he had discovered among the British officers a fervent wish for peace—and that the English government was as tired of the war as the United States—and concluded with a desire, if any member of the committee or auditor in the gallery, wished to ask any further questions, he was ready to answer them." All were satisfied—the spies from Congress complimented Allen, "for his open and candid conduct"—and those from Canada went home equally satisfied. "Is it not curious," says Allen, "to see opposite parties perfectly satisfied with one statement, and each believing what they wished to believe, and thereby deceiving themselves!" The matter passed off quietly—the prisoners were exchanged according to arrangements, and the armistice (as yet a secret) continued, and the correspondence kept up with the enemy.

During the above correspondence, however, several incidents occurred, which came near letting out the secret and exposing Gov. Chittenden and his confidential friends to public violence. So strong was the intensity of popular feeling at this time, against the tories, and every sentiment that favored British interests, a disclosure of what had been said and done with the enemy would have been held as downright treason; and no argument or evidence would have satisfied the public mind on the subject. And the personal safety of the managers of the affair, as well as the safety and independence of the state, would have found a common grave—and the escape, both of the state and her leaders, from this result, was almost miraculous.

*He then resided in Sunderland.

A letter from Lord George Germain to Sir Henry Clinton,* had been intercepted by the French, taken to Paris, and there fell into the hands of Dr. Franklin, who sent it to Congress—and Congress ordered it to be printed. It spoke of "the return of the people of Vermont to their allegiance, as an event of the utmost importance to the king and his affairs; and if the French and Washington really intended an irruption into Canada, may be considered as opposing an insurmountable bar to the attempt, &c." This letter had the effect to set Congress thinking what they should do to keep Vermont in the traces; but presented nothing tangible as to what she had done.

Soon after this (September, '81,) Ira Allen and Joseph Fay met the British commissioners—in pursuance of a previous arrangement—in secret conclave at Skeensboro (Whitehall), "to perfect their negotiations and renew the armistice." The form of government for Vermont, after she should become a British colony, was talked up, and this was all acceded to. The governor was to be appointed by the king, and the legislature by the people. The British commissioners then proposed to arrest some of the leading whigs in the state who were most violent against the English government. This was a hard nut for Allen and Fay to crack, and at the same time satisfy the commissioners of their fidelity to the interests of the crown. But this they got along with by saying it was contrary to the spirit of the armistice, and that every movement of that sort would be likely to excite "a spirit that must be conciliated before a completion of the object wished for." The British commissioners thereupon gave this point up and left it to the discretion of Vermont. They then insisted that Vermont should declare itself a British colony, and proposed that she raise two regiments of men to be officered by certain men in the state, with a brigadier commanding, muster them into the British service and join them in an expedition to Albany. This was a harder nut still; but they told the British commissioners that there were many strong whigs in the state, mixed up with ties of relationship and various other interests, and to change the disposition and temper of such men was the work of time, and they required indulgence and moderation and the blessings of repose under the armistice. This and other ingenious arguments got over this demand; but the commissioners then insisted that Gen. Haldimand should issue his proclamation, offering to confirm Vermont as a colony of the crown; that an army should come up the lake and distribute them, and measures be taken for the common defense. This was agreed to, rather than have the armistice broken, and they separated on terms of friendship, with the secret boxed up and the armistice prolonged.

The next month Gen. St. Leger, in command of the British forces, came up the lake and made his headquarters at Ticonderoga; Gen. Roger Enos then being in command of the Vermont troops at Castleton, by Gov. Chittenden, was entrusted with the secret of the armistice. It was on this occasion that Sergeant Tupper was killed by one of St. Leger's scouts.* Gen. St. Leger decently buried the body, sent his clothes to Gen. Enos, with an open letter to Gov. Chittenden in writing making an apology for killing him—"his picket not knowing the situation." As the letter was not sealed, its contents became known among the officers and men. Gen. Enos and Cols. Fletcher and Walbridge wrote at once to Gov. Chittenden, who was attending upon the legislature, then in session at Charlestown, and sent by express.† The bearer of these letters—not being in the secret—detailed the Castleton news about Sergeant Tupper, and directly the whole legislature were awake to the subject. The letters were delivered to the governor, and crowds thronged around him to hear the news. The governor opened one of them, but finding it contained private as well as public intelligence, read it to himself; and—during some high words that took place just at that moment, between Ira Allen and Maj. Runnels, of New Hampshire—"some change of letters," says Allen, "took place between the governor and Messrs. Brownson and Fassett, who were in the secret and sat next to the governor."‡ This altercation between Allen and Runnels took the attention of the crowd from the letters.

Gov. Chittenden lost no time in assembling

*Dated Feb. 7, 1781. See Stevens' Papers

*See biographical notices of Roger Enos and Ira Allen, Colchester, p. 770 of this work.
†Simeon Hathaway, the man sent.
‡See Ira Allen's History of Vermont.

the board of war at his room, all of whom were in the secret and happened to be present. And the only alternative that presented itself to pacify the legislature and the crowd, and save the state and its managers from imminent ruin, was to make out a new set of letters from Gen. Enos and Cols. Fletcher and Walbridge, and have them read in the council and assembly as the originals—which was done—they were then returned to the governor. These letters were a copy of the originals, except that portion of them relating to the negotiations, which was left out. The board of war, on assembling, at once sent for Nathaniel Chipman, as counsel, and let him into the secret; and it is said that he advised the course taken and prepared the bogus letters which were read. At this critical hour, providentially,—as treason was snuffed and the excitement intense,—the news of the fall of Lord Cornwallis was received, and presented, in the general joy, a new and redeeming aspect in the whole affair; and private jealousies and public complaints were at once absorbed, in the mutual overflow of heart and glee of patriotic expression, indulged in by all.

Col. Allen and Maj. Fay immediately sent a communication, by a private messenger, to the British commissioners at Ticonderoga, where he arrived the next morning. Allen and Fay in their letter adroitly referred to the former negotiations, mentioned the news of the capture of Cornwallis, and the effect and change it had produced upon the people, and under these circumstances, "thought it improper to publish the proposed proclamation" of Gen. Haldimand. About an hour after the arrival of this message at Ticonderoga, an express also arrived from the south to St. Leger, containing the news of the disaster of Cornwallis; and, before night, old Ti was evacuated and the army of ten thousand British soldiers—which had been held in a state of comparative inactivity for more than a year—were sailing down the lake, for the last time, on their way to Canada. After such momentous effects and happy results, the secret negotiations were closed forever.

As Gov. Chittenden was the ostensible head of this system of operations, it may not be improper to look for a moment at their propriety. Some have felt that there was an impropriety in the course pursued, even with a public enemy. That they were deceived there is no doubt; for all the evidence is against the idea that the governor and his confidential associates were sincere in their parley with the British authorities. They well understood, moreover, that they could not hand the state over to the enemy, if they would. And they were in fact the chosen leaders of the whig or patriotic party in the state, embracing probably nine-tenths of its population. Were these persons, then, justifiable in the policy they carried out, by deceiving the enemy, keeping their own people in doubt and ignorance of their doings, and threatening the general government with revolt?

This matter as explained by Gov. Chittenden himself—in a communication to Gen. Washington, after the crisis had passed over at Charlestown, detailing to him the real objects of the secret negotiation on the part of Vermont*—is the best apology, perhaps, that can be offered on the subject. He flings himself upon the confidence of Gen. Washington, makes avowal of the patriotism of the people of Vermont and their unequivocal attachment to the common cause, and regrets the aspersions cast against her "by her numerous and potent adversaries." He showed how the state was situated; that it formed the frontier of New York, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, who had used every art to divide her citizens, prejudice Congress against her, overturn her government and divide her territory among them, while her northern and western frontier were open to the easy access of a powerful and lawless enemy. That repeated applications made to Congress, for admission into the Union and insuring her protection, had been rejected; and resolutions passed, exparte, to embarrass and strike at the very existence of the state. Indeed, every article of defense, "even to pix-axes and spades," had been ordered by Congress out of the state; and New York had evacuated Skeensboro for the avowed purpose of exposing the state to the ravages of the common enemy. That the British officers, well knowing these things, made overtures that Vermont become a British colony, under the protection of the crown; that the communications received from them, by the advice of himself and council, were sent to Congress, in the hope that they would induce that body to admit Vermont into the Union, but without effect. That, in the fall of 1780, the prowess of the militia of the state, and the truce, including northern New York, saved Albany and Schenectady from falling a sacrifice to the enemy in that campaign. That, in the winter of '81, finding the enemy 7000 strong, he addressed circular letters to New York, and the New England States, "and also to your Excellency," stating the extreme circumstances of the state, and imploring their aid and alliance; as it was out of the power of the state to lay in military stores and support a body of men sufficient to defend the frontier. But to those letters no manner of answer was ever returned. That it appeared to him that the state was devoted to destruction from the sword of the enemy; and it seemed unjust that it should be thus forsaken, "as her citizens struck the first offensive blow against British usurpation, by putting the continent in possession of Ticonderoga, and more than 200 pieces of cannon, with Crown Point, St. Johns and all Lake Champlain."

*Dated at Arlington, Nov. 14, 1781. See Henry Stevens' papers, marked "Letters, 1781."

That the approaching campaign of 1781—defenceless and powerless as they were—looked gloomy to the citizens of Vermont, "and being thus drove to desperation by the injustice of those who should have been her friends, was obliged to adopt policy in the room of power." That Ira Allen's mission to Canada procured the exchange of prisoners, and other matters were entertained, that might serve the interests of the state, in its extreme critical situation, and not be injurious to the United States in its consequences. "That the plan succeeded,—the frontiers of this state were not invaded, and Lord George Germain's letter wrought upon Congress, and procured that from them, which the public virtue of this people could not." That last month, the enemy appeared in force at Ticonderoga, but were manœuvered out of their expedition; and they have returned into winter quarters in Canada—"that it may be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet: "I will put my hook in their nose, and turn them back by the way which they came, and they shall not come into this city (alias Vermont) saith the Lord."

The crisis of the Revolution having now passed, and Vermont having been substantially relieved from her entertainments with the enemy, and the all-absorbing topic of protecting her frontiers, her attention was again turned to the subject of recognition as an independent state and admission to the Union. Congress had already laid aside a portion of her armor and taken one step forward with the olive branch in her hand. She had passed resolutions inviting the delegates from Vermont to meet a committee of Congress to confer upon the subject; but made it an indispensable preliminary to admission, that she surrender to New Hampshire the territory east of Connecticut river, and to New York, west of a prolonged line from the north-west corner of Massachusetts; asserting at the same time that those sections clearly came within the mutual guarantee of territory contained in the articles of confederation between the original states. Both New York and New Hampshire, however, persisted in their original claims to the grants, and protested against any acts of Congress looking to a recognition.

As we take a view of public affairs at this hour, we find the attitude assumed by the hitherto insignificant state of Vermont, and the importance to which her policy had been magnified, had now become the topic of public attention and general alarm. The horrors of civil war growing out of the matter, stared the whole nation in the face; and the bright hopes that followed the overthrow of British power, in the capture of Lord Cornwallis, began to wane, under the fears of an intestine war that would upset all that had been gained. The eastern and western unions, taking a large portion of territory as well as population from the states of New York and New Hampshire, made Vermont a powerful adversary, and weakened her enemies; and the bursting of a shell, or the crack of a musket, producing the effusion of blood between these hostile states, would have been felt throughout the whole confederacy. And at this time the people of Vermont, over her entire expansion, were most firmly attached to their new state organization.

The fear entertained was, that the controversy betwen these states would endanger the cause of American liberty and independence; and every patriotic heart felt, that no other political consideration should interpose to prevent the consummation of so great a purpose. But the able and wily statesmen of Vermont, though as patriotic as any, yet counted upon these fears as their best ally in securing the liberty and independence of their own state; and they felt so deeply the wrongs they had suffered and the ignominy they had endured, saying nothing of the work they had done and the burthens they had borne in the common cause, that they justified themselves in persisting in their demand of recognition, without regard to consequences. This intensity on the part of the people terrified the nation, high and low; and from the indomitable prowess of her hardy sons, they looked upon Vermont as if she were an impregnable fortress, securely and triumphantly seated among her Green Mountain barriers. Even Gen. Stark, the hero of Bennington, and friend of Vermont, who was not apt to be alarmed at trifles, got a little excited on the subject, and expressed his fears of the result in a letter to Gen. Washington.*

Digitized by Google

But Washington, who was always cool, even under the most trying circumstances, sat like Jupiter among the clouds and directed the storm. No one felt the danger more than he, however; and his great solicitude for the cause he had cherished and fought for so long, prompted him to earnestly desire, at this state of public affairs, a peaceful solution of the controversy. He wrote to Gov. Chittenden† a long, high-toned and respectful letter, and among other things, expressed his ardent wish "to see the peace and union of his country preserved, and the just rights of the people of every part of it fully and firmly established." He considered the point of recognition substantially settled by Congress under their resolves of Aug. 7th and 21st: "Provided the new state is confined to certain described bounds." "It appears, therefore, to me," says he, "that the dispute of boundary is the only one that exists, and, that being removed, all further difficulties would be removed also, and the matter terminated to the satisfaction of all parties." He argued that Vermont had nothing to do but to return to her old limits, "and obtain an acknowledgment of independence and sovereignty" under the resolutions of Congress. "I persuade myself," says he, "you will see and acquiesce in the reason, the justice, and, indeed, the necessity, of such a decision—the point now in dispute is of the utmost political importance to the future union and peace of this great country."

He adds: "As you unbosomed yourself to me (as to the negotiations) I thought I had the greater right of speaking my sentiments openly and candidly to you. I have done so, and if they should produce the effects which I most sincerely wish, that of an honorable and amicable adjustment of a matter which, if carried to hostile lengths, may destroy the future happiness of my country, I shall have attained my end, while the enemy will be defeated of theirs."

This communication of Gen. Washington had an evident effect upon the policy of Vermont. At the approaching session of the legislature (in February) Gov. Chittenden laid it before that body, and after discussing the subject in a calm and deliberate manner, they passed a resolution* complying with the resolution of Congress of the 21st of August, and relinquishing all claims to jurisdiction beyond the bounds prescribed by Congress—(which substantially forms the present outlines of the state). Thus to secure the admission of Vermont into the confederacy and escape the dangers of civil war, the east and west unions were given up, greatly to the disappointment and dissatisfaction of the people of those sections, who were devotedly attached to the purpose of forming a part of the Green Mountain state. This separation was unwillingly made by the legislative body and people of Vermont; but the patriotism of the members, the safety of the country at large, and full confidence in the pledges of Congress for admission into the Union, with the arguments and earnest entreaty of the father of his country resting upon them, they could hardly do less. But this separation would probably never have taken place had the legislature and people of Vermont been aware that Congress stood ready to violate her pledges and betray them. As the matter stood, they of course put their trust in the promises of Congress: and Gov. Chittenden wrote to Gen. Washington congratulating him on the prospect of a speedy termination of the whole controversy. And the legislature sent on delegates to Congress to make a definitive close of the matter,

* December 27, 1781.
† January 1, 1782.

* Feb. 22, 1782.

Digitized by Google

in pursuance of the resolutions they had adopted.

The proceedings of the legislature were laid before Congress, and referred to a committee of that body who reported Vermont had fully complied with the resolutions of Congress, "and that the conditional promise of recognition and admission is thereby become absolute and necessary to be performed;" and proposed a resolution declaring Vermont a free, sovereign and independent state. When this report was read, Congress—not merely blind to the vital interests of the country, but guilty of the most high-handed treachery and breach of confidence—indefinitely postponed the subject. Upon this, the delegates took their leave, and immediately left for home.

Thus it was that Vermont, by the treachery of Congress, lost a large portion of her territory and numerical strength, and was left without the aid of the general government to defend her frontier against the common enemy. And now, after a struggle of so many years, attended with such strange and trying vicissitudes, and when all rejoiced in the hope and prospect of a final termination of the long-protracted struggle, "all was struck to earth again;" and Vermont stood in the same situation, as to her external relations, as she had for years and years before. But, notwithstanding, she lost not her patriotism and still held fast to the national cause.

The blow which Congress had thus deceitfully inflicted upon Vermont, was regarded by New York as fatal; and that her hopes and expectations for independence were now terminated forever. And in her great solicitude for the welfare of her rebellious children the legislature of New York (April 14, 1782) passed two several acts, one "for pardoning certain offenders," and the other "for quieting the minds of her inhabitants in the north-eastern section of her state." And guaranteeing to the people of Vermont all their lands, whether held under grants from New Hampshire, or from the authority of their own legislature; provided they return to their allegiance to the government of New York—thus taking compassion on their belligerent children and inviting them to return, as did the prodigal son, take shelter under the paternal roof and be comforted.

But the treacherous proceedings of Congress, brought about in a great measure under the influence of New York, produced a spirit of opposition and hatred in the people of Vermont deeper seated than ever; and the extreme kindness now proffered by New York was treated with the contempt it deserved. It was, moreover, believed by the people of Vermont, that the resolution of the 21st of August was held out by Congress as a bait to the legislature of the state, to entice them into measures which would reduce her strength and bring her to a condition of easy subjugation. And the purpose of maintaining the independence of the state, according to the boundaries thus deceptively held out by Congress, against all opposition, come from whatever source it might, became the fixed determination of the people of Vermont. And they quietly moved on, from month to month, strengthening and perfecting their own government.

But this state of affairs, for any great length of time, was not satisfactory to New York. The withdrawal of the continental troops left the northern frontier exposed, and it became necessary for the government of Vermont to make a draft of militia to defend her northern border; and this occasion was seized upon by New York to resist the draft, and again to oppose the authority of Vermont; and the south-easterly townships of the state were again "encouraged in their opposition by the governor of New York." Civil and military commissions were issued by New York to sundry persons, and a military organization effected, to enforce the laws of that state upon the citizens of Vermont.—Gov. Chittenden, as in the spring of 1779, sent a military force to put down the insurrection, under the command of Ethan Allen, who arrested the New York sheriff and other leaders of the insurgents, and committed them to prison. Some were fined, others banished not to return on pain of death, and their property confiscated.*

Upon this, Congress (Dec. 5) took up the subject and passed resolutions requiring Vermont to make full and ample restitution of property, to all such as had been deprived of it; that the persons banished be not molested on their return to their habitations, and that the United States take effectual measures to enforce said resolutions. Moreover, "that a copy of the foregoing resolutions be transmitted to Thomas Chittenden, Esq., of Bennington, in the district aforesaid, to be communicated to the people thereof."

*See Charles Phelps' letter to Congress, Oct. 10, 1782, Stevens' papers, "Letters 1782."

Digitized by Google

These unauthorized and insulting resolutions of Congress, were replied to by Gov. Chittenden with great force and severity, and cutting sarcasm. His letter was addressed to the President of Congress,* wherein he acknowledges the receipt of the resolutions of Congress of the 5th December, and reminds that body of their solemn resolutions to admit Vermont into the Union, on the performance of certain indispensable preliminaries; and confiding in the faith and honor of Congress, the legislature of Vermont had been induced to comply with the indispensable preliminaries required of them.—That the conditions required by Congress having been fulfilled by Vermont, became a fixed compact between the two governments, and that Congress had no power, either by the terms of former resolutions or the passing of subsequent ones, to abrogate that compact, without the consent of the state. "If, on the other hand, such solemn agreements are nothing, all faith, trust, or confidence, in the transactions of public bodies, is at an end." That these, in fact, were Congress' own principles; and in addition to this, he denied the right of Congress to controll the internal police of this or any other state.—He presumed "that Congress did not pretend to unlimited power, or to any other, than what had been delegated to them from the United States," under the articles of confederation.

"That this State, on revolutionary principles, has as good a right to independence as Congress;" and has an equal right to order Congress to receive and make restitution to criminals, that Congress has to order her.

He says, moreover, that the people of Vermont cannot submit to be resolved out of their independence "by the undue influence which the state of New York—their old adversary—has in Congress." That Vermont "will remain independent of New York, notwithstanding their artifice and power, while she has no controversy with the United States;" and he proceeds to advise Congress to leave the controversy to be settled by New York and Vermont, rather than embroil the confederacy with it; and closes by "soliciting a federal union with the United States, agreeable to the preliminary arrangement, which the committee of Congress have said has become absolute and necessary, on their part, to be performed, and from which this state will not recede."

Such were the sentiments of that high-toned, bold and sarcastic communication of Gov. Chittenden to the President of Congress.—Its arguments were not easily answered; its bitter irony and fearless chastisement of Congress for their deceit and breach of honor to Vermont, assumes the appearance of the same deliberation and power, that a high-minded father has over his refractory children. His letter evidently had its effect upon Congress, for it followed that no restitution of property or return of banished offenders took place. Congress made no attempt to enforce her resolutions of Dec. 5th, and Vermont went steady on her course, and conducted her internal affairs in her own way.

But the legislature and people of Vermont were not aware, at this time, that an event had already taken place that gave a new aspect to public affairs, and so far as Vermont was concerned, completely turned the table as to her interest and policy. The preliminary articles of peace between the United States and Great Britain, had been signed at Paris (Jan. 20, 1783), more than a month before, and this interesting result of the revolution soon became known, and produced general joy in the land. The 45th parallel of north latitude was fixed upon by the treaty as the northern boundary of the United States, between Connecticut river and the St. Lawrence. This separated Vermont from the British possessions in Canada, and the hope which had lingered in the minds of the British authorities of holding dominion over her, was now extinguished forever; and Vermont was relieved at once of any further thought or trouble in protecting her frontiers against the public enemy.

At this time, having fully established her own state government, she was defacto enjoying the advantages of an independent sovereignty, owing allegiance to no other power; and she began to feel content to enjoy the blessings of nationality, without the aid or interposition of Congress. The heavy expenses of the war had left the United States in circumstances of great embarrassment, and it was beyond the power of the government to remedy the difficulty, or satisfy the people; but more especially the army, which remained unpaid. The power of Congress under the old confederation was a mere rope of sand, and they were unable to adopt any financial measures, which did not subject them to the opposition and contempt of the individual states; especially such as grew restless under their burthens. But the course taken by Congress in relation to Vermont, denying her right of representation, and refusing to acknowledge her existence as a state, kept her free from the burthen of the national debt, and had a strong tendency to invite immigration into the state; and the policy of immediate admission into the Union, was now changed into a general purpose to avoid it as long as possible—it being then acknowledged that the people of Vermont were in a less embarrassed situation, and more prosperous, than the people of any other state.

*Dated at Bennington, Jan. 9, 1783.

Digitized by Google

In the above views Gov. Chittenden, though looking for ultimate recognition, fully concurred; and the matter of admission into the Union was for a time at rest. In fact, the question did rest until called into life again, by other interests and parties than those of Vermont. But New York was bound to make one more effort to reclaim to her jurisdiction and sovereignty, what she was pleased to call "the pretended State of Vermont." The spirit of opposition to the authority of the state had not been wholly extinguished in the southern towns of Windham county, and New York sought to rake open the embers, and try her hand once more, in exciting hostility to the authority of the state. About this time the New York legislature passed (as the case ended) this laughable resolve: "That if she must recur to force, for the preservation of her lawful authority, the impartial world will pronounce that none of the bloodshed, disorder, or disunion, which may ensue, can be imputable to this legislature."

Moved once more by the support tendered by New York, a large number of the inhabitants of Guilford, Brattleboro, and some adjacent towns, held their meetings and conventions as loyal subjects of that state, appointed their town officers—several towns having two sets,—and contending with loyal citizens of Vermont in various ways; even to frequent collisions. Indeed the opposition to the authority of Vermont became so strongly fermented, that there was neither peace, safety, or social rights, and privileges, allowed to the new-state people of those towns. In this demonstration of open hostility to the government of the state, Gov. Chittenden for the third time ordered Ethan Allen to call out a portion of the militia, to enforce the laws. Allen marched from Bennington with 100 men, crossed the mountain, and made a descent upon Guilford. He took up his position in the midst of the insurgents, and the first move he made, issued a proclamation to them as follows: "I, Ethan Allen, declare, that unless the people of Guilford peaceably submit to the authority of Vermont, the town shall be made as desolate as were the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah." Upon this the "Yorkers" fixed upon Allen, and without waiting for much ceremony, he fell upon them, and all were taken prisoners or dispersed.

After this affair Gov. Chittenden, in a communication to the President of Congress (April 26, 1784), observes:* "As to the bloody propositions of New York, the authorities of this state have only to remark, that Vermont does not wish to enter into a war with the state of New York; but that she will act on the defensive, and expect that Congress and the twelve states will observe a strict neutrality, and let the contending states settle their own controversy." During the winter of 1784, divers skirmishes took place at Brattleboro and Guilford, in which several persons were wounded, and one "Yorker" killed—and, before the close of that year, the insurgents either submitted to the authority of Vermont and took the oath of allegiance, or left the state. Thus closed all attempts on the part of New York, to extend her authority over Vermont, by armed opposition to her laws.

The troubles of Vermont, growing out of her external relations, being now substantially terminated, her public men and people naturally turned their attention to the things, that more directly concerned the internal affairs of the state. The rubbish of a long and inveterate controversy, now the smoke of the conflict had passed away, had to be gathered up, and like faithful mariners, after a storm at sea, the latitude and longitude of the ship must be taken. Although the condition of the state was far more tolerable than most of the states in the confederacy, as witnessed by the rebellion in Massachusetts and other states, yet the neglect of private affairs, in the protracted struggle against her enemies, left her without a treasury, and her people comparatively poor and embarrassed. The pressure of creditors, which is always hardest when debtors are least able to pay, produced endless suits for the collection of debts; and the result was that lawyers, courts and sheriffs, being the operating machinery by which this course of litigation was carried forward, became odious in the eyes of the people, and they held conventions execrating these functionaries in the severest terms. In the mean time an election of governor and state officers was at hand, and violent parties were formed.

* Stevens' papers, "Letters, 1782."

Gov. Chittenden took special pains to pacify the people and keep up a due observance of law and order. He issued an address to them in a calm and dignified tone, presenting the causes of the distress, divers measures for relief, and the assurance that a better state of things would soon come. His address was well calculated to meet the sentiment of the farmers and laboring classes; but had little tending to allay the ferment which had arisen between them and the traders, lawyers and sheriffs. Indeed, so indignant were they that they came out against the governor in a series of articles, in reply to his address, couched in the most vindictive and reproachful language. At that particular crisis some measure of relief was demanded to meet the public distress—credit was extended, suits brought and costs multiplied; property could not be sold even on execution, as no one had money to buy; that relic of barbarism, imprisonment for debt (though now happily abolished), was the end of almost every execution; and the prisons were filled with debtors, mere debtors, men and women, grey headed, young and middle aged, honest and hard working, expiating the crime of poverty in close confinement, as felons now expiate their crimes in state prison. No wonder that the sensibilities of the oppressed and suffering class were alive to the subject, and that mobs began to collect and threaten the further execution of the laws.

During the progress of this election many amusing articles appeared pro and con in the Vermont Gazette, printed at Bennington, which had adopted for its motto the following liberal couplet:

"With generous freedom for our constant guide,
We scorn control and print for every side."

The contest was really one between debtor and creditor, and by a natural transition tended to array the general mass of the people against the courts, traders, lawyers and sheriffs, who mainly composed the creditors. This furnished a happy occasion for the poet laureate of the day* to indulge in a few Hudibrastic lines. In allusion to the times, he says:

"By hardy creditors oppressed,
Who of our ruin make a jest,
While to assist them in their plans,
The law has furnished numerous clans
Of judges, justices and lawyers,
Relentless as their vile employers;
Sheriffs and deputies by scores,
That still are thundering at our doors;
And if we dare not give them battle,
Seize on our hogs, and sheep, and cattle,
And to our creditors transfer them,
Who, with themselves and lawyers, share them.
Is not the Scripture full of phrases,
That speak aloud all poor men's praises?
Declaring them God's chosen ones,
To whom the earth of right belongs?
Forbidding all t' oppress their debtors,
Whom God esteems so much their betters?
Is 't not declared damnation waits
All creditors of great estates?
That they 'll be saved less easily
Than camel pierces needle's eye?
Their good, far more than ours, we seek,
To make them humble, poor and meek,
That they may share those heavenly mansions,
To which they now have no pretensions."†

But even in that time of bitterness and trial, a creditor of the more kind-hearted and feeling sort would here and there be found, as will appear from the following dun,‡ published in the same paper:

"Sim. Harmon, Jr., late made known
He'd long out-standing debts in town,
And beg'd his old acquaintance all,
As they pass'd by his house to call,
And just to look over old affairs
He fear'd had slipt their minds for years.
Nor did he call like greedy dog
But told them he had still some grog,
Which he was willing to bestow,
Whether they paid him off or no."

*Tom. Rowley.

†See Vermont Gazette, Aug. 21, 1786, in H. Stevens' papers.

‡Nov. 15, 1786.

Digitized by Google

Suffice it to say the Governor was re-elected, but the times remained stormy. His advice to observe law and order, keep the peace, and maintain a spirit of kindness and forbearance towards each other,did not meet the approval of some hot-headed restless spirits; and those especially in the counties of Rutland and Windsor, collected in a riotous manner and attempted to overawe and break up the courts; but the courts were sustained by a large majority of the people of the better class, who took the field, armed and equipped, to defend the constituted authorities. They chose to work out a redress of grievances in some other way, than by mob-law and brute force.

This manly state of public sentiment, in connection with the relief produced by the acts of the legislature, especially the act making specific articles of property a lawful tender* as recommended by Gov. Chittenden, had a tendency to empty the prisons and check litigation.

During these troubles, which were more trying and difficult to contend with than open hostilities with an external foe, his attention was chiefly directed to the work of holding the popular mind to a continuous and sacred observance of the laws. These were established by the people, in spite of the pressure of the bordering states, and of Congress; and the pride of the little republic, after having so triumphantly declared her independence, would not allow her to descend to the humiliation of nullifying her own laws, and returning to the state of anarchy which preceded them. But the pressure of the times was so great that it was a most laborious and difficult matter to hold things steady with a people so long accustomed to act without restraint, against the authorities of New York; and that class, who are always impatient of restraint, in every government however well regulated, would even then have broken down the magistrates and lawful authority of the state, had it not been for the steady course pursued by the chief magistrate and his patriotic supporters. He was not however so bigoted an observer of the construction or technicalities of written law, as to make sacrifice of the clear public interest, in order to conform to their letter. He believed and acted on the principle of a higher law than any that could be indited by man—the law of necessity and self-preservation.

With these liberal views he was ready to adopt such measures from time to time, as the obvious necessities of the people demanded, without the strictest adherence to written rules; guided by his peculiar foresight and knowledge of practical means and ends. Thus the acts for quieting the titles to lands, and securing settlers in the possession of them, were also the result of his contrivance and recommendation. These measures were adopted because they were regarded as absolutely necessary to hold the government together; and although beyond the letter of any authority,* they were nevertheless the proper application of means for self-preservation. Without those acts not only the personal liberty, but the rights and property of the inhabitants, must have been sacrificed, and the effect upon the existence of the new state government may readily be seen. His policy, however, was not carried through, without opposition,—his views were not radical enough to meet the wishes of the destructives, nor technical enough to satisfy the ideas of the sticklers of close interpretation; and this hydra-headed opposition kept on fomenting against him. In the mean time another element of discord came in, growing out of our relations with France, and the discussions that arose on the adoption of the constitution of the United States, on which the old federal and democratic parties were formed. Under the pressure of these sources of agitation, the old patriarchal head of Vermont, who had secured her existence as a state, was flung overboard (1789) by a selfish and ungrateful faction. There being no choice by the people, Moses Robinson was elected in joint assembly by the legislature. His political opponents, however, even on this occasion, professed great attachment to the old Governor; and to cover up their sins appointed a committee to prepare an address of thanks to him, for his past services. They did so, asking him to accept "all that a noble and generous mind can give, or wish to receive—their gratitude and warmest thanks;" adding, "and it is our earnest wish, that in your advanced age and retirement from the arduous task of public life, you may enjoy all the blessings of domestic ease." Notwithstanding their crocodile tears, and the regrets they suffered at his retirement "from the arduous task of public life," he was the next seven years in succession, re-elected by the people to the office of Governor—a compliment without a parallel; and a rebuke as severe to his flatterers as it was amusing to his friends.

*An act, if not justified by the constitution, was by a higher law—the law of necessity.

* Though not so regarded at the time,

In the mean time the controversy with New York, though hushed forever, remained unclosed. Vermont kept on in the quiet enjoyment of her local institutions and improvements, and Congress began to see that the high ground taken by Gov. Chittenden had the better of the argument, and that they, under the confederation, had no legitimate power over him or the state he represented. This was one ground why the statesmen of that day sought to adopt a Federal Constitution and form a more perfect union—looking to the settlement of the controversy with New York, and the admission of Vermont, that she in future might be identified in her rights and obligations with the other states, and share with them the national burdens. And when the United States Constitution was adopted, Congress turned upon its heel, and now took special pains to conciliate Vermont, and induce her to enter the copartnership of states, adopt the federal Constitution* and take her share in the fortunes of the great Republic. New York also now took high and honorable ground; the boundaries of Vermont were defined, her independence recognized, and the difficulties of her admission into the Union removed—leaving her people in the full enjoyment of their lands in fee, without hindrance from New York claimants; and on February 18th, 1791, she was admitted into the Union by Act of Congress, without a dissenting vote. Thus this comedy of land claimants, which had been acted upon the stage for twenty-six years, exhibiting all manner of social, civil and belligerent phases, culminated in the birth of a new state—the firstborn child of this great and glorious Union.

This was the crowning event of Gov. Chittenden's life. The great struggle was over, and our gallant little state, seated among these green hills and mountains, under the guidance of her sagacious and patriotic leaders, rose from a mere backwoods settlement, driven to acts of vigilance and desperation by the persecution and hostility of inveterate foes, to the high position of an independent state of the American Union—the first star ever annexed to the old thirteen stars and stripes—and no loyal chronicler as yet can say that she has ever, whether in the council chamber or on the battlefield, dishonored that illustrious national banner.

After the admission of Vermont into the Union, and during the remaining six years of Gov. Chittenden's administration, nothing of signal importance characterized his political movements or history. The state now occupied a position wholly new to her people, who had attained the end and secured the rights they had so long contended for; they were now established in the repose of freedom and independence, and undisturbed peace. The whole heart and soul of Gov. Chittenden had been devoted to the accomplishment of the very condition now occupied by her; and it is no disparagement to others to say that no man in the state had done as much as he to attain this end. His disinterested motives and long public services had endeared him to the people, and they regarded him as their political father. So great, indeed, was his influence that demagogues did not venture to assail him; and every species of political intrigue and corruption was held in check under the influence and power of his example.

Under his wise administration the new state was rapidly settled by an enterprising and intelligent immigration, mostly from the states of Massachusetts and Connecticut; and energetic measures were pursued for her moral and intellectual advancement, as well as in the improvement of her civil policy and laws. The work of establishing schools, academies, and a state university; and of revising the laws and digesting a code, engrossed the attention of the legislature and people. And no one felt a deeper responsibility, and took a more lively interest in these highly important measures than Gov. Chittenden. It will thus be seen that he was fitted both for peaceful and stormy times, which problem was fully solved by the fact that his popularity and influence increased from year to year, until his public duties and life were brought to a close together.*

* The Constitution of the United States was ratified by a Convention of the people of Vermont, Thomas Chittenden president, Jan. 6th, 1791, by a vote of 105 to 4.

The domestic habits of Gov. Chittenden were of the most simple and unaffected kind. While Governor of the state, he occupied his rude log house at Williston for some years, before he felt it necessary to erect a better. Agriculture was his favorite occupation, and his farm was never neglected for want of his personal charge and supervision. His visitors, who occasionally called to pay their respects to the Governor, as often found him in the field with his laborers as in his sitting-room; and were received* with the same cordiality in the one place as in the other.† Indeed his absolute aversion to all empty outside forms and trappings directed him always in the plain, unostentatious path of utility. That to him was worth nothing which had not an intrinsic value, or might not be made instrumental in producing some permanent good. The blandishments of dress, and the silly, precise formula of etiquette had no charms for his philosophy; but, on the other hand, he regarded them as the certain evidences of human weakness, and beneath the dignity of an honest heart and sound head. He was a careful observer of men and things; in fact, this was the great lesson of his education; which a long and peculiar experience and a wide intercourse with persons of all ranks, civil, military, plebian and noble had taught him. This experience, combined with a sort of intuitive power, fitted him for almost any emergency of the times, and he ever seemed to be in preparation to decide upon any difficult question, or enter upon any new or untried measure, without hesitation or doubt. Ethan Allen said of him:—"That he was the only man he ever knew who was sure to be right in all, even the most difficult and complex cases, and yet could not tell or seem to know why it was so." The secret was, his mind, heart and judgment, all centered upon one point; and that point was justice.

*He resigned the office of Governor a few weeks before his death, on account of his sickness, and died Aug. 25th, 1797.

†He was sometimes fond of a good joke, and his position was not in the way of enjoying it. As proof of this, a genteel stranger one day rode up, and seeing a man splitting wood at the door, asked him to be so kind as to hold his horse a few minutes, while he stepped in to see the Governor. His request was very cheerfully and promptly complied with. But what was the gentleman's surprise and chagrin, after a series of polite bows at the door and inquiries after the Governor, to learn that the servant who held his horse by the bit was the veritable dignitary himself!

Hon. Horace Allen.

[From Mr. Milliken's Vermont Record.]

My last classmate died in Potsdam, N. Y., May 25, 1866—Hon. Horace Allen, aged seventy-seven. He was a native of Williston, Vt. I had known him fifty-seven years. He was a member of the class of 1812 in U. V. M. In 1809 and '10 Ira H. Allen was a member, but he, with more than half the class, left before graduation. Ira H. Allen has lately departed. So strong was the resemblance of Horace and Ira 57 years ago, a stranger would probably thought them brothers. In age they differed but little, in stature and build they were much alike—their weight about 140 lbs. each, and I may add, in character each was irreproachable.

Of Ira I have known but little for more than 50 years, but with Horace I have corresponded, visited him several times, the last time not long since. Of his standing in P. I am well informed. For about forty years he was a pillar in the Presbyterian Church. It is further remarkable that these two young Allens lived to an advanced age; sustained similar stations in life, and died near the same time, with Hon. prefixed to each name. Were I to indulge my feelings in respectful remembrance of the above, my youthful companions, especially of Horace, my beloved chum, I fear the Record would exclude me for my prolixity. The memory of departed friends, like the music of carol, is sweet, but mournful to the soul. T.

Rev. Myron Winslow, D. D., LL. D.

BY REV. PLINY H. WHITE, OF COVENTRY.

[From the Congregational Quarterly.]

This eminent missionary died at the Cape of Good Hope, on his way from India to America, October 22, 1864, aged seventy-four years, ten months, and eleven days.

He was born in Williston, Vt., December 11, 1789, the son of Nathaniel and Anna (Kellogg) Winslow, and the elder brother of the late Rev. Gordon Winslow, D. D., and Rev. Hubbard Winslow, D. D. His ancestry is traceable back to Kenelm Winslow, of whom English history makes mention in the sixteenth century and whose grandson was one of the Mayflower Pilgrims. The two Governors Winslow, of Massachusetts, were of the same stock.

He intended to be a merchant, and at the age of fourteen entered a store as clerk, where he continued till he was twenty-one years old, and then established himself in business in Norwich, Ct. Here he was successfully employed for two years. In the mean time the serious impressions of which he had been the subject from childhood greatly deepened, and resulted at length in his hopeful conversion. From that time he felt a strong conviction that he ought to preach the gospel, and to preach it to the unevangelized nations. In the very letter in which he announced to his parents his conversion, he also announced his intention to abandon the profitable business in which he was engaged, and give himself to the service of Christ among the heathen. Having had a thorough academical education, he was able, after a year and a half of preparation, some of it being made while he was still prosecuting his mercantile business, to enter a junior at Middlebury College in 1813. He was graduated in 1815.

Digitized by Google

In January, 1816, he entered Andover Theological Seminary, and was there graduated in 1818. During the last vacation of his junior year, and the two vacations of his senior year, he traveled in New England as agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and was very successful in collecting funds. He was ordained as a missionary in the Tabernacle Church, Salem, Mass., November 4, 1818, together with Pliny Fisk and others. Rev. Moses Stuart, D. D., preached the sermon. He embarked at Boston, June 8, 1819, on brig Indus, bound for Calcutta, where he arrived after a voyage of about five months. Thence he proceeded to Ceylon, which he reached December 14, 1819, and took up his residence at Oodooville, July 4, 1820. There he labored sixteen years, and then was transferred to Madras, arriving there August 18, 1836. His biography during his residence in India would be no less nor other than the history of the missions there. He was the life and soul of them, and no man has done better service than he to the cause of religion and letters in that country. He founded the Madras mission, was the general secretary and financial agent of that and other missions, was President of the Madras College and head of all the native schools, and had the care of a native Church of several hundred members. At the time of his death he was the oldest missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, having been in the service nearly forty-six years.

His literary labors were numerous, and some of them of the very highest importance. During his senior year in the Seminary and in the following autumn he wrote a duodecimo volume of four hundred and thirty-two pages, entitled "A History of Missions, or History of the principal attempt to propagate Christianity among the Heathen." This was published at Andover by Flagg and Gould in 1819, and was very serviceable in enlightening the public mind on the subject of which it treated. His next volume was a memoir of his first wife, Mrs. Harriet L. Winslow, which is one of the standard volumes of the American Tract Society. His "Hints on Missions," published by M. W. Dodd, New York, in 1856, was written on his passage from India to America in 1855, as a sort of digest of his experiences and observations during a missionary life of thirty-seven years. Several of his occasional sermons and addresses were published in pamphlet. He furnished a very large amount of correspondence for the Missionary Herald, the New York Observer, and other periodicals.

But the crowning literary labors of his life were the translation of the Bible into Tamil, and the preparation of a Tamil-English Lexicon. The full title of the last named work is, "A Comprehensive Tamil and English Dictionary of High and Low Tamil." It is a work of prodigious labor and great value, and occupied a large share of his time for more than twenty years. It extends to nearly a thousand quarto pages, and contains more than sixty-seven thousand Tamil words, being thirty thousand five hundred and fifty-one more words than can be found in any other dictionary of that language. So "comprehensive" is it, that it includes the astronomical, astrological, mythological, botanical, scientific, and official terms, together with the names of authors, heroes, and gods. It is thus a perfect thesaurus of Tamil learning, conducting him who uses it, not only into the language, but into the literature of the language, and giving him a knowledge of the philosophy, the religion, the superstitions, and the customs of the Hindoos. For this noble contribution to Oriental literature, Dr. Winslow received the highest encomiums from the press of India and England, and from literary and official sources.

He received the degree of A. M., from Yale, in 1818; D. D., from Harvard, in 1858; and LL. D., from Middlebury, in 1854.

He married (1), January 19, 1819, Harriet W. Lathrop, daughter of Charles Lathrop, of Norwich, Ct. By her he had six children—Charles Lathrop, born January 12, 1821, died May 24, 1832 (a child of uncommon promise, a memoir of whom was published by the American Tract Society); Harriet Maria, born February 28, 1822, died November 27, 1825; Joanna, born Feb. 5, 1825 (adopted and reared by Peletiah Perit, Esq., of New York, and married, 1st, Rev. Mr. Clark; 2d, George S. King, of Florida, now a Major-General in the Confederate Army); George Morton, born May 12, 1827, died August 15, 1828; Harriet Lathrop, born April 19, 1829, died September 1, 1861 (married Rev. John W. Dulles); Eliza Coit, born January 4, 1831, died August 11, 1861 (adopted by Marshal O. Roberts, of New York, and married Henry M. Leavitt.) Mrs. Winslow died January 14, 1833, and he married (2), April 23, 1835, Mrs. Catherine (Waterbury) Carman, a sister of Rev. J. B. Waterbury, D. D., of New York, and by her had one child, Catherine Waterbury, born February 2, 1837, died September 29, 1837. She died September 23, 1837, and a memoir of her, by her brother, was published soon after. He married (3), September 2, 1838, Annie Spiers, of Madras, a grand-daughter of Lord Dundas, of England, and by her had Charles, born June 5, 1839; Myron, Jr., born August 28, 1840; Archibald Spiers, born June 10, 1843, died August 10, 1845. She died June 20, 1843, and he married (4), March 12, 1845, Mrs. Mary W. (Billings) Dwight, widow of Rev. R. O. Dwight. She died April 20, 1852; and he married (5), May 20, 1857, Ellen Augusta Reed, of Boston.

Digitized by Google

MILITARY CHAPTER.

[CONTINUED FROM PAGE 719.]

CHARLOTTE.

A list of names of persons who volunteered into the service of the United States, since the outbreak of the present war, from the town of Charlotte:

Cassius F. Newell,* Job Potter, Joseph Gravel, John Coleman, Henry Wilder, Truman C. Naramore, Geo. W. Spear, John Quinlin, Michael Quinlin, James Davis, James H. Abel, Joseph Kehoe, Michael Kehoe, Archibald Pool, Daniel Scofield, Clark S. Parks, Abner Fonda, John Bissett, R. W. Barton, Mitchel Macy, John Daniels, Chas. Daniels, Frank Guyett, John Laflam, Geo. D. Sherman, John Franklin, Henry Kuff, Alford Burnham.

The above volunteers enlisted for three years, or during the war; the following for nine months:

Milo A. Williams, 2d Lieutenant; James Washburn, Heman Hyde, Alonzo E. Root, Gideon D. Prindle, Gilbert J. Barton, Wm. P. Barton, William N. Lincoln, Joseph Guillett, Joseph Bissett, Myron Williams, Henry Drum, Samuel S. Page. Horace Delomater, Geo. A. Clark, Benj. H. Taggart, Hiram Bishop, Frank R. Hill.

D. L. SPEAR, Selectman.

Charlotte, Nov. 29, 1862.

COLCHESTER.

First Regiment, 3 months men.

Co. H.†—James M. Read, Franklin Austin, H. F. Allen (also in 5th Regt.)

Second Regiment.

John Lanegan, Captain; E. P. Whitcher, John Baraby (also in 6th Regt.), James Gafney (groom to Colonel).

Third Regiment.

Co. B.—Amos Hopkins.

Co. K.—William Bouker, George Killam, Geo. Rice, Joshua O. Service, Wolfred Tatro, Edward Laffean.

Fifth Regiment.

Adoniram N. Austin, Quartermaster.

Co. I.—Heman F. Allen, H. W. Fuller, Joseph Fountain, Wallace W. Holmes, John Kelley, Charles Myers, Josephas H. Thatcher, Alexander Scott.

Co. K.—Porter Herring, Charles Urie.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. I.—John Baraby (also in 2d Regt.), Josiah Dupany, George E. Smith, James E. McEwen (also in 13th Regt.), Wyllys B. Jourdan, James Henry, George N. Monger.

Co. K.—William Church (died of his wounds), John Kelley.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—John Kavino, George M. Henry, James Gafney (also in 2d Regt.)

Eighth Regiment.

Co. B.—Joseph Baraby (also in 13th Regt.)

Co. I.—Joseph Henry, —— McHenry.

Thirteenth Regiment, 9 months men.

Co. D.—John Bushman, A. J. Beeman, Willie Blakeley, Joseph Baraby (also in 8th Regt.), Jos. Croto, Wm. Crosby, Josiah Carey, W. T. Calvert, Julius Densmore, Geo. Fenwick, Wesley Forest, Edward Freeman, Udney Farnsworth, Seth Giffin, John A. Greenough, John Greenwood, Samuel Hand, Thomas Hodgkinson, Eben Johnson, John Johnson, John Kelley, Francis Laveler, Geo. W. Lee, John Lyon, James E. McEwen, William McIntyre, William Marsh, George Myers, William D. Munson, Captain; James Morrison, Joseph Minor, Henry M. Avoy, Robert Powers, Richard Powers, Joseph Rhone, John Rolfe, 2d Lieutenant; William Sheridan, M. P. Sculler, Royal Sheridan, George Stevens, Joseph Travasee, Erasmus Tyler, M. W. Thompson, Harry H. Talcott, W. A. Wheeler, George Wright, Milen Wilson.

First Battery of Artillery.

Morris M. Goodwin, Aiken Brooks, Joseph Brooks, Henry Duncan, Adolphus Green, Edwin Greenleaf, Andrew Shiott, Henry Their, Peter Villemaire, John Walsworth, Marcus Wright.

Sharpshooters.

Seymour F. Norton, Edward Dupeau, Adrian G. Nay, Benj. Rowe.

Cavalry.

L. B. Platt, Colonel; resigned.

Co. A.—F. A. Platt, Captain, resigned; Ellis B. Edwards, 1st Lieutenant;* Andrew Shiott, Samuel Allen, John Benjamin, Chas. Devino (died of sickness), Edwin Fisk, Lester Green, Argalus Harmon, Homer Hawley, James Kelley, Wyllys Lyman, Pliney Moffat, Ichabod Mattocks, John Upham, Christie Gordon, William Devano.

Co. L.—William A. Perry, Abraham Burlette, Eben. Lord, Albert Bliss, Robert Pollinger, Hosea B. Nash, Josiah A. Fobes, Arabant E. Fobes, Horace N. Irish, Charles F. Woodward, Lewis Strong, George L. McBride, George S. Brownell, Andrew A. Smith, Calvin A. Irish, Homer C. Irish, Rufus D. Thompson, Leonard E. Blatcherly, George H. Duncan, William S. Greenleaf, Joseph Burnor, Timothy Keefe, Michael Haley, James O'Daniel.

New York Co. of Zouaves.—John Ants.

Twelfth U. S. Infantry.—John Frazer.

* The companies and regiments not returned.

† Called the "Burlington Light Guard."

* E. B. Edwards is also returned from Richmond, his native town; but when he enlisted he resided in Colchester.

Fourteenth U. S. Infantry.—Wm. Fitzpatrick.

Assistant Paymaster, U. S. Navy.—Luther L. Penniman.

102 Regiment, New York Infantry.—Adrian E. Nay.*

ESSEX.

Second Regiment.

Co. A.—John Lavene, Henry Brush.

Co. E.—Hosea M. Gorton.

Co. G.—John Ryon, James Ryon, Frank Taylor, John H. Bell, Lafevor Perkins, Millford Taylor, George Arnold, Henry Nichols, Myron D. Isham, Stephen Cox, Orman P. Ray, Loyal Remington, Norman I. Nichols.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. K.—John McGuffin, James Foley, Timothy W. Downer.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. F.—Nathan Maxfield, Luther C. Norton.

Co. I.—Norman A. Baker, George Austin, Willard F. Blood, Henry T. Mosley, Lyman S. Williams, Wm. B. Dunlap, Lovell S. Bradley, Ruben Austin, Emerson E. Austin, Albert Austin, George H. Brown, Christopher C. Fisher, David Davidson, Buel B. Mellen, Oscar A. Scribner, Nelson Prior, William Prior, Leander Pocket, Thomas Casey, Alexander Renough, Wesley Haselton, Captain; James Burrett, Truman W. Blood, Alfred L. Case, Barna Mattimor, Daniel Raymond, Henry H. Cota, Lemuel B. Page, George W. Tubbs, Lorton L. Lathrop, Geo. W. Prior, Norman Woodworth, James Bagley, John Fleming, Richard Downs, David H. Castle.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—John B. Page, George W. Page, Branscomb Perigo, Lewis Tatro, Magna Camel, Joseph Camel, George Scribner.

Co. E.—Myron Owen.

Eighth Regiment.

John Chase, Edward Salters.

Ninth Regiment.

Elias L. Brownell, Alfred F. Sawyer.

Co. F.—Leonard S. Witherby, Henry S. Bradley, Nathan A. Williams, Augustus King, Joseph Peppin.

Tenth Regiment.

Co. B—Alpha M. Austin, Francis Austin.

Twelfth Regiment.

Co. C.—Henry F. Griffin.

Emmett Guards.—David T. Hard.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Mark Day, Charles W. Atherton, Thomas Calvert.

Co. F.—George Bliss, Harmon H. Ballou, Cassius M. Booth, Hall Woodworth, Lucius M. Booth, James N. Gates, Alfred Olmsted, Frederick Slater.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—Malcomb F. Frost.

Co. L.—Albert F. Sawyer.

Sharpshooters.

William Domagg.

Co. H.—George Chase, Edgar H. Beach, Hannibal Titchout, Amos Greely, Heman Austin, Joel Ellis.

[From Wm. B. Weston.]

HINESBURGH.

First three months' Regiment.

Edward Knox, Charles Marshall, Rufus Place, Wm. A. Martin, Chester Carpenter, Tuffil Bissonett, John Bostwick.

The above were in the "Burlington Light Guards."

Second Regiment.

Co. C.—Antonio Ash, Hiram Bassett, Thomas Goodrich, Amos Hall, Sumner Place.

Co. G.—Frank Colt, Alexander Bennett, Oscar Palmer, Henry Wilcox, Anson H. Weed (1st Lieut.); Joseph Larose, Ambrose Bissonett, James Condon, Benjamin Gerough, Rufus Irish, Miron C. Palmer, Orin Powell.

Co. K.—Henry Lyman.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. F.—Alfred Bonner, William Buckley, Eleazer Renslow.

Co. K.—Balona Bennett.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. F.—Joseph Lapier.

Co. K.—Henry Durand.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—Tobey Burke, Willard Ray, Charles Proctor, Horace Perry, Edward Knox, Chester Carpenter (2d Lieut).

Ninth Regiment.

Co. F.—Eugene Viele (1st Lieut); Lewis Wilcox, Loren S. Walker, Antonio Currivoo, James M. Carpenter, John Bosier, Antonio Bosier, Samuel B. Ash, Silas Nichols, Jared Barker, Charles Bennett, Stephen Parker, James Cullighan, Daniel A. Foss, James P. Robbins, Doctor S. Place, Timothy Steady, 2d, John Austin, David C. Phillips, Geo. Patrick, Jed. Cummings.

Tenth Regiment.

John Wells, Henry Larose, Enos Douglass.

Twelfth Regiment.

Co. A.—Albert Tyler, Guy Irish, Asa Elliot.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. B.—Frank I. Tyler.

Fourteenth Regiment.

Co. G.—John H. Allen (1st Lieut.); Sherman Baldwin, Edmund W. Baldwin, Tuffil

*Others enlisted later in the war.

Digitized by Google

Bissonett, Marble Bissonett; Louis Bissonett, Napoleon Bissonett, Guy Burritt, Guy Boynton, Henry Fraser, Patrick Furlong, John Houghtelin, Peter Lavigne; Joseph Lavigne, Peter Lavally, Henry Lamos, John Leonard, William A. Martin, Leonard Meech, Charles E. Mead, James Palmer, Herman A. Post, Emerson Place, Henry Pease, Henry Ray, Henry Steady, John Sadlier, Ralph E. Weller.

Cavalry.

George Nimblet, Mitchell Finney, Orange Baldwin, James A Davis.

Second Company Sharpshooters.

Elijah Powell.

Enlisted into the Regulars.

John Condon, Edward Bró, Allen Blackman, Otis Cole, William Keese.

HUNTINGTON.

List of men furnished for the war from Huntington, under the different calls made by Government.

VOLUNTEER THREE YEARS MEN.

Volunteers for three years, credited previous to call for 300,000 men, 1863:

Second Regiment.

Co. D.—Quincy F. Thurston.
Co. G.—Roderick White.

Third Regiment.

Co. F.—Hiram Shambeau.
Co. K.—Wm. H. Emmons.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. B.—James K. Cutting.
Co. K.—Edward H. James, Geo. P. Morris, George Sprague.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. G.—Harry H. Wright.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. E.—John W. Emmons, George Ring, Lucius Streeter, Alfred Swinger.

Eighth Regiment.

Co. C.—Cornelius Putnam, Lawrence Swinger.

Ninth Regiment.

Co. F.—Edson R. Cobb, George W. Cobb, John Clark, Amos O. Gorton, William W. Kimball, Wallace White.

Tenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Jos. J. Lyons, Colburn E. Wells, Martin V. B. Alger.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—Ezra S. Doty, Jeremiah Haskins, Rufus Haskins, Abner J. Loveland, Silas Moses, Orville Rounds, Sylvester Sprague, Henry E. Sweet, Levi A. Taft, Milo S. Taft, Charles M. Wait, Ephraim W. Wheeler, George H. Wheeler.
Co. L.—Loren Browe.

Credit under call of Oct. 17, 1863, for 300,000 volunteers, and subsequent calls:

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—George O. Chamberlin, Alpheus Swinger.
Co. E.—Alvah C. Ring.
Co. F.—Andrew J. Collins.
Co. K.—Benjamin Austin, Ira S. Bunker, Truman Swinger.

Ninth Regiment.

Co. C.—Hiland D. Hill.
Co. H.—John Corey.

Tenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Randall W. Wells.

Eleventh Regiment.

Quartermaster, Buel J. Derby.
Co. D.—Thomas Clary, William W. Kimball, Oliver J. Spooner.
Co. K.—Charles Drinkwater.

Seventeenth Regiment.

Co. B.—George H. Ring, Milo W. Smith, Wesley B. Smith, Seymour F. Wells.
Co. G.—George B. Wilson.
Co. H.—Patrick Daly.
Co. I.—Amos O. Gorton.
Co. K.—Jesse P. Chipman, John L. Harriman.

Sharpshooters.

Co. H.—Henry Sprague.

VOLUNTEER ONE YEAR MEN.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. K.—Miron D. Cutting, Harry M. Small, Safford F. Small.

Ninth Regiment.

Co. B.—Alphonso E. White.
Co. H.—Alpheus Wells.

Seventeenth Regiment.

Co. E.—George G. Gill.

RE-ENLISTED.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. B.—Hiram Cook.

Eighth Regiment.

Co. C.—Cornelius Putnam.

NAVAL.

Eugene McGrath, George H. Scribner.

Volunteers enlisted not credited by name, five men.

VOLUNTEER NINE MONTHS MEN.

Twelfth Regiment.

Co. C.—Randall W. Wells.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. F.—Jas. J. Ambler, George P. Burnham, Jesse P. Chipman, Myron D. Cutting, Timothy Drinkwater, John B. Ellis, Daniel Gorton, George W. Jones, Andrew C. Kenyon, Byron C. Rounds, Hiram Shattuck, Charles Sister, Alvin D. White.
Co. S.—Buel J. Derby.

Digitized by Google

FURNISHED UNDER DRAFT, BUT PAID COMMUTATION.

George W. Butts, Horace Cutler, George Eddy, 2d, Oscar Sherman.

PROCURED SUBSTITUTE.

Wareham Brewster.

[Copied from Adjutant General's Report.]

JERICHO.

Sharpshooters.

Co. E.—Barton Richardson, John H. Johnson, Samuel B. Locklin, Edward C. Whitney.
Co. F.—Artemas Bemis, Barney Leddy.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—Blinn Atchinson, William J. Flowers, Wyrum M. Pierce, Riel J. Thomson, Edgar E. Wright, Daniel Dixon.
Co. E.—Edson C. Hilton, Marcus Hoskins,
Co. L.—Michael Phillips.

Second Regiment.

Co. E.—Nelson Fassett, Edwin H. Fassett, C. C. Richardson, Elias Burns, Oliver Lucia, Victor Lavalle, Julius Miller, J. S. Herson, Joseph Russin, Albert G. Bradley, Lewis Tatro.
Co. G.—Horace C. Nash, Chauncy L. Church.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. I.—Robert White, Parker Bixby, Austin Bixby.
Co. K.—Patrick Lavalle, John McGovern, Joseph W. Ellis, Charles Lucia, Napoleon Bissonette, Simeon C. Edwards, Daniel Smith, Patrick Downs, Elam A. Clark, Jason Ware, John W. Wade, Wm. Tobin, Truman C. Hatch, Edgar Chamberlain, Timothy Kennedy, Allen Kimpton, Samuel Bentley, Zanthy Parker, Hubbell Smith.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. I.—Henry J. Fisher.
Co. K.—Judah T. Ainsworth.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—William Johnson, James White, Daniel C. Burns, Hiram B. Fish (commissioned 2d Lieut.), Michael Martin, Abner Richardson, Loren Richardson, Wm. Brown, Franklin J. Brown, Norman A. Blood.
Co. E.—Alanson Fuller, Frederick Fuller.

Thirteenth Regiment, nine months men.

Co. F.—Henry W. York, Caleb Nash, Julius Bliss, J. F. Drew (entered Co. at Colchester Falls), Erastus Powell, Morris H. Griffin, Samuel York, Willis Wells, Patrick McGovern, Wilson Bentley, Eli N. Peck, Lucius H. Bostwick (commissioned 2d Lieutenant), Benj. F. Robinson, Reuben M. Babcock, Loren P. Bentley, Benial McGee, Norman I. Royce, Wilkins Rockwood, Byron D. Matthews, Charles McCarty, Isaac N. Brooks.

L. A. BISHOP,
L. L. LANE, } Selectmen.

...ho, Dec. 15, 1862.

MILTON.

A list of those who have served in the army of the United States, and are now in the service, exclusive of the last call of nine months men.

First Regiment.

O. F. Bellows, fifer; Wm. L. Blake.

Second Regiment.

Co. G.—Oliver Garo, John T. Bascom, Edward E. Snow.
Co. H.—William E. Snow, Thomas Kennedy, 2d.

Third Regiment

Gilbert Berkmer, musician.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—James C. Squires, musician; Julius Bushway, John Cummings, Rimmond Maxfield, Samuel G. Manly, Elisha Manly, Daniel W. Morehouse, Lucius L. Shonion, Van Buren Warner.
Co. B.—Loren A. Butler, Myron J. Pattee, Chester C. Reynolds, Francis B. Kinney, Peter King, Joseph M, Green, Thomas Plunkett, Homer E. Bliss.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. A.—Judd H. Fairchild, Amasa Kinney, George Segel, Daniel Coon, Clark G. Reynolds, John O. Daniels, 2d, Henry A. Smith, Albert S. Thompson, Daniel Ladue, Henry C. Bailey, Chester Laughlin, Edward Lamarsh, Edward Warner, Marcus Warner, Lewis O. Beeman.

Sixth Regiment..

Co. I.—Midor Scarbo, Edgar E. Herrick, William B. Reynolds. Alexander St. George, George Monger, Michael Gardner, George Martin.

Seventh Regiment.

James White, Eugene Bacon.

Eighth Regiment.

Solomon Pippin, Jesse St. Lewis, Louis Garo, Amos Mosher, Louis Mosher, William H. Berkley, Gaspard Duponthe, William J. Symns.

Ninth Regiment.

Henry O. Sawyer, Alson H. Blake.

Tenth Regiment

Co. D.—Lyman Bullock, Lyman Bullock, 2d, Charles Sawyer, Richard Watson, Peter Mayville, Cleophas Clapper, Joseph Gaslin, Nathan Marcelle, Gregoire Patneaud, Herbert G. Reynolds, Albert Washburn, Milton Washburn, Joseph Reddick, Joseph Garaw, Andrew Dougherty, Charles Dougherty, John Ladieu, Francis Laporte, James Plunkett, John King, Joseph Henry.

In Regular Army of the U. S.

George Lester, Joseph Miner, Thomas J. Riley, Patrick O'Neil, William W. Fletcher, Louis Odam, Ozro Caswell, Charles Lutis, James House, Stephen Cooper, George Mitchell, George Hunting, Henry W. Crown, James Caswell, Edward A. St. Lewis, Frank Whipple, Marvin Bullard, Lucius J. Dixon.

NINE MONTHS MEN.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Henry O. Clark, Moses E Wheelock, George Bascom (1st Lieut.); Guy W. Latham, James C. Harmon, Wm. L. Blake, Joseph Douglass, Royal S. Childs, Leon H. Drake. Arnold Morton, Andrew Lucia, John Harmon, Loomis Bentley, Rodney Berkley, Joseph C. Snow, James D. German, James Lague, Joseph Sanders, James Shehan, Charles Ladue, Octavus Morrell, Antony Gareau, Lyman D. Parker, Morton H. Sanderson, John Andruss, Charles Stannard, Benjamin Huntley, Almonger B. Butler, Leo Muzzey, James Marcell, Horace S. Roscoe, Mitchell Lucin.

[From one of the selectmen, Jan. 1st, 1862.]

[The quota of nine months men were also fully made out, we are informed, by volunteers, amounting to 37. The town sent over 20 in the 10th regiment, and four or five in the 9th regiment.]

RICHMOND.

First Regiment.

Co. H.—John Bostwick, Charles W. Carpenter, Charles H. Mitchell.

Second Regiment.

Co. G.—Edgar Barber, John C. Green, John Radmond, Henry Wilcox.

Third Regiment—Band.

George E. Bryant, Jas. D. Miller, Cyrus Bryant.

Fourth Regiment.

Co. G.—Oral Dudley.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. I.—Everett D. Green.

Co. K.—Capt. Fred. F. Gleason, Lieut. B. N. Barber,† John D. Cargill, Oliver D. Beemis, Joseph Lyons, Sullivan Sager,* Henry Durand, Sidney Barber, Henry Call, Wm. Taft, Thomas Henly, R. B. Robinson, Geo. E. Allen, Dan. M. Bryant, Leonard J. Brownson, J. M. Brownson, Harmon B. Rockwood, Gershom Manning, Geo. W. Bryant, Jason D. Ware,* John Lessor, Lewis Lessor, Royal L. Coburn, Wm. Tobin, John Labouta, Marcellus Darling, John Casey, Romeo Ward, Francis Guyette, Elon Clark.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. H.—John M. Putnam, Hiram Shambo.

Co. I.—Reuben Coughlin.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. E.—Alanson Fuller, Pearly Smith.

Eighth Regiment.

G. H. Flagg, Drum-major.

* Also returned from Colchester.

† Wounded at Savage Station and since died.

Co. C.—Chas. Eaton, Leonard Haskins, Denslow Barber, Jr., Charles D. Bowdey, Edward Bodry, Moses Greenough, Adolph Montret, Robert Coughlin.

Co. I.—Charles Reed, J. H. Hymes.

Ninth Regiment.

Co. F.—Benoni Taft, Almon Atkins, Lorenzo W. Shedd.

Tenth Regiment.

Co. D—Geo. Brunelle, Geo. R. Shedd, Oscar Brown, Royal Sherman, John Ladoo, Francis Ladoo.

Co. B.—Edward Taylor.

Co. F.—Marshall Ladoo.

Massachusetts Regiment.

E. F. O'Brien.

Regular Army.

John Bushy, Levi Bushy, Peter Revoir, Gilbert Pasody, Gilbert Brinell, Solomon Taft, Allen Blackmer.

Cavalry.

Lieutenant Ellis B. Edwards,*

Co. A.—Albert Edwards, Irvin I. Fay, Lewis Green, Jarius Alger, Andrew Henly, Horace Bradley.

NINE MONTHS MEN.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Hosea Humphrey, Harry Tomlinson, Lewis Barto, Franklin Warren, —— Tomlinson.

Co. F.—Arnold C. Fay, Alonzo J. Douglass, Carlos C. Douglass, Chas. Lavanway, Silas Rowell, Henry C. Russell, Amos Brown.

Sharpshooters.

Henry L. Locke.

Twelfth Regiment.

Dr. G. P. Conn.

NATHAN FAY, OLIVER CUTLER, C. P. RHOADS, } Selectmen of Richmond.

SHELBURNE.

Cavalry.

Thomas Hall, Alexander Hall, Charles Adams, Thomas Ralph, John Greeno, Michael Quinlan, Argalus Harmon, Mitchel Macha, Rufus Barber.

Infantry.

Lorenzo J. Marks, Sidney Tilley, James Farrell, John Farrell, Frederick Basford, drummer; Oliver M. Holabird, William Taylor, Oliver Allen, J. L. Barstow, Lewis Ward, George Taylor, Charles Bragg, Edward McGrath, Charles Andrus, James Stone, Barney D. Basford, Michael McKenzie, Joseph Riley, Timothy Pippin, Frank Douglass, Paul Snay, Wm. Edwards, Wm. Dimmick, Joseph Tatro, Andrew Sears, Frank Mc-

* Also returned from Colchester.

Comber, Uzal Bacon, Thomas Moore, Wm. Parrida, Thomas Wilson, John Pierce, Gilbert D. Isham. James McGuire, Phillip P. Hennesa, John Farrell, Lewis Lapage, Patrick McGuire, Ransom Fargo.

The above are all 3 years men.

NINE MONTHS MEN.

Edgar Nash, Robert W. Rogers, William Tracy, William Hollabird, Vernon A. Tyler, George H. Collamer (died of sickness and much lamented), Abram B. Curtis, George E. Averill, Henry H. Blin, Edwin R. Hall, Guy F. Nash, Thomas Cooney, James Babcock, Isaac Lyman, James Mellon, Patrick Lavelle, John M. Sutton, Geo. C. Morehouse, John Dimmick, Wm. Derby, Edward Paronto.

ST. GEORGE.

Second Regiment.

Co. G.—Silas H. Tilley, Sidney N. Tilley, Hiram H. Tilley, H. B. Loggins, Miron D. Isham.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. I.—J. G. Loggins.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A.—Toby Burk.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Buel Burt, Linus Burt.

UNDERHILL.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. H.—James W. Russell, Anson Bixly, Lewis P. Carr, Daniel Wells, David Story, 3d, George C. Lewis, Cornelius Abbott, John Lesson, Lewey Lesson, Antrim Lesson, Wilson W. Woodworth.

Second Regiment.

Co. A.—Ezra L. Mead, Darwin Mead.

Co. G.—Rollin C. Naramore.

Co. H.—James Austin, Lymam H. Larabee.

Sharpshooters.

Co. E.—Ira Carr, Delevan Terrill, Wm. Humphrey, Adison Benedict.

Sixth Regiment.

Co. I.—Francis Story, Isaac S. Story, Jefferson H. Fletcher.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—Bostwick L. Green, Alexander C. Ross.

Amos C. Humphrey, George Brockam, Reuben Ward, William Hicks, Luman Bixby, Henry Bixby, James Bixby, Willebie Burdick, Andrew Tatro, Jeru Masse, Elhanan W. Prior, J. Eldridge Tupper, Everett E. Tupper, Joel P. Woodworth, George H. Wilder, Philander Tillison, Almon Bixby, Byron C. Ward, Patrick Fitzgerold, Converse Day, Edwin R. Ward, A. N. Clark, Eli C. Ross, [illegible]niel Ross, George H. Hodgman, Elihu Brewster, William Larabee, John McCary, J. B. McDaniels, Henry H. Terrill, Charles Tillison, jr., Wm. W. Hill, Leander Tillison, Warner Tillison, Duff Russin, Samuel A. Hale, Hezekiah Carr, Aaron Ford, Thomas Preston, B. D. Humphrey, W. H. G. Atkins, Albert Lance, James Bruce, John D. Button, William C. Jackson, Henry J. Bass, A. W. Terrill, Barney McHenry, Franklin J. Brown, Julius G. Morse, C. C. Tillison, Horace S. Sheldon, Justin Naramore, Alondus F. Terrill, Ziba Pixley, Franklin Martin, Alonzo H. Sherman, Simeon M. Palmer, John W. Jackson, Josephus Ellsworth, Horace L. Ellsworth, Albert B. Atkinson, Hiram Martin, John C. White, Charles Dunton, Stephen W. Tillison, Ward G. Piper, Morris D. Mead, Willis E. Naramore, Linus M. Caldwell, Francis Flinn, William Bruce, George Dunton, George Sweney, Henry J. Nichols.

[From Martin Wires.]

WESTFORD.

Rev. John H. Woodward,* Geo. W. Woodward, Henry Beach, Torrence Bates, Warren Gibbs, Payson E. Gibbs, Ebenezer K. Sibley, Martin Bates, Roswell Wait, Josiah B. Henry, Eugene C. Bellows, Wilber Grow, Francis McComber Osgood M. Whipple, Edward J. Whipple, Alvin H. Henry, Haskel A. Henry, Lynas A. Dyke, Peter Carrel, Dudley C. Merriam, David Haselton, Nathan C. Dimick, Edwin Merriam, Henry M. Rogers, George W. Rogers, Thomas N. Rogers, Samuel Mandey, Elisha Mandey, Cyrus Chates, Simeon Stone, James Stone, John H. Frisbie, Wm. Hicks, Harmon B. Rockwood, John C. Swan, Riley Swan, Jerome H. Grow, John G. McComber, Francis Phillips, George H. St. Lewis, Cornelius W. St. Lewis, Alfred N. Lewis, James C. Moore, George Howard, Robert B. Blood, John H. McEvoy, Ruben Ward, Aaron P. Burdick, Daniel W. Morehouse, Thomas King, Royal McClallen, Byron McClallen, Harvey Irish, Relief L. Bellows, Helenus W. Hickok, Homer E. Stanley, George W. Walsworth, Rumund Maxfield, John Odell, Michel O'Niel, John Cummings, Nelson Sibley, Mitchell King, Pearl Robinson, William A. Burtch, Capt. John W. Woodward, E. K. Sibley, Azro F. Hackett, Frank Hackett, Julius F. Goodrich, Fayette W. Burtch, Heman W. Allen, William Woodruff, Albert Tisdell, Charles Daniels, Lucius Martin, John Ashey, Alden Richardson, Edgar Woodruff, Torrey Sibley, Allen Frisbie, Stephen Crawford, A. H. Henry, Albert Swan.

WILLISTON.

Cavalry.

Co. A.—Ichabod Mattocks, Alonzo D. Marshall, Luther H. Davis.

Co. B.—John Bliss, George Miller, Charles

* Chaplain of 1st Vermont Cavalry.

Digitized by Google

B. Chapin, Sanford Marshall, 1st Lieutenant, Hiram H. Hall.

Sharpshooters.

Charles Deoviel.

Vt. Battery.

Henry C. Downer, Thomas Shein.

Second Regiment.

Co. G.—Leroy B. Nichols.

Third Regiment.

Musician, Adams' Band.—Dor A. Rouleau.

Co. K.—Charles Gill, Hiram Shambeau, Adam Smith.

Fifth Regiment.

Co. H.—Philip Ward, Frank Ward.

Co. I.—George Loggins, William Austin, Hiram J. Isham.

Sixth Qegiment.

Co. G.—William R. Chapman.

Co. I.—John Boyle, George J. Bliss, Eli Osborn, Edward A. Holton (Orderly Sergeant), David M. Holton, David Smith McHerd, Jackson Isham, John Rowland, Wm. Beach, Waller Osborn, Richard Irish, Samuel C. Alexander, William Shepard, George A. Allen.

Co. K.—Eber Fizander.

Seventh Regiment.

Co. A—Peter D. Lander, Lewis Lander, Orville E. Allen, William Green, Frederick Doyne, Homer Prior.

Eighth Regiment.

Co. I.—Martin M. Brownell, Horace W. Brownell.

Tenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Haschal M. Phelps.

VOLUNTEERS FOR NINE MONTHS.

Thirteenth Regiment.

Co. F.—Captain John L. Yale, George L. Baldwin, Milton E. Isham, Charles A. Harper, Alonzo N. Lee, George A. Pine, Alfred W. Isham, Thomas J. Lee, John F. Harper, Burtram F. Brown, James Patten, Geordon Reynolds, Nathan Johnson, Albert Walston, Peter Derby, Nelson Harper, Lawrence Kelly, Frank J. C. Tyler, Wm. F. Whitney, Joseph Sargent, Thomas Kelley, Melancthon S. Lee, Oscar F. Phelps, Harmon E. Lee, Thomas Culligan, Thomas Johnson.

COUNTY ITEMS.

Bolton.

On the 5th of May, 1864, died at the residence of his son, J. R. Jewell, in Petaluma, California, Jesse Jewell, aged 84 years and 4 months. Mr. Jewell was from Bolton, Chittenden Co: Vermont, where he lived with his wife for 60 years. He was one of the soldiers of 1812, being an officer in the Vermont Volunteers, and participated in the battle of Plattsburgh, N. Y. In 1859 he emigrated to California with his wife, to visit and live with his children, of whom he had in Sonoma Co., three sons and two daughters.

Also at his residence in Petaluma, California, Geo. C. Jewell, aged 40 years. Mr. Jewell was from Bolton, Chittenden Co., Vermont, and youngest son of Jesse Jewell. He emigrated to California in 1852, was one of the first settlers of Petaluma, and has left a large circle of friends to mourn his loss.

Burlington.

Burlington, when we commenced this volume, was town and village,—now it is town and city. Burlington City was chartered by act of the Legislature, Nov. 22, 1864, subject to the adoption of the freemen of the city, and was accepted Jan. 18, 1865. Mayor, Albert L. Catlin; Recorder, E. R. Hurd; Aldermen, Lawrence Barnes, Levi Underwood, Calvin Blodgett, Omri A. Dodge, Giles S. Appleton and Russell S. Taft.

[But we propose to save for an Appendix, or Supplementary Number, further account of the queen-town of Vermont, as also of the county in general, save the few following items of obituary and tributary notices:]

Rev. Moses Robinson.

BY REV. P. H. WHITE, OF COVENTRY.

Rev Moses Robinson died at Steamboat Rock, Iowa, September 2d, 1865; aged 50 years, 4 months and 6 days.

He was a son of Cephas and Matilda Robinson, and was born in Burlington, Vt., 26th April, 1815. He was graduated at Middlebury in 1839, and at Union Theological Seminary in 1842, and received license from the Presbytery of New York in the spring of 1842. Returning to Vermont, he married, July 20, 1842, Elizabeth M. Smith of Monkton, and immediately went West to engage in the home missionary work. He preached in Livonia, Ia., 1843–44, and was there ordained as an evangelist in the spring of 1843; in Brownston, La., 1844–45; in Wadsworth, Ohio, 1845–46. Finding that his health required a change of climate, he returned to Vermont in 1846, and was acting pastor at Danville four months, and at Enosburgh three months. At Enosburgh he received a call to the pastorate, which he declined, but by mutual agreement he was constituted pastor by vote of the church, with the privilege on either side of dissolving the relation upon three months' notice.

He preached at Enosburgh, from March 1st, 1847 to June 1, 1851, and then became acting pastor at Newport, where he remained four years, during the last three of which he preached on alternate Sabbaths in Newport and Brighton. In the summer of 1855 he removed to Iowa. He preached in Iowa City five months, in Waterloo seven months, and about 1st June, 1856, became acting pastor at Steamboat Rock, where he remained till his death.

Digitized by Google

Died in Burlington, May 23, 1866, Mrs. Caroline E. T. Clarke, wife of Gen. D. W. C. Clarke. Mrs. Clarke was highly and variedly accomplished, a fine singer, very, we have been told; quite an amateur painter; the principal and back-ground altar-picture in St. Mary' Church, this city, of the crucifixion, was executed by her; and she was an occasional poetic contributor of the New York Tribune, and other journals of the day. "Lizzie Maitland," a Catholic tale, by Mrs. Clarke, and for which Mr. O. A. Brownson, who appears to have had a vivid appreciation of her literary talent, wrote the preface, was published by James B. Kirker and Co., New York, some years since—ten, fifteen or more. Mrs. Clarke had about this time made a profession of the Catholic faith, and was buried from St. Mary's Church with the last solemn rites of her church.

Aug. 12, 1866, Charles Miller, proprietor of the American Hotel in Burlington, aged 37. His death was regretted in the community, as he was one of the most popular and enterprising young men of Burlington. To Mr. Miller we are indebted for the new photographic view of Burlington College, from which the plate was engraved for this volume.

Dec. 4, 1866, Charles Allen, formerly of Burlington, in his 52d year, another one of the benefactors of this work; a paper from whom appears among the biographies of Burlington. We record with sincere sorrow all such deaths, and as our last tribute of respect write them upon the historic page of our State.

Also in 1866, Mrs. Lucia Hemenway, wife of Rev. Asa Hemenway, formerly of the American Board of Foreign Missions, aged 54. We first knew Mrs. Hemenway in the autumn of 1859, in her very rural home in the little mountain town of Ripton, Addison County, where her husband was engaged in the labors of the Home Mission—his health having failed in Siam. For our name and for our cause, we were made cordially welcome; and it was a pleasant Indian summer day we passed in this precious household and the little village of then seven tenements among the mountains, one of the pictures of Vermont and our labors that amid constantly changing scenes does not fade away. Mrs. Hemenway became the lady assistant also to gather subscriptions, and from this sparsely populated town not long after sent to us 20 names, with advance payment.

Mrs. Mary A. Pitkin, also late of Burlington, widow of Dr. Pitkin, we would not close this volume without at least the acknowledgment that to her we are indebted for our first thirty to forty subscribers in Burlington. Later she removed to Morrisville in Morristown, Lamoille County, to reside with her then late widowed sister, Mrs. Robinson, at whose home she died about two years since, aged about 51, we think. She was an intelligent and amiable Christian lady, and left one son who is a physician, and was a surgeon in the late war.

Died Jan. 6, 1864, Mrs. Clarissa Lyman, aged 83 years.

December 10, 1864, Andrew Burritt, aged 55, an upright and intelligent citizen.

In Winooski (Burlington) Mrs. Hannah Washburn, aged 81, Aug. 18, 1864.

Dec. 7, 1866, Mrs. Hannah Fiske, wife of the late Benjamin Fiske, aged 64.

Biographies are promised to this work for the scientific and pre-eminently scholarly James A. Read, son of the Hon. Daniel Read, who has contributed so many valuable pages to this work—and of Col. Bowdish and others who fell a sacrifice to freedom in the war of the late rebellion, and which may appear in the continued military chapters, in the second or third volume of this work.

Epitaph in Green Mountain Cemetery, on the tombstone of the first settler in the town of Burlington.

"STEPHEN LAWRENCE, Esq., died April 2, 1789,
Æ 47 years.
He was the first man who with his family settled in Burlington,
1783.
This stone is erected to his memory
Oct. 1811.
Reader, mark the mighty change produced in 28 years."

ANOTHER PAPER PUBLISHED IN BURLINGTON.

From a letter from Rev. D. T. Taylor, of Rouse's Point:

"I wish to say that the list of papers or periodicals printed in Burlington, which appears in No. VI. of your valuable Magazine, is not a full one, as I am able to add the following, viz: The Scribbler, 8 vo. of pp. 16, published weekly or semi-monthly by Samuel Hull Wilcocke. It was printed in Burlington during the years 1821-22, and removed from there Dec. 1, 1823. It was a satirical slang sheet, and the editor bore the assumed name of Lewis Luke Marcellus, Esq. Col. R. G. Stone, of Plattsburgh, of the Republican at Plattsburgh, N. Y., has several volumes and can give you the date of its establishment at Burlington. I present a full history of the green fellow in my History of Champlain. He published the first newspaper ever printed in my native town at Rouse's Point, N. Y."

Digitized by Google

Winooski—Burlington.

Killed at the battle Gettysburgh, July 3d, Serg't G. H. Duncan—oldest son of G. M. and A. M. Duncan, of Winooski, Vt., aged 32 years.

Funeral at his father's residence, July 26th after, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The subject of the above notice, late in the afternoon of the third inst., fell, from a wound received in the head while gallantly charging the enemy's line. He was riding by his Captain's side at the time, who justly says, in a letter of condolence to his parents: "I had scarcely an officer so admired by the men, so freely trusted by superiors, and so loved by all with whom he came in contact, as he." A just tribute to a faithful officer—a trusty friend and a true man. But he has fallen in the morning of life and sealed with his life's blood that cause which called him from a fond loving home, to strike for God and Liberty. I knew this young man long and well—knew him when a mere youth—knew him in the intimate capacity of a pupil, and having known him thus it is but a pleasure to testify to his great worth of "head and heart."

With no stain upon his moral character—with a well cultivated intellect—with a heart ever alive to every tender sympathy—with a nature stamped with the broad seal of God's nobility, he is called from earth to heaven.

"Green be the grass that grows over his grave, and soft the breezes that fan his last resting place," but greener be the memories and softer the whispering reminiscences that cluster around our departed son, brother and friend.

Charlotte.

Since the record of Charlotte history, written out by the Rev. B. D. Ames, the town has witnessed the shocking murder of Mr. Drum, a returned soldier, shot by Mr. Burns with whom he had had a recent quarrel, as he was passing his house in the evening. Mr. Drum is reported to have been a peaceable man and to have fought well in the battle of Gettysburgh. He left a wife and quite a family of small children.

Colchester.

COL. JACOB ROLFE.

From the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of the State of Vermont.

Col. Jacob Rolfe was born in Canterbury, N. H., March 12th, 1790. He settled in Colchester at the age of 18, in which place he resided most of the time until his death. He filled all the various town offices of that town by turn; was a member of the Legislature in 1844, 1845, and 1846, and was twice chosen delegate to the Constitutional Convention. He also filled various offices in the militia of the State, and was chosen Colonel, Jan. 14th, 1832. He was Generalissimo of Burlington Commandery from 1854 to the date of his death. In politics he was a Democrat, and was always highly respected by the Democracy of his country. He died in Colchester, Jan. 3d, 1864, in the 74th year of his age, sincerely lamented by the Masonic Fraternity and by all his acquaintances and townsmen. His remains were interred with Masonic honors.

DR. JOHN S. WEBSTER.

Dr. John S. Webster, Past Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Vermont, was born in Allentown, N. H., January 2d, 1796. He studied medicine with Doctors Ainsworth and Cobb, of Milton, Vt., and Dr. Nathan R. Smith, of Burlington, Vt., and was admitted to practice in 1823, and received the degree of M. D. in 1824. After a brief residence at Milton and Highgate, Vt., he located for the practice of his profession at Berkshire, Vt., in 1824, where he continued to reside until 1838, filling in the mean time for several years, the office of Deputy Collector of Vermont from the year 1825, and serving as Town Representative of Berkshire in the years 1836 and 1837. He removed to Colchester in March, 1838, and represented that town in the State Legislature in the years 1841 and 1842. He was elected Commander of Burlington Commandery No. 2, at its organization in 1851, which position he filled till the year 1861 when he declined a re-election. He was also Deputy Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Vermont from 1853 to 1861. He was a faithful and zealous Sir Knight, and did much to promote the cause of Knighthood in our State. His death occurred in Colchester Dec. 30, 1863. His remains were interred with Masonic honors, and were followed to the grave by a large concourse of citizens and the Masonic Fraternity.

Hinesburgh.

Hinesburgh appears from the agricultural papers of the state to have a successful cheese-factory establishment, where a large amount of the article has been turned out for the past two years, 1865 and 1866, or more.

Huntington.

The following tribute to the memory of the late Lieut. Blodgett, U. S. A., a native Huntington, is from the pen of James O. Grady, Esq., from Burlington, of the Commissary Department at Washington, at the time. Lieut. Blodgett, as his father and family, was also, and had been at the time of his death, for some years a resident of Burlington. A biography promised by G. B. Sawyer, Esq., for the Gazetteer, is now under preparation, and may appear in our military department hereafter.

To the Memory of Col. Blodgett.

Is he gone from among us? the bravest and purest,
The one who upheld our bright banner the surest—
Is he gone from our circle away?
Oh God! with such instincts of liberty rife,
The foremost in danger, the first in the strife,
Mute, cold in his coffin to day.
Wo! Wo!
Mourn, that true valor received such a blow,
The loved one is fallen, the lofty lies low.

The gallant, good heart that was fitted to clamber
To loftiest heights, now lies cold in the chamber
Of death, as the basest can be,
Heroically battling in liberty's cause,
For country, for union, for justice, for laws—
He gave, that the bound might be free.
Grief! Grief!!
The noble young hero! the patriot chief!
To praise him is some, oh! how little relief!

The sun first illumines the top of the mountain,
And pure is the stream from the high rocky fountain;
So high and so pure was his aim.
His course it was finished
With faith undiminished,
Ere yet it was noon of his fame.
Clay! Clay!!
As well might you steal the broad sun from the day,
As the humorous spirit of Blodgett away.

Jericho.

GEORGE LEE LYMAN, M. D.*

BY REV. C. C. PARKER, OF WATERBURY.

Dr. George Lee Lyman was the oldest son of Mr. Daniel Lyman, and was born in Jericho, Feb. 23, 1818. His mother, whose maiden name was Lee, died in his infancy. When he was but a lad, Jericho academy was established at the Center, some two miles and a half from his father's residence, in which he early became a student. Under the careful and judicious training of the principal, Mr. Simeon Bicknell, there were soon developed in him scholarly traits of a high order. He entered the University of Vermont in 1837, and was graduated in 1841. As a classical scholar, from the first, he stood at the head of his class—having a remarkable aptitude for the acquisition of language. He also took a high standing in the departments of metaphysics and morals, having been an ardent admirer of Dr. James Marsh and his system of philosophy. The class to which Mr. Lyman belonged was the last class to which Dr. Marsh gave his full course of instruction.

After his graduation Mr. Lyman taught in Jericho, Burlington, Clarenceville, C. E., Hinesburgh and Underhill. He studied medicine in the medical college at Pittsfield, Mass., and practiced mainly in his native town, Jericho, and vicinity.

Dr. Lyman carried his scholarly habits and tastes with him through life. He was a diligent student of Plato and Aristotle, of Homer, Hesiod, and nearly all clasical authors, also of Philo and the Church fathers. During his last year, his leisure was employed in acquiring the German language.

As a physician he was skillful and faithful, frank and honest; doubtless too frank and honest for the largest practice. If there was nothing the matter, he frankly perhaps bluntly said so. If there was no help, he was equally candid. He wasted no time or medicine where no good was to be done. Had he given himself wholly to his profession, as in his last year he was beginning to do, he doubtless would have won by his sterling sense and honesty, as wide a practice as he could have desired.

He was constitutionally indisposed to floating with the current. It was much more consonant to him to row against wind and tide. Hence he was rarely in poitical or religious sympathy with the community where he lived. Had he lived in the South, there is little doubt he would have been the stoutest and boldest of Unionists. Living at the North, where the current was all for the Union, he was bold and outspoken in his sympathy with the South. Notwithstanding this characteristic, he was the truest and most constant of friends, with a heart singularly tender and kind in all the relations in life. He hated all shams and tricks with a perfect hatred.

He married, August 15, 1844, Mabel Amina, daughter of Lyman Field, who died Oct. 3, 1845, leaving an infant daughter that survived her a few months. Aug. 27, 1846, he married Mary Clarinda, daughter of Jedediah Boynton, Esq., of Hinesburgh, who died Sept. 7, 1858. Dr. Lyman died at Jericho Corners, June 4, 1863. He had buried one daughter, by his second wife. One survives him.

*The historian of Jericho in this volume.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

Milton.

Rev. Albert Smith, D. D.

By Rev. P. H. White, of Coventry.

Rev. Albert Smith, D. D., died in Monticello, Ill., April 24, 1863, aged 59 years, 2 months and 9 days.

He was a son of Harry and Phebe (Henderson) Smith, and was born at Milton, Vt., February 15, 1804. He was clerk in a store at Vergennes, Vt., till he arrived at the age of majority, and it was his intention to make the mercantile business his pursuit for life; but finding no satisfactory opening, he commenced the study of law at Hartford, Ct. When about twenty-three years old, he experienced a change of heart, and turned his attention to the ministry. He was graduated at Middlebury in 1831, taught a year in Hartford, Ct., and Medford, Mass.; and commenced the study of theology at New Haven, but removed to Andover, where he was graduated in 1835.

He was ordained pastor of the Congregational church in Williamstown, Mass., February 10, 1836, and was dismissed May 6, 1838, to become Professor of Languages and Belles Letters in Marshall College, at Mercersburgh, Pa. In 1840 he was called to the Professorship of Rhetoric and English Literature in Middlebury College, where he remained about four years. He was installed pastor of the Congregational church in Vernon, Ct., in May, 1845, and dismissed in October, 1854, on account of declining health. The winter of 1854–55, he spent in Peru, Ill., preaching as he was able. A part of the following year he spent in Duquoisne, in the service of the Home Missionary Society. In the fall of 1855 he was settled at Monticello, and there remained till his death, for several years prior to which he was in feeble health.

"He was a man of uncommon intellectual power, a superior scholar, and in all respects an admirable man. With a mind highly disciplined, and accustomed to close logical reasoning, and stored with varied and extensive knowledge, his sermons, while eminently evangelical, were rich in matter and conclusive in argument. By some they were sometimes regarded as too profound, if not incomprehensible. But to the cultivated mind, they were rich and instructive. He was a man of system and method. Everything had its time and place, and was sure to be attended to. As a man and friend he was genial and sincere, in prosperity a monitor, and in adversity a tender sympathizer and wise counsellor."

He received the degree of D. D., from Shurtliff College, in 1860.

Shelburne.

The following names of the original proprietors of Shelburne were not received in time to include with the very valuable record by Mr. Thayer, in this volume.

"Jesse Hallock, Steward Southgate, John Southgate, Richard Gleason, Richard Gleason, jr., Nathaniel Potter, John Bond, jr., John Potter, Antipas Earl, Samuel Seabury, Thomas Darling, Samuel Hight, Gilbert Tolton, Simon Dakin, Joshua Dakin, Patridge Thatcher, James Bradshaw, Ebenezer Sealy, Samuel Waters, David Ferris, Joshua Franklin, Thomas Franklin, jr., Silas Mead, Nathaniel Potter, jr., Robert Southgate, William Cornal, John Thomas, jr., John Huching, Stephen Field, Nathaniel Howland, Haddock Bowne, Peter Tatten, Benjamin Clapp, Tideman Hull, Jos. Hull, Lewis Cammell, Sidmon Hull, jr., Thomas Hull, John Carnal, Edward Burling, John Cromwell, Thos. Chield, John Burling, Ebenezer Preston, Uria Field, Isaac Underhill, Joseph Parsall, John Akin, John Cannon, Jacob Underhill, Zebulon Ferris, Daniel Merit, Jonathan Akin, Jeremiah Griffin, Read Ferris, Elijah Soty, John Hallock, Benjamin Ferris, Benjamin Ferris, jr., Samuel Hills, David Akin, Hon. Holcom Temple, Theodore Atchison, Mark H. J. Wentworth, John Fisher, Esq."

We have also lately received the following communication from Mr. Thayer in relation to the murder of Mr. Safford, of Shelburne, and confession of the murder:

"In the spring of 1827, the body of an unknown man was found in a piece of hemlock woods, directly east from where Hiram Blin now resides, by Mr. Jonathan Lyon. The unknown had evidently been murdered sometime before and lain there during the past winter. The discovery soon went out, and the citizens generally gathered to investigate and make what discoveries they could in the matter, and a paper was found a few rods from the body that had evidently been taken from a watch and that came from a goldsmith in Vergennes. This paper was taken to Vergennes, and it was ascertained that it had been put into a watch they had repaired, about the 1st of December before, for a person that had been laboring the season previous for a farmer, in Addison, by the name of Safford; and, on further inquiry, it was ascertained that he started about the first of December, on foot, for Sutton, C. E., where he formerly belonged and where his connections resided; and it was also ascertained that two men, one bearing the description of the murdered man, and the other a rather tall, poorly-clad, hard-looking fellow, in company, passed through Charlotte and Shelburne, going north, on Thanksgiving day, it being the first Thursday in December. They called at the public house in the forenoon, and at the hotel in Shelburne, where they took dinner, and the one supposed to have been the murdered man offered some plated spoons for sale at the hotel, but they were not purchased. They went north towards Burlington, and no more was thought or heard of them until this body was found the next April.

Digitized by Google

A short distance north of Shelburne village the road from Williston intersects with the main road leading to Burlington, where the road leading to Burlington takes a turn, and strangers often take the wrong one, and it was evident these men took the Williston road and traveled about half a mile on that, as a woman residing on that road recollected of having seen two men, bearing the description of these two strangers, on the afternoon of the preceding Thanksgiving day, standing in the road near her dwelling a short time, apparently in consultation, and then leaving the road and crossing the fields in the direction of the piece of woods where the body was found—and this would be a much shorter route, on their way to Burlington, than to go back to the main road. Safford being of rather a weak mind (as it was ascertained) was probably purposely led away by his companion on this wrong road, and then into this pine woods and there murdered by him.

Safford's friends in Canada supposing him to be in Addison, and those in Addison supposing he had gone to Canada, no inquiry had been made for him from any direction, and it was not known, until his body was found, that any thing had befallen him.

An inquest was holden on the body, but no knowledge could be had as to who the murderer was. A surgical examination showed that there had been several severe blows, apparently with a heavy stick, upon the head of the murdered man. Much inquiry and investigation was made in regard to the matter to no purpose, and it was generally supposed that there was no way to bring out this hidden scene of blood until the light of the judgment day should make all things known; but the Lord has means by which the sins of men will be found out.

The fact of this murder was disclosed by the murderer himself, on his death bed, some 28 years after its committal. A man—a miseral specimen of humanity—in Sutton, C. E., by the name of Coats Barnes, acknowledged himself the miserable culprit, in the autumn of 1865, after having lain three days in a dying state; still living, contrary to the expectation of all, he informed those present that he could not die until he had made a disclosure of his having murdered Mr. Safford at Shelburne, supposing at the time that he had quite a sum of money with him, but found a note for $100 and one quarter of a dollar in his pockets, and a few other articles of but little value, after which confession he immediately died."

CURIOUS LAND-SLIDE.

We learn that a somewhat remarkable land-slide took place on the farm of Mr. Newell in Shelburne on Saturday last.* As described to us, some five acres of land suddenly sank away, as if let drop by the running out or change of place of a supporting quicksand. A small wooded hill was cut in halves by the operation, one-half remaining at its old level, the other dropping a number of feet and leaving a perpendicular face of earth, reaching above the tops of the trees which crowned the now sunken half of the hill top. Some of these trees were split lengthwise by the operation, one-half remaining up and the other going down, with their respective sections, much as some families here have been divided by the war. The bed of the La Plot river was also raised twelve or fifteen feet in spots, not by the earth sliding in but by an apparent crowding up of the bed of the stream. On the whole it was apparently a singular affair. No one saw it take place, but the hour at which it occurred is fixed by some workmen who having left with a load of hay returned to find their field of labor some ways below where they left it.—Free Press.

UNDERHILL.

COL. UDNEY HAY,

Commissary of Vermont, lived and died after the revolutionary war, at Underhill. Before he came to this state he lived at Albany, and consequently sympathized with the York party in regard to their assumed jurisdiction over Vermont. From our venerable friend Henry Stevens, antiquarian, and also from G. B. Sawyer, Esq., of Burlington, we have the following description and incident: He was a gentleman, an inposing man, rather of the Matthew Lyon cast. During the war he made purchases for the army in the South. He was opposed to the Constitution, and to the administration of Washington and Adams, and continued to the end a politician. His rank was Quartermaster General during the war, which gave him the rank of Colonel. He was descended from the distinguished family of Hay in Scotland, and was highly educated and distinguished for his own talent. While Commissary for the army and resident in New York he presented a petition, the object of which was to procure the sanction of purchases for the army in this state "to the pretended Legislature of Vermont." The stern old fathers of Vermont felt the insult and were in a dilemma how to rebuke the same and yet secure the trade, till Matthew Lyon suggested that they accept his petition with the recommend that he should address his next petition to the great grand assembly of Vermont.

* We have not the date, but it occurred sometime during the late war, or between 1861 or '62 and 1864.

From the Vermont Record.

Robert Hanniford, of Underhill, now (January, 1867) at the ripe age of 99, hale and hearty, in the full possession of his intellect, cast his vote for Washington, and for every occupant of the presidential chair except Pierce and Buchanan.

ESSEX COUNTY CHAPTER.

BY H. A. CUTTING.

The lands now in the area of Essex county were, previous to 1764, supposed to be in the New Hampshire grants, and some of the land was granted by the Governor of New Hampshire to different parties. It was, however, included in New York in the year above named, and March 7th, 1770, the government of that state erected the county of Gloucester, which included the land in the N. E. part of the state, Essex within its limits. In 1777, the General Convention of Vermont declared themselves independent, and in 1779 divided the state into two counties, and each county into two shires. Essex was then within the limits of Cumberland county, in the shire of Newbury. In 1781 this county was divided into Windham, Windsor and Orange, Essex being within the limits of Orange, with Newbury still for its shire. The county of Caledonia was incorporated Nov. 8th, 1796, and included all the N. E. part of the state within its limits. Essex county was, however, soon incorporated, and the county officers were appointed in the October session of the legislature in 1800. Essex county is about 45 miles from N. to S. and 23 from E. to W. It lies between Lat. 44° 20′ and 45°, and Lon. 4° 51′ and 5° 28′ E. from Washington. It is bounded N. by Canada East and S. by the Connecticut river, bordering its bank for more than 65 miles, S. W. by Caledonia county, and W. by Orleans county. The land is generally fertile, though in many parts stony. Along the valley of the Connecticut it is beautifully picturesque, and no more romantic scenery can be found. Guildhall was chosen as its shire, and has thus far been unchanged, but there is a strong wish among many at present to change it to Island Pond. This county was never much settled by Indians, but was used as a hunting ground, and through it was the main road for the St. Francis tribe of Canada and those living in the valley of the Connecticut. It was a while disputed territory between them, and we have every reason to suppose that there were many ambuscades and trials of skill between the Indians of Coos and St. Francis, within its borders. There have been a few stone tomahawks and arrow points found within the limits of the county, but Indian relics are rare. There are several anecdotes concerning the aborigines, but they appear in the town histories. As a considerable portion of the county is still a wilderness, we have four unorganized towns—Averill, Ferdinand, Lewis and Norton, and three gores, viz. Avery's, Warner's and Warren's. Averill was chartered June 23, 1762, is 6 miles square, and bounded N. E. by Canaan, S. E. by Lemington, S. W. by Lewis, and N. W. by Avery's gore and Norton. It is well watered and well timbered, but broken and uneven in surface and contains but few inhabitants.

Ferdinand was chartered Oct. 13th, 1761, to contain 23 square miles, but as a portion of Wenlock has been added it now contains much more than that. It is bounded N. by Lewis, E. by Brunswick and Maidstone, S. by Granby and E. Haven, and W. by Newark and Brighton. It contains several ponds and streams, which are well stocked with splendid trout, making this town the best fishing ground in the section.

Lewis was chartered June 29th, 1762, is a mountainous township 6 miles square, bounded N. E. by Averill, S. E. by Bloomfield, S. W. by Ferdinand and Brighton, and N. W. by Avery's gore. This township is well timbered with pine, but the land is not considered to be of the best quality. Norton is bounded N. by Canada, E. by Canaan and Averill, S. by Warner's, Warren's and Avery's gores and W. by Holland. The Grand Trunk R. R. coming up through Warren's gore runs through near the center of the town, but as the land is poor and rocky few have made homes in this locality.

Of the three gores Warren's contains 6380 acres, Warner's 2,000, and Avery's 10,685. They all lie together, being bounded N. by Norton, E. by Averill and Lewis, S. by Brighton and W. by Holland and Morgan. They contain some ponds and small streams, are in some parts well timbered, and the Grand Trunk R. R. running through near the center of the three, or through the central gore, renders the timber of some value.

The first settlement of the county was made in Guildhall (then supposed to be Lunenburgh) by David Page, Timothy Nash and Geo. Wheeler. They had to bring their provisions from Northfield, Mass., in canoes, by river navigation over 160 miles. During the war of the Revolution they were constantly annoyed by the tories and Indians who killed their cattle, plundered their houses, and carried some of their number away into captivity. In laying before the reader the incidents of our early history, I think that some extracts from Eben Judd's diary as good an account of the early settlers as can be given. He surveyed this portion of Vermont, as well as northern New Hampshire, and many incidents in his journal will show his connection with both localities.

We commence Sept. 6th, 1786, from Judd's journal:*

"After dinner we had a Coos meeting—John Holdbrook Moderator, Benj. Clark and all the rest that chose, council men. Went to Baldwin's and lodged."

"Sept. 7th. Crossed the river at noon to Joseph Wait's, surveyed on the river the Governor's lot in Brunswick."

"Sept. 9th. Finished Governor's lot," &c.

"Sept. 10th. Went to meeting at Mr. Hall's in Maidstone. In the afternoon went to Mr. Rich's, and saw his son sick with consumption."

"Sept. 12th. Began to survey at Lemington upper bounds."

"Sept. 13th and 14th. Surveyed at Lemington and on the river against that place."

"Sept. 15th. Surveyed against Minnehead; and camped in the woods."

"Sept. 17th. Went to Nath'l Wait's in forenoon, and drew a tooth for his wife. In the afternoon went to old Mr. Blodgett's and heard David Judd preach."

"Sept. 18th. Made a plan of Lemington."

"Sept. 22. Began to lot Lemington."

"Sept. 30th. Run until we came to the line between Lewis and Magog, there we went on side line to the mile tree southerly, which tree stands on a very high mountain, where we could overlook nearly all of Lewis and some part of Wenlock and Averill.

"Oct. 2d. Finished the lotting of Lewis and set out homewards. Lodged on a branch of the Nulhegan river."

"Oct. 4th. Went to Mr. Rich's. Spent afternoon with Dr. Gott.

"Oct. 5th. This day had a meeting at Wooster's. Maj. Wilder mad. Joseph Holdbrook confused the whole meeting and conducted in a scandalous manner; was for having Whitelaw's survey or location all broken up, and all our allotments, and said he was ashamed of such conduct. The meeting was adjourned until the next day, and the settlers of Maidstone sent for."

"Oct. 6th. Another meeting at Wooster's—Holdbrook continues to abuse the meeting and comes near breaking up the allotment."

"Oct. 7th. and 8th. Surveyed up the valley of the Connecticut."

"Oct. 9th. Surveyed on side of the river in Maidstone. Just at sunset met a company of men on a piece of land that Mr. Shoff lived on. They held our chain-men, and said if we went on they would break our heads. We returned to Thomas Wooster's. (We went on with our work until the 13th.")

"Oct. 13th. About 2 o'clock P. M. was met by a company of settlers in a Briton's manner. They stopped and hindered us a long time."

"Oct. 14th. Began to lot where we left off on Wait's Bow. We went strong handed. Joseph Holdbrook carried the fore end of the chain, and was clinched upon by Mr. Grapes. Grapes was advised to let go, and finally did, and we went on with our lotting."

*For the extracts from Judd's Journal we are indebted to the Editor, who copied them from the original journal in possession of Henry Stevens, the veteran of State.

"Oct. 21st. Run a line about 4 miles on a high mountain, which is 77 rods perpendicular height."

"Oct. 22d. Run about 4 miles on the east line of Stratford, over a large pond. Good land all around it, and a fine path made by moose."

"Oct. 27th. Lodged at John Holdbrook's in Stratford, and eat old hasty pudding that the old man had made a week before."

(He leaves his boarding place on account of high charges, being 10 shillings per week for himself and horse keeping besides.)

"Nov. 8th. Surveyed on the river in Maidstone," (was stopped and held fast by the settlers of said town near Merrill's) "finally they desisted." He then says "We compromised, and they agreed to delay the matter till after the Surveyor's meeting, by our promising to use our influence to have each settler have 20 acres of meadow and 80 acres of upland. Great indignation was expressed against the doings and usage of Holdbrook."

"Nov. 2d. Thanksgiving day. We lived exceeding well at Esq. Eames." . . .

"Nov. 27th. Went to Maj. Wilder's after paper, and then to every house where I thought I could get some. Found some at last. Lodged at Dr. Gott's in Guildhall, who told me as many stories as I could pen down in a month. Told me of a number of receipts that would be to infinite advantage to any man. Told me he had made 19 almanacs, and got six of them printed. For the first he got £30 and more for the rest. When I asked him any question about astronomy, he could not answer." (Judd was an almanac maker.)

"Nov. 29th. Went to Capt. Burley's after paper and got six sheets. Just before night there was a small earthquake and the ground was felt to shake."

"Nov. 30th. Thanksgiving day in Vermont. Went to Mr. Hall's at night. Fine supper—roasted turkey, chicken pie, and the first apples and apple pie I have tasted since I came to Coos. Had a fiddler and Coos dance. Went from there to Mr. Lucas' about 10 o'clock at night, where we found a company drinking sizzled rum, or hot toddy. Had a high caper, as it is called. About midnight returned to Esq. Eames, and made out to get to bed without help. The weather moderated about this time, as might have been expected."

"Dec. 3d. A disease very prevalent among young women, and some boys have it—large bunch on their throats or bronchial. About two-thirds or more of girls and young women have these bronchial bunches which are frequently as large as a hen's egg. Do not generally prove fatal."

"Dec. 11th. Was voted in Stratford at their adjourned meeting to dismiss Joseph Holdbrook Esq. from all public business respecting the town as he has been in very hardservice for sixteen years," &c., &c.

"Dec. 13th. The happy wished-for day has arrived and no Holdbrook. Proceeded on business as fast as possible. Brought on Lemington first, then Averill, then Minnehead, then Lewis, then Brunswick, then Wenlock, then Ferdinand, then waited for the settlers of Maidstone, and opened meeting at 1 o'clock, P. M. A number of settlers together and a large lot of proprietors, all proceeded to business with calmness and resolution and there was not even a high word spoken. There were matters to settle of the utmost consequence to private persons. Finished about 2 o'clock at night and made a settlement with all the settlers. Happy would it be for me if I could make as much peace every day as I know I have done today. I am sure nothing would have been done about a settlement had I not urged the matter just as I did."

(Mr. Judd now visits the Governor of Vt. and describes his visit as follows.)

"June 4th, 1787. Crossed the river to Williston to see his excellency Governor Chittenden of Vermont. I found him in a small house in the woods."—Questions and answers:

QUES. In what manner must the surveyor be paid for running the outlines of the towns?

ANS. Those towns which were settled and located before the war the State of Vermont will pay for running the outlines.

QUES. (After showing him the advertisement and votes of our meeting), Will this meeting answer our purpose to act upon or not?

ANS. You had better warn a new meeting and take regular steps of the law, and then you need not fear about having any thing overhauled.

QUES. Will it be likely that we shall get a new grant of land to make up the deficiency in those towns that fall short according to charter?

ANS. This state would not wish to make up the damage done by New Hampshire, but if you have paid more money for towns than you ought, the legislature will undoubtedly give you that back in lands. That will ever be my advice. You can draw a petition for that purpose and bring to the assembly, and I will overlook it and see it is well stated, &c. You can as well do it yourself as to employ any one else to do it. It will be best to set forth how much your land falls short from the charter, and then cast up and see how much you have paid over what you ought to have paid, and I will help you all I can. You can, if you like, petition for Lunenburgh, to make up the deficiency, and then pay what the overplus tax money will not pay. (I reviewed the Holdbrook case to him and he said it was very well, for he was a worthless fellow.)

QUES. What shall we do with settlers now on pitches in the towns?

ANS. You must put into the warning for the meeting to have them hold their pitches, and you must not interrupt them, for I will take the part of the poor settlers rather than have them interrupted. You must give them more than granted, if you intend to have them peaceable. (Judd now returns to Coos.)

"Jan. 8, 1787. Went to Southbury, Ct., to a Coos (proprietors') meeting. Jo. Holdbrook had his vote of thanks read off to him, &c. David Hyde behaved very scandalously."

"Feb. 1st. Began an almanac for 1788, and took 50 acres of land in Lunenburgh, for a poor debt of 500 dollars of Wm. Langdon, one of the original proprietors of that town."

"March 25th. Went to hear Mr. Eli preach. He spoke from these words: 'To be carnal minded is death; but to be spiritual minded is life and peace.' He said much about the mind of a person, and that his actions were an index of it."

I will add a sermon:

"Man is born into trouble as the sparks fly upward." I shall divide my discourse into and confine it under the following heads: First, man's ingress into the world. Second, his progress through the world. Third, his egress out of the world,—

First, man comes into the world naked and bare;
Second, his progress through it is trouble and care:
Third, he goes out of it nobody knows where.

To conclude:

If you do well while here, you will fare well when there
I can tell you no more, if I preach a whole year."

"April 12, 1787. My birth day, 26 years old." (He now leaves his almanac with a printer, and starts for Vermont again.)

"November 10th. Tarry at Guildhall, to attend to my store and mill, sawed 2141 feet of boards for John Rich to-day."

(His diary of 1800 commences in Woodstock prison, where he was confined for debt. Officer Fitch arrested him by breaking into another man's house, where he struck him with a cane and presented a loaded pistol to his wife's breast. He was liberated, June 24th of this year.)

As the town histories contain most of the items which might be in place in a county chapter, I will mention but one incident in the political strife of 1812, 1813 and 1814.

In relation to the politics of that time, I would say that each party was ready and willing to injure the opposite. Every opportunity was eagerly embraced and every provocation possible given. So, after the lapse of 50 years it is impossible to arrive at the facts of all cases. The case I will mention was the shooting of Beach by Dennett, an officer of customs. The account at that time published is as follows: In September of 1813, Mr. Samuel Beach, of Canaan, Vt., wishing to repair a mill-dam in Canada, obtained a permit from the governor to take over a yoke of oxen to work on the dam. He accordingly sent a man forward with his team. The oxen were taken from him by Lieut. John Dennett. Mr. Beach, when endeavoring to obtain his oxen, was shot dead by Dennett. Dennett and his associates were put in Guildhall jail, from which Dennett escaped the following spring. The next August he was retaken, but not until mortally wounded by his pursuers. It appears that Dennett resisted, and was shot, while attempting to kill Mr. Morgan, by a Mr. Sperry, another of the pursuers. This is the substance of the story, as circulated by the federals; while the opposite party circulated and still say the following was true, and circumstances seem to favor the truth of the assertion:

In the fall of 1813, one Samuel Beach, of Canaan, owning mills in Canada, obtained a permit to take over a yoke of cattle to repair his dam. This he did several times, and after working them a few days would sell to the English and take in another yoke. This was soon reported to Gen. Cushman, who ordered Lieut. Dennett with a squad of men to put a stop to it. In attempting to do so, Beach leveled his gun at Dennett and snapped it, but it missed fire; while he was in the act Dennett discharged his gun at him, which took effect, killing Beach. Dennett and his associates were arrested and placed in Guildhall jail, but as many doubts seem to have arisen about the justice of the arrest, his associates from time to time were allowed to leave for their homes. Dennett walked about the house and yard as he chose, and finally went home in the spring and went to making buckets in the woods. Some little effort was made to find him, but he was not found. At length it became common talk that he was about home, and three men were commissioned to take him and return him to jail. The remainder is from Dennett's own words, after he knew he could live but a few hours: He says that he was on a log chopping, and the first intimation he had of any one being present he was shot, the ball entering and lodging in his back. They then bound him and took him to a village in Canaan, where a lumber wagon was procured, and he was tied in the bottom and the wagon was driven over the rough road to Guildhall; and, further, the wagon having no springs, it hurt him much to ride, and he plead with his captors to drive slow over rough places, which they not only refused to do but would drive off the road, so as to torture him the more. After lodging him in jail, Dr. Lyman, of Lancaster, extracted the ball; doubtless doing it in a very unskillful manner, perhaps being the worse for liquor at the time. Some thought his (Dennett's) enemies hired him to kill him in the operation, but it is not probable that that was the case. Be it as it may, he lived but a short time.

I have now told the stories of the two opposing parties, and the reader must form his own opinion of the case. It would not be strange, in these bitter times, if both parties were hasty in the discharge of their duty. That Beach was guilty of taking over cattle to sell, cannot be doubted.

COURTS.

The first Essex county court was holden at Lunenburgh, on the 3d Wednesday of December, 1800. Ambrose Grow was admitted to the bar, and seven entries were made for jury trial. The next term was holden at Brunswick, on the 3d Wednesday of June, 1801; Hon. Daniel Dane, chief judge. Samuel Phelps, of Lunenburgh, and Mills DeForest, of Lemington, assistant judges. Joseph Wait, of Brunswick, sheriff. The first trial in this court was at this term. The action was brought by John and Ann Hugh against James and Mary Lucas, for slander. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and assessed the damages at $14,41. The cost was $60,70. There has been one conviction for manslaughter—the case appeared as follows: Two brothers, Stephen and Martin Pellom, resided in Guildhall; their father was an East Indiaman, their mother a negress or mulatto. Stephen went and took a harrow that belonged to Martin, and while carrying it on his back he was assaulted by Martin with a club, and finally it seems threw down the harrow and went in for combat. Stephen, it appeared, struck Martin on the temple with a club, fracturing his skull and killing him. He was arrested the same day, viz., April 30, 1851, and was finally convicted of manslaughter.

Population of Essex Co. 1860.

Towns.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Averill,	5	7	12
Bloomfield,	180	140	320
Brighton,	490	455	945
Brunswick,	123	89	212
Canaan,	336	172	408
Concord,	687	604	1291
East Haven,	75	61	136
Ferdinand,	29	5	34
Granby,	66	66	132
Guildhall,	281	271	552
Lemington,	99	108	207
Lunenburgh,	534	500	1034
Maidstone,	145	114	259
Norton,	25	7	32
Victory,	113	99	212
Totals,	3088	2698	5786

TABLE OF COUNTY OFFICERS.

	Councilors and Senators for Essex Co.	Chief Judges.	Sheriffs.	State's Attorneys.	Judges of Probate.
1801		Daniel Dana,	Joseph Wait,	Elijah Foot,	Daniel Dana,
1802	I put down the	" "	" "	" "	" "
1803	names of the coun-	" "	" "	Levi Barnard,	" "
1804	cil that lived at the	" "	" "	" "	" "
1805	time of election in	" "	" "	" "	" "
1806	Essex County.	" "	William Hewes,	Seth Quishman,	" "
1807		" "	" "	" "	" "
1808		Micajah Ingham,	" "	" "	" "
1809	Haines French,	Daniel Dana,	" "	" "	" "
1810	" " Maidst'n.	Micajah Ingham,	" "	" "	Joseph Wait,
1811		" "	Oliver Ingham,	Joseph Berry,	Charles Cutler,
1812		David Hopkinson,	David Hubbard, jr.,	" "	" "
1813		Daniel Dana,	" "	Elijah Foot,	Daniel Dana,
1814		" "	" "	" "	" "
1815		David Hopkinson,	John Dean,	Joseph Berry,	Isaac Cushman,
1816		Oliver Ingham,	Rich Stevens,	" "	" "
1817		" "	Henry Hall,	" "	" "
1818		" "	Rich Stevens,	" "	" "
1819	Joseph Berry,	" "	" "	Bailey Denison,	" "
1820	" Guildhall,	" "	John Dean,	Seth Cushman,	" "
1821	" "	Benj. Hunkins,	Dyer Hibbard,	Joseph Berry,	" "
1822	" "	Joseph Berry,	Elijah Hill,	Seth Cushman,	" "
1823	" "	Wm. Gates,	Richard Stevens,	Joseph Berry,	Wm. Gates,
1824	" "	" "	Azariah Webb, jr.,	" "	" "
		CIRCUIT JUDGES.
1825		Stephen Royce,	Azariah Webb, jr.,	Seth Cushman,	William Gates,
1826		Samuel Prentice,	Rich Stevens,	" "	Royal Cutler,
1827		Stephen Royce,	Azariah Webb, jr.,	" "	William Gates,
1828		Samuel Prentice,	" "	David Hibbard, jr.,	Royal Cutler,
1829		Ephraim Paddock,	Henry Hall,	" "	" "
1830		" "	Chapin K. Brooks,	" "	" "
1831	Richardson Graves,	Stephen Royce,	Henry Hall,	" "	Wm. Gates,
1832	" "	Nicholas Baylis,	Azariah Webb, jr.,	James Steele,	" "
1833	" "	Stephen Royce,	Greenleaf Webb,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	" "
1834		Jacob Collamer,	Chapin K. Brooks,	James Steele,	" "
1835	Richardson Graves.	Isaac R. Redfield,	Greenleaf Webb,	" "	" "
	SENATORS.
1836	Wm. Gates,	Isaac R. Redfield.	Greenleaf Webb,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	Royal Cutler.
1837	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	Stephen Royce,	" "	" "	Joseph Gleason,
1838	" "	Isaac R. Redfield,	" "	" "	" "
1839	Geo. E. Holmes,	" "	George E. Holmes,	" "	" "
1840	Stephen Howe,	" "	Greenleaf Webb,	David Hibbard, jr.,	Royal Cutler.
1841	Moody Rich,	" "	George E. Holmes,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	Azariah Webb, jr.,
1842	Warner Bingham,	" "	George W. Gates,	" "	" "
1843	" "	Charles K. Williams.	" "	" "	Moody Rich,
1844	George Marshall,	Isaac R. Redfield,	" "	" "	" "
1845	" "	" "	Beach Blodgett,	Wm. T. Barron,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,
1846	David Hibbard, jr.,	Daniel Kellogg,	Preston May,	" "	Jonah Brooks,
1847	" "	Charles Davis,	R. C. Benton,	Wm. H. Hartshorn,	" "
1848	Ormsel Crawford,	Hiland Hall,	George W. Gates,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	Isaac Cummings,
1849	" "	Luke P. Poland,	Greenleaf Webb,	" "	Jonah Brooks,
1850	John Dewey,	" "	" "	Wm. H. Hartshorn,	" "
1851	" "	" "	James W. Cooper,	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	R. W. Freeman,
1852	Henry S. Walter,	" "	William Rich,	" "	" "
1853	" "	" "	N. W. French,	R. C. Benton,	O. Crawford,
1854	Wm. H. Hartshorn,	" "	" "	" "	William Chandler,
1855	" "	" "	D. H. Beattie,	" "	" "
1856	R. C. Benton,	A Peck,	" "	Wm. H. Hartshorn,	" "
1857	" "	Luke P. Poland,	" "	Geo. N. Dale,	" "
1858	N. W. French,	" "	Wm. Cheney,	" "	Jonah Brooks,
1859	Myron S. Chandler,	" "	" "	" "	" "
1860	T. G. Beattie,	" "	H. W. Bedell,	Oscar F. Harvey,	" "
1861	" "	" "	" "	" "	" "
1862	D. A. Beattie,	" "	" "	Henry Heywood,	" "
1863	" "	" "	Charles Chase.	" "	" "

The following is a list of Attorneys admitted to the bar at Essex County Court:

Ambrose Grow,	1800	David Hibbard,	1822
Benjamin Bissell,	1801	S. W. Cooper,	1822
Seth Cushman,	1804	Francis E. Phelps	1824
Andrew Judson,	1806	J. M. Cushman,	1825
Peter Converse,	1806	James Steel,	1827
Daniel Cobb.	1809	Charles C. Cushman,	1830
Samuel A. Pearson,	1810	George Paine,	1831
John N. Tilliston,	1810	Wm. Heywood, jr.,	1831
Elisha Hinds,	1811	A. H. Joy,	1837
James Berry,	1811	Hiram A. Fletcher,	1838
Thomas Denison,	1812	John S. Roby,	1844
Zera Cutler,	1812	John Nichols,	1844
Charles Robinson,	1813	R C. Benton,	1851
Samuel Ingham,	1818	D. G. Peabody,	1852
Bailey Davidson,	1818	Henry Heywood,	1860
Nelson Chamberlain,	1819	Geo. W. Hartshorn,	1860
J. W. Williams,	1820	—— Tonney,	1861
Thomas Peverly,	1821

List of Attorneys that have practiced and those that continue to practice at Essex County Court:

Names.	Residence.	Com'd.	Closed.
John Mattocks,	Peacham,	1800	1842
Elijah Frost,	Guildhall,	1800	1816
Wm. Mattocks,	Danville,	1801	1840
D. S. Bartrum.	Danville,	1802	1804
Levi Barnard,	Lunenburgh & Lancaster, N. H.	1802	1821
Asa King,	" "	1803	1805
A. Sprague,	" "	1803	1805
E. Knight,	" "	1803	1804
Wm. A. Palmer, jr.,	St. Johnsbury & Danville,	1803	1807
Seth Cushman,	Guildhall,	1804	1844
Wm. A. Griswold,	Danville,	1805	1819
Reuben Grant,	Concord,	1806	1812
Samuel A. Pearson,	Lancaster, N. H.	1810	1838
John N. Tilliston,	Northumberland N.H.	1810	1815

Digitized by Google

A. Wetherbee,	Waterford,	1809	1821
Joseph Berry,	Guildhall,	1811	1820
Wm. Farrar,	Lancaster, N. H.	1811	1819
Ephraim Paddock,	St. Johnsbury,	1812	1840
Zara Cutler,	Northumberland N.H.	1813	1815
Isaac Fletcher,	Lyndon,	1816	1836
David Hibbard,	Concord,	1816	1846
Charles Davis,	Danville & Waterford,	1818	1840
Bailey Denison,	Guildhall and Northumberland N. H.	1819	1822
Thomas Peabody, jr.,	Northumberland N.H.	1822	1829
Saunders W. Cooper,	Guildhall and Lancaster, N. H.	1822	1829
Turner Stevenson,	Lancaster, N. H.	1824
J. Sheaf,	Lancaster, N. H.	1825	1830
James Bell,	Walden,	1825	1841
Ira Young,	Colebrook and Lancaster, N. H.	1825	1845
J. W. Williams,	Lancaster, N. H.	1826	1865
J. S. Wells,	Guildhall and Lancaster, N. H.	1828	1846
J. D. Stoddard,	Waterford & St. Johnsbury,	1829
Jesse Cooper,	Canaan	1831	1852
Wm. Heywood,	Lunenburgh & Guildhall, Lancaster, N. H.	1832
Titus Hull,	Guildhall & Northumberland, N. H.	1835	1842
H. N. Wead,	Guildhall,	1835	1838
John Dean, jr.,	Lunenburgh,	1830	1843
Thomas Bartlett,	Lyndon,	1840	1861
H. A. Fletcher,	Colebrook & Lancaster, N. H.	1840
Jacob Benton,	Lancaster, N. H.	1843
O. H. Hartt,	Montpelier,	1843	1845
John Nichols,	Guildhall,	1844	1846
John S. Roby,	Lancaster, N. H.	1844	1846
W. T. Barrow,	Guildhall,	1845	1848
George C. Cahoon,	Lyndon,	1846
W. Burns,	Lancaster, N. H.	1846
W. H. Hartshorn,	Guildhall,	1847
Dymon Flint,	Colebrook, N. H.	1848	1856
A. J. Willard,	St. Johnsbury,	1849
Benj. F. Whidden,	Lancaster, N. H.	1849	1862
O. T. Brown,	East St. Johnsbury,	1849
Geo. A. Bingham,	Lyndon.	1849	1853
C. W. Burt,	Colebrook, N. H.	1849	1854
H. S. Bartlett,	Lyndon,	1850	1856
S. W. Slade,	St. Johnsbury,	1850	1861
Geo. C. Williams,	Lancaster, N. H.	1850
R. C. Benton,	Lunenburgh,	1857	1858
—— Roberts,	Lyndon,	1852	1854
D. A. Rogers,	Colebrook, N. H.	1855	1858
Ira A. Ramsey,	Guildhall & Colebrook, N. H.	1855
A. Barker,	Colebrook, N. H.	1855
Ossian Ray,	Stewartstown and Lancaster, N. H.	1855
John W. Edwards,	Derby,	1856
George N. Dale,	Guildhall and Island Pond,	1857
O. F. Harvey,	West Concord,	1858
Geo. W. Hartshorn,	Canaan,	1858
Charles D. Johnston,	Stratford, N. H.	1859	1861
Benjamin H. Steel,	Derby Line,	1859
Jonathan Ross,	St. Johnsbury,	1859
Wm. S. Dodd,	Colebrook, N. H.	1860
Henry Heywood,	Guildhall,	1861

[In the foregoing lists I have endeavored to come as near positive certainty as possible, yet it is not impossible that some names may be wrong. I would acknowledge the gratuitous assistance of Henry Heywood, Esq. of Guildhall, in searching the county records, as his aid has been of great benefit to the correctness of the items.]

The Grand Trunk Railway, connecting Portland with Montreal, was chartered in 1848, and built in 1853, through Essex county. It crosses the Connecticut at the mouth of the Nulhegan from New Hampshire, and runs in a northwesterly direction through Bloomfield, Brunswick and Ferdinand, to Island Pond village which is in Brighton, containing the custom-house for the entry of goods passing to and from Canada. From Brighton it runs E. of N. into Canada, passing through a corner of Morgan, in Orleans county, Warren's gore and Norton. When the road was first surveyed it was intended to run up the valley of the Connecticut to Canaan, but on account of offers from the Canadians to build to Island Pond and establish the custom-house there instead of on the line—they then owning only the Canada end of the road and the expense being greater to them in building to Canaan—it was finally changed to the present route. The Grand Trunk Co. at length bought the entire road, and being English captialists now talk of removing the custom-house from Island Pond to the line, yet it probably will not be done at present.

Views.

To the lovers of natural scenery the valley of the Connecticut, from the head of the fifteen-mile falls to Canaan, cannot be surpassed in loveliness. The meandering folds of the river, the abrupt headlands, the towering summits of the White Mountains, the variety of timber land, all conspire to render it a changing scene and one of peculiar interest and beauty. Almost every town in the county boasts of some hill or mountain from the summit of which scenes of peculiar beauty lay spread before you, and such in reality is the case.

The White Mountains are in full view from the river towns, and may be seen perhaps from every town in the county. The best view of the White Mountain range attainable is however from Lunenburgh. Seen from that locality they stand out in all their boldness. Perhaps the best view is from near the village, but it is fine from almost every part of the town. From Mt. Byron in Maidstone, the bows of the Connecticut river, five of them which are to be seen—will spell the word Union, each bow forming a letter sufficiently distinct for recognition. Looking over into New Hampshire and also into Canada for 40 or 50 miles, the landscape is exceedingly beautiful. The White Mountains are in full view, and the profile of the old man of the mountains in Franconia notch is visible, but with this phenomenon—that the old man of the mountain appears to be lying on his back, his rugged profile intent skyward. Many other views might be pointed out, but to gain a good idea of them it requires a visit in person.

Digitized by Google

BLOOMFIELD.

BY HON. WILLIAM BURBANK.

This town is situated on the Connecticut River; and is bounded W. by the unorganized township of Lewis, N. by Lemington and S. by Brunswick. It was chartered by Gov. Wentworth, June, 1762, under the name of Minnehead. By the terms of the charter the township was to be 6 miles square, and divided into 70 shares. The grantees were 63 in number.* 500 acres, which was to be accounted two shares, were reserved for the Governor's right, one share for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts, one for a glebe for the benefit of the Church of England, one for the first settled minister in the town, and one for the benefit of schools in town. It appears the town was first surveyed in 1796, by Andrew Beers. This survey was unsatisfactory, and in 1798 E. W. Judd was appointed to make a new one. This survey also proving unsatisfactory, Jonas Baker was appointed to re-survey the same in 1802, and the township was run out into lots of 112 acres each. By whom or at what time the town was first settled, we have no definite data. But from the best information obtained it is reasonable to suppose that Thomas Lamkin was the first settler, and came into town in 1796. Who his first associates were does not appear to be definitely known, but in 1802 there had been nearly 30 "pitches" made in town. Among the settlers at this date were Gaius Kibbe, James P. Frazier, J. J. French, Peter Mills, Stone Mills, Eben Wright, Raymond Fuller, Daniel Holbrook and Samuel Healey. Joseph Stevens also came not far from this time. He and Mr. Healey* are the only ones now remaining; both are 80 years old or upwards. But few of the early settlers remained in town for any great length of time. They commenced under disadvantageous circumstances, and many became discontented and left, some allowing their lands to be sold for taxes. From 1812 to 1820 the population scarcely increased at all. In 1830 the population numbered 150. What it numbers at the present time (April 1862) is not accurately known; but there are from 70 to 75 families.† Only that portion in the vicinity of the Connecticut and Nulhegan rivers has as yet become settled, but the town is gradually increasing in population and wealth, and by the stimulus imparted to it by the construction of the Grand Trunk Railroad (which passes through the southerly portion) is becoming a town of considerable importance, so that no town in the county now presents greater inducements to settlers.

At the junction of the Nulhegan and Connecticut rivers the Messrs. Baldwin have a superior establishment for manufacturing lumber of all kinds, furnishing employment to numerous hands, and a good market for all such as are disposed to turn an honest penny by drawing their spare lumber during the winter months. The market for all kinds of produce is also rendered excellent.

The surface of the town is uneven, presenting almost every variety of scenery. A few meadow or interval farms are found on the banks of the Connecticut and Nulhegan rivers, but in many places the upland bluffs extend to the rivers. The soil is mainly good; in certain sections it is very excellent, while in other sections it appears only valuable for pasturage and timber. A large portion of the township is covered with valuable timber of various kinds, for which a branch of the Nulhegan river, which passes through the center, furnishes conveyance to the mills. There are other streams of sufficient power for manufacturing purposes, some of which have been improved. The number of lumber mills in town is now four, being located in the different neighborhoods in town. There are numerous other little streams formed by springs of the purest water, gushing out and trickling down the hill-sides of almost every lot.

*GRANTEES OF BLOOMFIELD, ORIGINALLY MINNEHEAD.—Rev. Noah Waddams, Rev. Elijah Sill, Rev. Joel Bardwell, Rev. Sylvanus Osborne, Agus Judson, Beach Tomlinson, Elijah Mills, Samuel Jones, Samuel Hurd, David Baldwin, jr., Medad Wright, Ephraim Beers, Nathan Beardsley, Brewster Dayton, Stephen Frost, John Haines, Thomas Wooster, Joseph Holbrook, Israel Jonhson, Samuel Chatfield, jr., Wooster Twitchell, Joseph Davis, Samuel Nichols, Benjamin Bennet, Heth Garlick, Reuben Booth, Mark Langdon, Daniel Bostwick, Daniel Pickett, Samuel Canfield, Joseph Wheaton, Samuel Mallery, Stephen Morehouse, Capt. Nathaniel Bosworth, Daniel Averill, Moses Averill, Elias Kene, David Hawley, Josiah Caswell, Daniel Kene, Stephen Nobles, Israel Nobles, Morgan Nobles, Zepaniah Branch, Benjamin Mallery, Butler Mallery, Capt. Elijah Whittlesey, Thomas Beeman, Aaron Phelps, jr., Samuel Prindle, Capt. Nathan Hicok, John Marsh, Portsmouth, Joseph Calhoun, John Calhoun, William Cogswell, Samuel Averill, Hon. Theodore Atkinson, William Temple, Esq., Richard Webird, Esq., Daniel Warner, Esq., Zachariah Nobles, David Calhoun, James Calhoun.

*Both since deceased.

†In 1800, population 220.

Ecclesiastical.

BY REV. ABNER HOWARD.

The Methodist Episcopal church in Bloomfield have one house of worship, built in 1859—the only meeting-house north of Guildhall on the Vermont side of the Connecticut river, a distance of nearly 40 miles. Previous to that time public worship was held in school-houses, dwelling-houses and barns, and sometimes in the grove. Since the conference of 1860 Bloomfield has been a charge, and regular Sabbath preaching has been granted them; previously, though regular preaching, yet not more than half the time generally.

Before 1844, and while the New Hampshire and Vermont Conferences were one, Bloomfield was connected with all the towns on both sides of Connecticut river as far down as Lancaster on the New Hampshire side, and Lunenburg on the Vermont side; and at an early date included those towns.

Hence, previous to 1844 the first name by which the circuit was known was Lancaster, then Monadnoc from a mountain of that name in Lemington, a town north of this on the Connecticut; later Columbia, which name is retained on the New Hampshire side of the river. Since 1844, the time that the New Hampshire and Vermont Conference was divided, the circuit has been known as Guildhall circuit, which included the towns north to Canada, with a part of Harriford in Canada, till 1860, when Guildhall was set to Lunenburgh.

For want of statistical matter this account must needs be imperfect; yet many facts of interest have been gleaned from the memory of the aged, worthy of a place in the history of the state and church; these with the written records will be of interest to the present inhabitants of the town and perhaps the future, if none other.

Among the first settlers of the town memory holds sacred the visits and preaching of the man of God. Among whom are Hale Whiting and Noah Buffington, who must have held meetings more than 50 years ago and probably 60. A Mr. Lack was associated with them also. These were local preachers, we believe. After these were Ezra Kellogg, ——— Plumly and H. B. H. Norris, all of whom labored with more or less success.

Not till 1824, however, have we accounts of a society being formed in town. During the spring, summer and fall of 1824, a very general revival was enjoyed through this town, reaching to others; and a society was then formed, which has continued until the present. The number that composed the first society we have not the means of knowing, neither of the additions and removals by death and otherwise.

At present the records show the number of members 51, not all however in Bloomfield.

Since the time of the revival in 1824, the following named preachers and others have labored in town, viz: Chester Levings, who seemed the principal means in the hands of God of starting the good work in 1824, though in the latter part of that revival Nathaniel Norris, Joseph Baker and Father Marshall of Stratford, N. H., the latter named administered the ordinance of baptism to the first converts in that revival. Mr. Levings first came to this place as an exhorter or local preacher, but joined Conference and was stationed on the circuit afterward in connection with Joseph Baker. When brother Levings left, Benjamin Brown and N. Norris followed with good success. B. Brown located after having labored two years in Brunswick. Charles Cowen and a brother Latham followed them, with what success we are not informed, nor yet how long they tarried. In 1830 we find a brother Gleason and Holman Drew, the latter remained two years, much beloved and full of faith and good works. Then comes a brother Mann, of whom we know but little. Not far from this time came Caleb Fales, who has been battling for Christ and humanity until the present time. During a few years a link or two in the chain of itinerancy is missing.

A brother Maseure comes in previous to 1844, at which time the Vermont and New Hampshire Conference was divided, at which time Ira Beard was stationed by Conference and Ira Carter sent by the presiding elder at Guildhall.

The following year Ira Beard has the circuit without a co-laborer—a distance of nearly 40 miles. I. Beard stands connected with Guildhall circuit the third year; associated with him during his second year is the name of D. S. Dexter. This brings us to 1847. John Gale has the circuit from 1847 to 1848. As his successor James Smith labors two years, after whom comes Adna Newton. During brother N's time of labor a parsonage house was built, and consumed by fire after the whole was completed; and another was erected in its place under brother Newton's supervision. L. P. Cushman followed A. Newton in 1852, and labored with zeal one year from Guildhall to Harriford, C. E. In 1853 Alexander McMullin and Abner Howard were appointed to this circuit, during which time three-fourths of the Sabbaths were spent in this town. In 1854 A. McMullin has the entire charge. During the time of brother McMullin's labors a very good revival was enjoyed in this town, and several were added to the church. Joseph Enright followed Mr. McMullin, and labored one year. The following year Conference left the circuit to be supplied, which was done by a Mr. Little from Concord Biblical Institute, N. H.

In 1857 the charge again is supplied by J. Adams, from Guildhall.

In 1858 John W. Bridge labored with very good success; his labors were confined to this town and Lemington during this and the following year, during which the society built their house of worship. While Mr. Bridge was with this people the interests of Christ's kingdom were revived.

In 1860 Abner Howard was appointed to this charge, since which time his labors have been confined to this town. His term of labor will expire at the close of this conference year, which ends in April, 1862. In 1862 Harry R. Stevens was appointed to this charge, and labored two years with good success. Since which time the church has been supplied by Rev. Moses Pattee. The church, during the past five years, has greatly improved, and is now in a very prosperous condition.

The following are those who have labored in town as presiding elders: Mr. Savage, John Lord, Mr. Scarrit, Mr. Hoyt, C. D. Cahoon, S. P. Williams, A. T. Bullard, J. Currier, S. Chamberlin and P. Merrill, whose services will close with the conference year.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

In 1844, or about that time, a small Calvinist Baptist church was formed here, partly of members previously connected with a Baptist church in Stratford, N. H. These churches were irregularly supplied for some years by elder Abram Bedell and Rev. G. W. Butler and others. This church has a new and commodious house of worship at North Stratford, and is supplied by Rev. Charles Walker.†

LIST OF SOLDIERS IN THE LATE WAR.

Alonzo A. Martin, Ezra W. Martin, Alvin Martin,* Charles Snow,* Sumner Snow, Oliver Morse.* Daniel Morse,* Nathan M. Johnson, Newell Stevens, Nelson Noyes,† William Cooper,† Calvin Fuller, Myron C. Fuller, Stephen Fuller,† William Robinson,† Eliphalet P. Moulton, George A. Currier, Alburn A. Currier, John W. Stevens, Isaac M. Wood, Samuel O. Shoff—21. In addition to the above, there were six hired substitutes credited to Bloomfield—27; and Charles B. Silver, Carlos T. Pulsifer, Frank Pulsifer, Walter S. Johnson,† Edwin Holbrook, Enoch C. Fuller,† and Rev. Selden B. Currier, all residents of Bloomfield, served with honor in the war, but were credited elsewhere.

BRIGHTON.

BY H. P. BOWMAN.

Brighton is situated in the western part of Essex County, in latitude 44° 45′, and longitude 5° 6′. The township is nearly square, the four corners representing the four cardinal points of the compass. It is bounded N. E. by Lewis' and Avery's gore, S. E. by Ferdinand, S. W. by Newark and Westmore, and N. W. by Morgan and Charleston. It was originally named Random, by Hon. Joseph Brown, from its being a random purchase from an agent in Providence, R. I. The charter, signed by the Hon. Thomas Chittenden, Governor, and Thomas Tolman, Secretary, was granted to Col. Joseph Nightingale and 65 others, Aug. 30, 1781. The first proprietors' meeting was held in Concord, Vt., March 29, 1804. James Whitlaw was elected moderator, and Nathaniel Jenks, proprietors' clerk. The town was organized in March, 1832. Joseph Melendy was chosen first town clerk; John Bishop, Wm. Washburn and John Stevens selectmen.

The September following Timothy Corey was elected representative, and the same year, Nov. 3d, the name of the town was † February, 1867, this church is now supplied by Rev. Geo. A. Glines.

* Killed in battle. † Died of disease.

changed to that of Brighton, that name being chosen by the inhabitants of the town. Miss Lucy M. Kilby taught the first school in the summer of 1829, and Miss Abigal Kilby taught the subsequent winter, the average number of scholars being 35.

The old town of Random was first surveyed by Joseph Whitlaw in 1790 and '91. Since its organization a part of Wenlock and Caldersburg has been annexed to it, and a part of Brighton annexed to Ferdinand. Its area now is about 33,000 acres. The first white man known to have visited the town was a Mr. Lindsley, in the year 1784; he died a few years since in Clifton, C. E., at a very advanced age, but up to the time of his death retained his faculties, and would relate his excursion to this town, in company with some St. Francis Indians, in pursuit of game, having had some thrilling adventures and hair-breadth escapes.

The first person who settled in Brighton was Enos Bishop, in 1820. John Stevens followed in 1821. John Cargill commenced, in that part called Caldersburg, about the same time. John Kilby built a log cabin and moved his family in October, 1827. Senaca Foster and family followed 9 weeks afterwards. John Kilby built the first framed house in 1828. Phrelan Rosebrooks moved his family into town in March, 1828, being the fifth family. Mr. Rosebrooks built the first framed barn. He was the first justice of the peace, having been appointed in 1828. When Mr. Bishop and Mr. Stevens came into town, they were obliged to travel on foot 16 miles from the Connecticut river through a dense wilderness, and for a long time had to bring their supplies from there in the winter on hand-sleds, the snow being so deep it was impossible to use teams, and the men could travel in no way themselves except on snow-shoes. The early settlers in town, not mentioned above, were James Blake, James Corey, Mr. Morse.

The following are the names of the Town Clerks and Representatives since the town was organized:

Town Clerks.—Wm. Melendy, Olney Aldrich, Owen Brown, Anson Brown, Elias Aldrich, Harris Brown, Harvey Coe, W. Cheney, E. W. Hoffman, A. J. Downing, W. Mason, J. W. Davis.

Representatives.—Timothy Corey, Wm. Washburn, Elias Aldrich, John Stevens, Isaac W. Aldrich, Harvey Coe, Anson Coe, Harris Brown, W. R. Rosebrooks, Arba Jay, S. D. Hobson, G. G. Waterhouse, N. P. Bowman.

A post-office was first established Aug. 16, 1849. Postmasters up to the present time: Harvey Coe, J. D. Gilkey, Henry Hopkins, Henry M. Hoffman, E. W. Hoffman and James W. Davis.

The allotment of the first division of lands was made by James Whitlaw, in the year 1804, each lot containing 150 acres. The second division, by Abner Allyn and Steven Cole, of Charleston, and Miles Coe, of Newark, 76 acres to each lot. The third division was lotted by A. E. Judevine, Henry Coe and Charles Cummings, each lot 111 acres.

The first public road was the old Magog road, which connected Brunswick on the Connecticut river with Derby or Magog lake, and was built by Hon. Timothy Hinman, of Derby, and was the scene of much strife during the war of 1812, in consequence of attempts to smuggle cattle into Canada from New Hampshire.

While Mr. Hinman was at work on the road, in the northern part of this town, being some distance from their camp, at the close of the day he concluded not to return to it, but built a fire, and with his men numbering in all thirteen, lay down in a row upon the ground. During the night the wind arose and blew down a large hemlock tree which fell between the men and the fire, so near as to throw the embers completely over them, and had it fallen but a few inches the other way would have instantly destroyed the whole company.

Sometime previous to building the road Judge Hinman started alone upon snow-shoes for Connecticut river; in the early part of the day it was quite warm and the snow melted so as to make it very heavy traveling and completely saturated his moccasins before night, and it became very cold, when Mr. Hinman found both his feet were frozen, and he traveled in this condition some distance till he arrived at the Nulhegan river, where he removed the moccasins and sat all night with his feet in the water, being unable to remove them on account of the severe cold. In the morning he bandaged them up, put on his snow-shoes, and succeeded in reaching his destination in safety.

The first child born in town perished with its mother before assistance could be rendered them by their nearest neighbors, which were some miles distant. She was the wife of Mr. Davis, before mentioned. The first child born, which lived, was Ezekiel Foster. The first death was a Mr. Cargill, a brother of John Cargill. He was at work with his brother clearing land, and in falling a tree his ax was struck and the but of it driven into his side. He was immediately removed with the intention of taking him to his friends in New Hampshire, but died before they reached the Connecticut river.

Digitized by Google

The first couple married was Amos Currier to Miss Clarinda Williams, in the year 1832, by Phrelan Rosebrooks, Esq. Enos Bishop built the first house, upon the west side of a beautiful sheet of water called Knowlton lake, now Island Pond. The land is now owned by widow Stevens. Mrs. Bishop said she often sat in her doorway and saw the bears with their cubs pass down to drink in the pond, and deer and fawns playing in the water and on the beach. The early settlers at first were obliged to go to Derby Line, a distance of 20 miles, to get their milling done; afterwards, for many years, went to Charleston, in boats, 12 miles, taking them two days to perform the journey.

The number of organized school districts in town at this time is 7, with 175 pupils; average time of schooling per year, 6½ months.

The first missionary who visited the town was Rev. Mr. Heath, of the Methodist persuasion; afterwards the Rev. Simeon Parmelee, for over 30 years pastor of the Congregational church.

Religious meetings were frequently held here by Rev. James Allen, of Charleston, a Freewill Baptist; and the Rev. Mr. Clark, a Congregationalist, from Morgan; but for the last five years the inhabitants, with a little aid from the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, have been able to sustain preaching most of the time. There is now a small church organized and quite a large and flourishing society of the Congregational order, having within a few years built a fine church by voluntary subscription, and for the last two years* secured the services of Rev. Charles Clark, a graduate of the University of Vermont, a thorough scholar and a young man of promise. There is a large and flourishing Sabbath school numbering about 50 scholars.

In the year 1858 a Roman Catholic Mission was established, and the year following a church edifice erected. Since which time the Rev. Mr. Brown, of Compton, C. E., has regularly officiated once in two weeks to a congregation numbering about 150. This society has exerted a wholesome influence in the community by having suppressed, in some measure, intemperance, as well as noise and disturbance upon the Sabbath.

The people contribute liberally to the different objects of the church and society, as well as all other objects of charity, which are very numerous, situated as they are upon the great thoroughfare, the Grand Trunk Railway; and there cannot be found a town in the state, of equal size, where a larger sum can be raised in a short time for benevolent purposes than this.

There are no very wealthy men in town, neither are there many very poor men. All get their living by the sweat of their brow, and all have to exercise habits of economy incident to a rigorous climate like ours.

There is a masonic lodge numbering about 35 members, and they have a fine hall richly furnished.

The township is quite mountainous, but only a few rise so abrupt as to prevent the cultivation of the land. It is heavily timbered—the western portion with hard, and the eastern with soft timber; although the lumbermen have been busy for several years, there still remains a large amount of pine, spruce and other timber suitable for shipment, and which continually supply two large saw-mills propelled by steam, and four by water. Most of the lumber is shipped by railroad to Portland, and a large quantity of sugar box shooks are manufactured and shipped to Cuba.

There are 8 ponds or lakes in this township, the largest formerly called Knowlton lake, a name given it by Mr. Knowlton, one of the first surveyors; but latterly called Island Pond, from having near its center an island containing an area of 22 acres, which also gives the name to the village and post-office at the outlet. It is about two miles long and about one and a half broad; it abounds in fine salmon trout weighing from

*Written in 1862.

1 to 15 pounds; the water is very clear and deep, the whole surrounded by mountains which slope gradually, giving it the appearance of an immense basin, covered to the shore of the pond with a mixture of hard timber and evergreen, forming altogether one of the most beautiful landscapes to be found in New England. The pond lies about 1250 feet above the level of the sea, and is the hight of land between Memphremagog lake, on the west, and the Connecticut river on the east. The waters of the pond find their way into the lake on the west, and the principal branch of the Nulhegan takes its rise but a few rods from the pond in the east, so near is it that an excavation of five feet would turn the waters of the pond into the Connecticut.

There are three rivers in town, viz: the Clyde, Pherrin's river and the Nulhegan. The Clyde, which is the outlet to Island Pond, was named by one of the early surveyors, Mr. Whitlaw, from his partiality to a river of that name in Scotland. Pherrin's river, which empties into the Clyde about a mile below the outlet, frequently rises quite suddenly, swelling the waters of the latter so as to change its current and cause it to run into the pond with great force for 10 hours or more, until the pond is full or the water subsides below, when it will again change and rush out.

Several years before any settlement here a compay of explorers came up the Clyde from Charleston, encamping near the outlet the first night. The next day resumed their journey, for the purpose of going round the pond, and encamped upon the opposite side the second night, intending to lodge at their old camp near the outlet the next. During the night a heavy rain fell and on their arrival they found their camp all right, but a strange phenomenon had happened during their absence. What they supposed to be an outlet proved to be an inlet. Without understanding the cause of the change, they started for home, and it was many years before they could make their neighbors believe such a thing had actually occurred—and not until the cause was discovered. Large tracts of level land border upon the Clyde, when cleared are very valuable for agricultural purposes. Mr. Fennessy, the present station agent, succeeded in bringing a large tract under cultivation, and it proves to be equal to any of the rich bottoms upon the Winooski or Otter Creek. There is a fine water privilege on this river, about two miles from the village, one upon Pherrin's river, about one mile from the village, and directly on the line of the railroad, also a large number on the smaller streams in different parts of the town. The eastern and southern portion of the town is a dense wilderness inhabited only by those engaged in the lumbering business, while the western portion is better adapted for farming purposes and well repays the husbandman for his toil.

There is a copper mine in the western part of the township on land owned by Dr. Harvey Coe. It never has been worked, but some very fine specimens have been taken from it, and eventually, no doubt, will prove a source of profit to the worker.

The water in this township is also very pure and soft. Near the southern boundary there is a medicinal spring, which is beginning to be resorted to by invalids. The water very much resembles the celebrated Clarendon Springs, and is found to be a specific for scrofulous and all kinds of cutaneous diseases.

The Grand Trunk railroad was built through the town in 1853. The depot, a large hotel, and other buildings connected with the road, were erected the same year. The stock of this road is owned mostly by English capitalists, and they have spared no expense in the building of the iron bridges and otherwise making it one of the most complete furnished roads in America. It has not been very remunerative to the stockholders, although it has done an immense business for the last few years and still increasing—transporting freight from the western states to Portland, there to be shipped coastwise or to Europe, returning laden with merchandise for the Canadas and west, connecting at Portland with weekly steamers from Liverpool most of the year.

The village of Island Pond, located upon the line of the road, is the great half-way place between Portland and Montreal; and the port of entry for all the traffic over the road, all the cars stopping here over night makes it a place of considerable importance. The railroad company have erected buildings here at a cost of $58,000. And money paid employees at this point amounts to over $26,000 per annum.

Digitized by Google

The growth of this town has been almost unprecedented in Vermont. In 1850 the number of inhabitants was 193; at the present time,* over 1000. The village alone containing about 700 inhabitants, 4 stores—some doing a large wholesale business—3 groceries, 1 church, and 2 school-houses, 1 large steam saw-mill, various mechanic shops, with 2 large, fine hotels—no better conducted hotel can be found in any country town in New England—the Island Pond House, kept by G. G. Waterhouse, and the Vermont House, by Dimond Stone.

In 1856 there was a disastrous fire in the village, consuming a large unfinished block, owned by John A. Poor, of Portland, a portion of which was occupied as a store by A. J. Green; from thence the fire communicated to the Green Mountain House, a large hotel occupied by J. D. & S. N. Gilkey, entirely consuming it, together with all the barns and outbuildings, and an unoccupied new dwelling-house; thence to a store occupied by Howard, Hobart & Chamberlin, destroying property amounting not far from $30,000, which was a severe blow to a young place like this and from which it did not entirely recover for several years. A store owned by Mr. Montferrand occupies the site of the Poor block, and one owned by Gilkey & Denison occupies the site of the hotel, and on the other stands a store owned by Dyer & Bartlett, and at the present time doing a safe and increasing business.

The custom-house, kept in the depot, was established in 1853. Joseph Smith, of Berkshire, was appointed the first deputy collector, but the business having increased to such an extent the government increased the force until there are now four officers required to do the business. The names of those who have held commissions in the office to the present time are Joseph Smith, H. O. Pike, Daniel Miller, A. J. Downing, A. S. Gore, R. G. Hopkinson, P. S. Benjamin, A. J. Davis, and the present incumbents, George N. Dale, N. W. Bingham, D. S. Storrs, and N. P. Barnum.

The amount of business done at this office is very large. The imports for the year ending April 30, 1862, amounting to $2,769,-212; exports, same time, $5,038,242.

Island Pond village is about 16 miles from the boundary line of Canada, and about the same distance from the Connecticut river, and nearly all the distance, either way, being a dense wilderness. An effort is being made to obtain a charter for a railroad from St. Johnsbury to Island Pond, through Concord, Victory and Granby, up the valley of Moose river. When completed, it will develop the resources and open up a tract of country consisting of an area of 100,000 acres of heavily timbered land, most of it good for agricultural purposes; a feasible route, and altogether as fine a section as can be found in Vermont, but now uninhabited, except by the wild denizen of the forest. The natural market for this immense tract is down the Connecticut valley, and a project of this kind well deserves the candid consideration of the legislature. In anticipation of such a connection by railroad, with the facilities of railroad communication already existing; the steady increase of wealth and population; the low price of land in the vicinity, with good society, good schools, with abundant facilities for most all kinds of business enterprise; the beautiful lake and mountain scenery; the rivers and lakes abounding in fish; the forests with game; the healthiness of the place, together with one of the best physicians and surgeons in the state (Dr. C. C. Adams); in view of all this, Island Pond and vicinity holds out strong inducements for the capitalist, the merchant, mechanic, pleasure seeker, sportsman and the invalid.

The River Clyde from Lake Memphremagog, Island Pond, and the Nulhegan river to the Connecticut was once the favorite route of the St. Francis and Algonquin Indians in their travels from Canada to the southern part of New England. A few years since an aged Algonquin stated to one of the townsmen that in his youth there was water communication most of the year between Island Pond and Nulhegan Pond thence to the Connecticut, that he had often traveled the route in his bark canoe for the purposes of hunting and fishing, and within a few years the marks upon the trees where they stretched and dried their moose skins could be plainly seen. Some arrow-heads are often found near the pond, and in 1856 a company of Indians came and disinterred the bones of their ancestors and carried them away, not willing their graves should be desecrated by the ploughshare of the pale faces.

Digitized by Google

De Witt Clinton once surveyed this route for a canal to connect the waters of Lake Champlain with Casco Bay. His route lay through this town, and the minutes, report, &c., of the survey are now on file at the department in Washington. It was made under authority of the Government; and although a feasible route was found to exist, the project not being matured before the introduction of railroads it found its rest, and the iron horse of the Grand Trunk Railroad now passes for some distance over the proposed route.

In the extreme west part of the town is a small stream called the "Vale of Tears." At the close of the war of 1812, two soldiers who were returning to their homes in Charleston, having traveled a long distance through the wilderness and consumed all their provisions, becoming weary near the close of the day sat down upon the bank of the stream to rest and refresh themselves by partaking of the last of their whisky. One of them accidentally dropped the bottle upon a stone and broke it. The disappointment was so great that those brave men, who could face the red coat, and look into the cannon's mouth without flinching, sat down and wept; since which time the place and brook have been called the "Vale of Tears."

The oldest person deceased in town was Enos Bishop, the oldest now living is Noah Emery, aged 76 years.

I know of none from Brighton who were in the war of 1812, and but one (Andrew Foster) who was in the Mexican war. He has again shouldered his gun for the defence of his government.

As the sound of the first gun at Fort Sumter came booming through the valleys and over the hills of New England, the hardy sons of Brighton rose en masse, called Union meetings and, without distinction of party, pledged their money, their influence, and their lives to the sustaining of the old Union flag. When the President called for volunteers, they responded with alacrity. With only 128 voters in town, 98 liable to do military duty, and a large portion engaged upon the railroad, no less than 53 enlisted for three years, nearly all of whom are yet on the tented field under Gen. McClellan.*

The following are their names, with the companies and regiments to which they belong:

Third Regiment.

Co. D.—William M. Currier, Andrew Foster, Jeremiah Bishop, wounded, Chester Beesey, Arthur Libby, William Bonney, James Doyle, H. M. Hartwell, died, Charles Partlow, Solomon G. Heaten, William Corel, Geo. W. Currier, Jeremiah Percival, John Larkin, Alonzo J. Currier, Orlando Stevens, killed, Isaac S. Currier, Joseph S. Currier, Jerome Bishop, Mike Smith, Charles Dinsmore, Peter Danforth, killed, Russell Stevens, Calvin Stevens. George Robinson, Co. ——

Co. F.—Charles D. Winslow, R. H. Rowell, wounded.

Co I.—James Wells, D. S. Hastings, Wm. Toothacher, Miles Stone.

Fourth Regiment.

Co. D.—J. N. Whitman, J. D. Rowell, J. Mahuron.

Eighth Regiment.

Co. K.—A. J. Howard, B. P. Howard, Geo. Gilman, William Petrie, John Petrie, Hooper D. Strant, John E. Woodsman, Edward Price, Lyman F. Perham, Geo. Morse, Arthur M. Raymond, Charles Hartwell. Charles Horr, Co. ——

Tenth Regiment.

Co. A.—Joseph F. Tyler, Charles W. Mason, Joseph Brown, Joseph Maxfield, Isaac Crooker, Thomas Richardson, James Hickie.

A large portion were in Co. D, of the 3d Vermont Regiment, which so gallantly crossed the river at Lee's Mills and, with two other companies of the same regiment, drove two regiments of the rebels from their works and maintained their position for some time against ten times their number, and when ordered to fall back across the river maintained their order and contested the ground inch by inch. In the language of their General, "Vermont has well sustained her reputation for bravery, and her sons have shown themselves worthy of being the descendants of Ethan Allen."

In that battle Jeremiah Bishop and R. H. Rowell were severely wounded, Peter Danforth and Orlando Stevens killed, the only ones injured who went from Brighton. Young Stevens was the eldest son of widow Stevens, who deserves a passing notice. Mrs. Stevens was left a widow nine years ago with five children, three sons and two daughters—the eldest eleven and the youngest

* At the time this was written.

Digitized by Google

three years of age. All the estate left them was a few acres of land under good cultivation, on which was a comfortable house and barn. She managed to cultivate her little patch of ground, the avails of which, together with what she could earn by working out a part of the time nursing the sick, cooking for hotels, &c., was sufficient to clothe her children, and send them to school until the oldest boy could be spared a portion of the time to work out in summer and attend school in winter. Thus they managed to live until the rebellion broke out. That seemed to rouse up in her the same patriotic spirit which was so often manifested by the matrons of 1776. Mrs. Stevens seemed to take a deep interest in the movement of the armies from the first; and late in autumn when the roads were muddy, she would walk two miles twice a week to meet with the other patriotic ladies of the village, to contribute her mite towards furnishing socks and under-clothing for the soldiers of the 3d Vt., for which many a "God bless you," went out from the hearts of those brave boys when permitted to change their clothing after a hard day's work in the mud and wet of the sacred soil of old Virginia. All this Mrs. Stevens did before her own boys had thought of volunteering.

Soon a recruiting officer made his appearance asking for volunteers, and her two oldest sons—one 20 and the other 18 years of age—signified their wish to obey their country's call. Though hard to part with her main supports in her declining years, yet Spartan like she bid them go, and immediately set about getting them ready, accompanied them on foot to the village at 12 o'clock at night through the untrodden snow, saw them sign their names; received the loving kiss; bid them good bye, with an injunction to remember they were "Green Mountain Boys," left them to take the early train for the seat of war, returning to her home now made lonely for the sake of her country. A few weeks afterward the recruiting officer again returned, when her only remaining son, then 16 years old, asked permission of his mother to follow his brothers. She felt she could not spare him; she could not at first bear the thought of one so young and so frail going to the field of strife, to endure the toil and privations of camp life, but the pleadings of the boy and the love of Country finally overcame the mother's desire to keep him near her, and she consented. Soon he was ready, and though little was said, the tearful eye and quivering lip spoke louder than words of the mother's anguish and sister's sorrow as they pronounced the last good bye.

Would to heaven we could stop here; but alas, No! The telegraph announces that a battle is raging at Lee's Mills, and that Co. D, of the Vermont 3d, is badly cut up.

* "Onward they pressed for God and the right,
Not a man among them quailing;
Onward they pressed through the waves breast high,
The bullets around them hailing.

"Steadily on, cheer following cheer,
And many a brave word spoken,
Steadily on till they gain the shore,
Though their ranks are thinned and broken.

"With muskets set for a bayonet charge
They rush on the rebel foe;
They reel, they waver, they break and run,
Borne down by the crushing blow!

"For God and the right our boys will strike,
And never an arm will falter;
Though each household mourns a sire or son,
On our bleeding country's altar.

"For God and the right! it nerves the heart,
And kindles the tearful eye:
And the proud soul thrills that our brave boys
In this holy cause may die.

"Oh true Vermont! for our freedom's cause
You have given your sons this day;
And your name shall stand on the scroll of time,
Until time shall pass away."

Then those having friends in that company began to realize the horrors of war; then, for a few hours, the fear and anxiety was plainly written on the faces of many, their looks tell they have friends there. At last the terrible suspense is broken. A telegram announces that Orlando Stevens is among the killed. A messenger is dispatched to the widow's cottage with the melancholy intelligence that her eldest son was killed by a rebel bullet. The depth of anguish of that mother and those sisters cannot be known except by those who have experienced a similar loss. But there is an addition to the message which seems to give a little relief, it said "He died bravely fighting the enemy." The bravery and devotion then exhibited will make the Green Mountain State proud of her sons. The widow said: "It is hard to bear, but I am glad to hear he was doing his duty. I suppose hundreds of mothers in the land are mourning to-day as I am; it is necessary for some to die to save the country."

* By N. W. Bingham, one of the scholarly board of custom house officers at Island Pond.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

Mrs. Stevens found many sympathizing friends, and efforts were at once made by the citizens to procure the remains of her son, that they might repose by the side of his kindred upon the banks of that beautiful lake he had so often visited in his childish sports; but, unfortunately, they could not be identified.

> Alas! like him, how many more
> Lie cold upon Potomac's shore!
> How many green, unnoted graves
> Are bordered by those placid waves!

An extract from a letter written by the youngest son to the mother, soon after the battle, manifests the same heroic fortitude; he says: "Brother Orlando was shot in the breast and died instantly, but while he lived he fought like a tiger; and, thank God, he died in a noble cause. Let this be a comfort to you, mother; keep up good courage, we will soon whip the rebels and be at home again." The widow bears the affliction with heroic fortitude, and were it an isolated case it would not seem so bad; but hundreds of just such mothers are scattered through the state, and their memory deserves a place in the heart of every true lover of his country.

R. H. Rowell and Jeremiah Bishop, who were wounded in the same fight, have returned home, intending to return to the field as soon as they are able. The above are all that have been injured from this town to this date, June 10, 1862.

When the call of the President was made for 600,000 more men, although Brighton had already raised more than her quota, the call touched the patriotism of her people, and a public meeting was called, at which sixty came forward and pledged all who should volunteer a bounty of $50 each, also guaranteeing the state pay of $7 per month. The following liberal donations were made: by J. Piper, $100; S. N. Gilkey, $100; Elias Denison, $50; G. G. Waterhouse, $40; to be divided in sums of $10 and paid to each volunteer who should first enlist to fill up a company. 20 citizens came forward and enlisted, many of them leaving lucrative positions, which formed a nucleus around which a company was soon formed from adjoining towns, and organized by the election of the following commissioned officers: Warren Noyes, captain; Joseph S. Hall, 1st lieutenant; Robert P. Noyes, 2d lieutenant.

The following are the names of other volunteers from Brighton:*

Third Regiment.

Co. K.—Charles Mortley.

Fourth Regiment.

Frank Hastings.

Eleventh Regiment.

Co. A.—Wm. A. Doying, James Joyce, John Garagon, John Ward.

Fifteenth Regiment.

Co. E.—Warren Noyes, Robert P. Noyes, J. Wallace Nason, A. C. Farmer, S. A Haynes, F. D. Nason, Marshal Dyer, Leander P. Currier, James D. Percival, L. A. Woodbury, D. M. Wescott, Claud Somers, G. G. Lasell, Charles Neiler, H. E. Nason, John C. Dalloff, Hiram Farmer, Elijah N. Davis, Henry Atkins, Don C. Foss.

Cavalry.

Lemuel Chase, Michael Labounty.

There is a little incident in connection with the early history of the Stevens family which may not be uninteresting in that connection. Mr. John Stevens, the second settler in town, had a little son called Edwin, aged 5 years, who went into the woods near the house, in the afternoon of May 2, 1825, in search of a flower called lady's slipper, accompanied by their faithful dog Painter. Not returning, the mother supposed he had gone to his father, who was at work about half a mile from the house, chopping. On the arrival of Mr. Stevens at night without the boy, they at once became alarmed, and fired the alarm-gun to bring the neighbors, who lived on the opposite side of the pond, and with torches immediately commenced the search. Getting no tidings from him during the night, a messenger was dispatched to Morgan and Holland for assistance; and a large number of people searched until the fourth day before making any discovery, when the noble dog Painter came in nearly famished. They fed him, and he, with a few men, immediately took the back track, which was easily followed in consequence of a light

*Received in time for insertion, but since the foregoing was written.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

snow which fell during the night, and traveled nearly five miles when the dog stopped near the roots of a large tree which had blown down, where they found the dead body of the child, with its little hands crossed over its eyes, and covered over with leaves and mosses by its faithful protector, who stayed with his little charge as long as he could without starving. For years afterwards let any of the family say to him, "Painter, where is Edwin?" and he would instantly drop on the floor and seemed to manifest as keen sorrow as a dumb beast could for the absence of the little one.

Mr. Stevens' family was again afflicted, in 1831, by the death of a little daughter two years old, who went to a spring near the house with her little cup for some drink, when she slipped in and before discovered was drowned.

It is said there are many interesting incidents connected with the early history of the town, such as hair-breadth escapes, perilous adventures, great endurance, &c., among the early settlers; but the older inhabitants, who were the subjects and witnesses of them, had all died or removed from town before the writer became one of its citizens.

The Fosters, Blakes and Morses are among the principal hunters who have become familiar with the wilderness in all northern Vermont. The latter are usually engaged as guides to the stranger who wishes to spend a few days in hunting and fishing. Bears, deer and moose are often captured. The latter, which was formerly very plenty, has taken a dislike to the steam whistle and do not now approach very near to the abodes of civilization. In the year 1858 a large moose came upon the railroad, a few miles north of the village, and was discovered by the engineer, who was running a train of empty platform cars. He immediately let on steam and gave chase, the moose keeping the railroad track for about one mile, when the engine getting rather too near, the moose wheeled to double his track and succeeded in getting around the engine, but came so close as to come in contact of the second car, which struck him with such force as to instantly kill him and at the same time threw two empty cars from the track. It was a very large one, weighing between 600 and 700 pounds. Many of his leaps measured over 20 feet.

In the winter of 1842 and '43 an epidemic prevailed in this part of Vermont, which baffled the skill of the best physicians for a long time, and proved very fatal. In Brighton many were attacked, but Dr. Harvey Coe, then practicing physician, having been fortunate enough to hit upon the right treatment, lost only one patient. Other physicians soon adopted his theory and many lives were saved.

[The writer is under obligations to Dr. Coe and E. W. Hoffman, Esq., for much information relating to the early history of this town.]

BRUNSWICK.

BY MRS. MARGARET G. MARSHALL.

The town of Brunswick is bounded S. by Maidstone, E. by Connecticut river, N. by Bloomfield, and W. by Ferdinand, formerly Wenlock. Most of the meadow land bordering on the Connecticut river is annually inundated by its waters, increasing the fertility of the soil, by the alluvial deposit left upon the land when the water subsides. With the exception of the land bordering on the river, the town is broken, hilly and stony, and poorly adapted to purposes of agriculture. The town was chartered in the usual manner, by Benning Wentworth in 1761, to Stephen Noble and 63 others, and embraces a little more than 15,000 acres. There is quite a discrepancy in the charter of Brunswick, which can only be accounted for on the supposition that the course of the Connecticut river was not correctly understood. The charter says, "containing by admeasurement about twenty-five thousand acres, which tract is to contain something more than six miles square and no more;" then after some preliminary remarks, proceeds to describe the tract by courses and distances, and says, "butted and bounded as follows, viz: at the most easterly corner of Maidstone, from thence northwesterly up Connecticut river so far as to make six miles upon a straight line, thence from said river N. W. six miles and one half mile, from thence southwesterly on a parallel line with that on the river to the northerly corner of Maidstone aforesaid; from thence S. E. by Maidstone aforesaid to Connecticut river, to the bounds first above mentioned." If the course of the river had been

Digitized by Google

N. E. and S. W. in accordance with the general course, the survey as described in the charter would have embraced the amount of land contemplated; but as the river runs nearly N. and S. by Brunswick, and the other lines were run as described in the charter, the shape of the town was not a square or nearly so as they seemed to have supposed, but took the form of a rhombus, which very materially diminished the area, and deprived the original proprietors of about two-fifths of the quantity of land designed to be embraced in the charter. It does not appear that any of the original proprietors ever occupied the soil, or commenced any improvement or operations within its limits. Arthur Wooster is supposed to have made the first clearing of some three or four acres, on the upper side of the Wait Bow; but for some cause abandoned his improvement, and never became an inhabitant of the town. The first survey and allotment of the town was made by Eben W. Judd, in 1788, making two lots to each original proprietor, and were called the first and second division comprising nearly ⅔ of the town. The first divisions contained only 8 acres each and were laid out on the lands bordering on the river. The design in making the lots so small was, that each proprietor might have a piece of meadow land. The second division lots contain 115 acres. The allotment of the remaining portion of the town was made in 1823, by Rich Stevens, and containing 72 acres to each lot.

Notwithstanding the forbidding condition of the lands not immediately bordering on the Connecticut river for purposes of cultivation, probably no town in Essex county originally contained more white pine timber than Brunswick, and the natural facilities of conveying the same to the seaboard might have rendered it a very great source of wealth to the early settlers, or their descendants and successors, provided they had possessed the means of obtaining its ownership, or fully appreciated its coming value; but failing perhaps in both of those prerequisites, they suffered most of the timber to be removed by others with but little pecuniary advantage to the first and present occupants of the soil.

David Hix and Abram Gile were the first settlers in Brunswick. Hix commenced on the farm afterwards owned and occupied by Joshua R. Lamkin, he was a cooper and did not make much improvement in clearing and otherwise subduing the natural hindrances in the way of civilized life. He was taken by the Indians while hunting sable in the woods, and carried to Canada, where he remained two years and three months.

Abram Gile commenced settlement on the Wait Bow, but remained in the town only a short time. The most permanent settlers in the town before 1800, who cleared their farms, and remained until their decease, were John Merrill, Joseph Wait, Nathaniel Wait, Philip Grapes, Joshua R. Lamkin, Gideon Smith, David Hyde, and Reuben Hawkins. There are some others who resided temporarily here before 1800, of whom little is known.

John Merrill moved from Lisbon, N. H., into Brunswick in 1778. His farm was the one upon which Elias Taylor now resides, and is the first farm, as you pass up the Connecticut, in Brunswick. He was an intelligent, energetic and worthy citizen, and was one of the first selectmen in town. He was justice of the peace for many years, and discharged its duties with much ability. Having a quick and excitable temperament, he sometimes transgressed the rules of propriety in some of his expressions; yet he was a good neighbor, and kind to all with whom he had intercourse. He died Feb. 27, 1839, aged 87 years 2 months. His son Joseph Merrill resides in Maidstone, on the farm adjoining the one formerly occupied by his father, in Brunswick. He is now 86 years old, and although his hearing and eyesight are somewhat impaired, he possesses a remarkable memory, and from him the writer obtained many early incidents relative to Brunswick. I will relate a circumstance of his narrow escape from death when a boy about ten years old: His father had girdled a large elm tree for the purpose of killing it; Joseph the boy was driving the team for his father to plough, and as they passed around the land they were ploughing, they came near this elm tree, which being hollow and consequently nearer cut off than the father was aware, it fell just at the time they were passing it, falling on the boy and killing one of the oxen; that part of the tree however that struck the boy had a small crook in it, which prevented his being killed, notwithstanding it held him so fast that help had to be obtained, before he could be removed.

Digitized by Google

JOSEPH WAIT

came to Brunswick in 1779, and settled with his brother Nathaniel on the bow of land which bears their name. He was chosen proprietor's clerk in 1786, which office he held until the town was organized. He was the first sheriff in Essex county, was the first representative of the town, and was first selectman, in connection with John Merrill, and David Hyde. He was chosen clerk at the time the town was organized, and held the office many years. The town meetings were holden at his dwelling-house for many years after the town became organized, and he probably held more town offices than any other man in town before 1820. He was killed by a fall from his horse in 1823. Nathaniel his brother served three months as militia-man in the war of the Revolution.

PHILIP GRAPES

came to Brunswick 1780, he was chosen selectman in 1797, and first constable and collector in 1798, and collected the tax of one cent on each acre of land, granted by the legislature of the state of Vermont Nov. 10th 1797, for the support of Government. He was a soldier in the war of the Revolution some two or three years, and was killed by the fall of a tree in the year 1800. His widow Elizabeth survived him many years, and was the oldest person that ever died in town, being over 100 years of age. The first saw and grist-mill was built in Brunswick, in 1800, by Ithiel Cargill, who came into the town in the fall of 1799, and contracted with the proprietors to build the mills in one year, and as an encouragement for building the same the proprietors voted him the right of pitching 400 acres of his undivided land, provided he did not select it in more than three places. He purchased the farm occupied by Reuben Tuttle, which embraced the mill privilege. He owned and occupied the farm and mills more than 20 years, and raised up a large family. His two oldest sons John and Ithiel went to the town of Wenlock (now Brighton), about 20 miles from the Connecticut river, through an unbroken forest, and commenced in the solitude of the forest to make themselves a farm; after chopping down some 15 or 20 acres of trees Ithiel was killed by the falling of a tree, yet John with great perseverance continued the improvements, and cleared up a large farm, and now lives upon the premises, being a worthy and independent farmer; the rest of the family moved to Morgan in the county of Orleans, and there is not any of the name or connection remaining in Brunswick.

DAVID HYDE

came here in 1784, and settledupon the farm known as the Hyde Bow. This bow is a beautiful tract of land, situated nearly in the center of the town, and taking into consideration all the conveniences with which it is surrounded, constitutes a desirable location.

He soon made the forest disappear, and in its place waved the golden grain. He was a close observer of men and things, and in the athletic sports often practiced in those times, he could run the fastest, dive the deepest, and stay under water the longest of any of his townsmen. His notions of right and wrong were somewhat peculiar, as will be seen by reference to his acts and sayings. In measuring grain that he sold to his neighbors, he always heaped the half bushel, and in weight he made no account of the fractions of a pound, frequently remarking that "weight and measure was the Lord's, but the price was his own."

He died in the year 1812. David his youngest son when a boy had a cruel fever-sore on his leg which destroyed the joint at the knee, and caused the limb to be shorter than the other. He owned and occupied the homestead after his father's decease, some 35 years, and by his sagacity and shrewd management became one of the wealthiest men in the county.

GIDEON SMITH

came into town before 1787, and settled upon the bow of land next below the mouth of Paul stream. Being industrious and economical in his habits, he became a substantial citizen of the town. He was rather comical or amusing in conveying his ideas; for instance, being asked which of the men Hyde or Tuttle (two of his neighbors) in his opinion was the best man, he replied, "Hyde from Tuttle you can't, but Hyde from the devil there remains Tuttle." He died in 1801, and the farm is now occupied by his descendants.

The town of Brunswick was organized in 1796; the preamble to the application is as follows:

"The inhabitants of Brunswick, being for many years destitute of the privileges of an organized town, agreed in the year 1796, that the town should be organized, to have the use and benefit of the laws as organized towns have."

Digitized by Google

The application was to David Hyde, Esq. and was signed by Jos. Wait, Philip Grapes, Nathaniel Wait and Jacob Schoff, free holders. The meeting was held at Nathaniel Wait's dwelling-house on Thursday, March 31, 1796; David Hyde was chosen moderator, and Jos. Wait town clerk; Joseph Wait, David Hyde and John Merrill, selectmen.

The first settlers of Brunswick in common with the early inhabitants of adjoining towns, endured many privations and hardships not known at this day. Living at a distance of 130 miles from the seaboard, all heavy articles, such as salt and iron, in fact all those articles so necessary to civilized life that could not be obtained from the soil, or found in the woods or waters, had to be transported upon the backs of men or horses, having no convenience of roads, and guided through the forest by spotted trees; being obliged to ford streams that run across their route, and often swollen so as to be impassable except by swimming; having no mills either for the manufacture of lumber, or converting their grain into meal or flour, nearer than Haverhill, N. H., a distance of 65 miles; and in addition to all the privations incident to their situation, being surrounded by the hostile Indians, who at any time might pounce upon them with the bloody tomahawk, we should think their situation anything but desirable. But more, their currency was mostly the fur of the wild animals, and the salts of lye, and many a horse's back and sides has been made sore in carrying those salts in bags to market. When we take a retrospective glance at the condition of the early settlers of Essex county, it will materially help us in appreciating our condition, and perhaps should serve to lessen that spirit of complaining in which we are too apt to indulge. However, that Providence, who it is said, "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," seems to have prepared our fathers and mothers for the position in which they were placed, by giving them strong and vigorous constitutions, and that spirit of endurance so essential to their condition, and rarely excelled. The first school in town was kept by Susan Bailey, in 1795; it was kept in a log house that stood at the foot of the hill, near where Andrew J. Taylor's dwelling-house at present stands.

The first division of the town into school districts was made in 1818; by which three districts were made, called the upper, middle and lower school districts, which embraced all the inhabitants then in town, and no further districting or alteration has been made since. The second term of the Court in Essex county was held in Brunswick, in David Hyde's barn. The presiding Judges were Daniel Dana, Mills DeForest, and Samuel Phelps.

The first road in town was surveyed by Eben W. Judd, in 1790; it was laid up the Connecticut river from the N. line of Maidstone to the S. line of Bloomfield, and followed nearly the same track as the highway now traveled. The proprietors voted a tax of $10 on each original right, to build the same.

In 1793 a road was laid out and built, from Connecticut river westerly through Brunswick and Wenlock, to Island Pond, and thence to Magog Lake. The road was built by the proprietors of the towns through which it passed, for the purpose of encouraging the settlement of their lands. This road extended six miles in this town. In 1820–21, five families settled in Brunswick, upon lands through which this road passed; but after making some little improvements, they found the area of arable land so limited, by mountains on one side, and swamps on the other, that in two or three years they were compelled to abandon their lands which have since grown up to bushes, and no further attempt has been made to settle on the lands they occupied, or on other lands in town back from the Connecticut river.

The first child born in town was George W. Hix, son of David Hix; but in what year he was born, or any other circumstance connected with his history, but little is known.

The first tavern in town was kept by William Marshall, who located in 1816, and opened his house for the reception of public travel, which for many years was the home for all who desired entertainment, and was the only public house in the town if we except one kept a few years by Thomas G. French. He died in 1833, aged 52 years. His son George Marshall was chosen State Senator for Essex county in 1845. In 1847 he moved with his family to the state of Wisconsin, where he now resides. The widow of William Marshall, now in her 77th year, resides upon the premises, and is endeavoring to gather up and assist in preserving the early matters connected with the first settlement of Brunswick, which are so fast becoming lost.

For religious instruction the inhabitants have been almost entirely limited to the Bible, and the preaching of the Methodist itinerancy. Classes were early formed by that church, but no house of worship was erected, and but one clergyman was ever located in the township.

BENJAMIN BROWN,

born in Wellfleet, Mass., was bred a sailor, and for some years commanded merchantmen, and visited different foreign ports; but becoming a convert to the Methodist tenets, he left the sea, and became a traveling preacher. After delivering his message (like Jonah as he often remarked), in 1825 he purchased the farm and mills formerly occupied by Ithiel Cargill, rebuilt the mills, and settled among this people. He remained in town, occasionally preaching to the people, until 1854, when he disposed of his estate, and left the country.

This town furnished three soldiers for the war of 1812, their names were Martin Webster, Elisha Webster and Henry D. Schoff. Martin resides now in the state of Illinois, Elisha died in Brunswick (where he had always lived), Dec. 31st, 1861, and Henry D. still resides in this town.

Four young men have gone from this town to help suppress the rebellion of 1861,* namely, Adna Schoff, Dexter French, Michael Smith and Enoch Smith.

PONDS.

There are 7 ponds in Brunswick, called Great South and Little South Ponds, Davis Pond, Dennis Pond, Paul Stream Pond, Tuttle Pond, and Mineral Pond.

The largest is Great South Pond, and covers an area of about 50 acres; they are all tolerably well stored with various kinds of fish, such as the trout, pickerel, perch and eels, which when well cooked furnish a delicious dish for the epicurean.

The Mineral Pond is celebrated for the large quantities of lilies that annually bloom in its waters, and furnishes nosegays to hundreds who in July and August frequent its shores to obtain the beautiful and odoriferous flower. This pond doubtless received its name in consequence of its being located in the vicinity of the mineral springs, hereafter described.

RIVERS AND STREAMS.

The Nulhegan River runs across the N. W. corner of the town, a distance of about one mile and a half. The greatest fall and most rapid portion of the river is in Brunswick. This river was the great thoroughfare of the Indians in their migrations from the St. Lawrence waters to the Atlantic Ocean; and the paths they made in carrying their canoes and other effects by the falls in this town were very distinct at a late day, and at many places were discernible at the time of building the Grand Trunk Railroad in 1851, which passes up this river.

Paul Stream is a beautiful stream of pure and limpid water, taking its rise in the towns of Granby and Ferdinand. In its course through Brunswick it contains many good mill privileges. It was upon this stream that the first mills in Brunswick were built by Ithiel Cargill, as before stated.

Wheeler Stream (a tributary to the Connecticut River) has two branches called the north and south branch that unite about half a mile from its junction with said river. The north branch rises in Notch Pond in the town of Ferdinand (formerly Wenlock), and after entering Brunswick passes through Davis Pond and Dennis Pond. The south branch takes its rise in the Great West Pond in Maidstone, and after entering this town runs through Great South and Little South ponds before uniting with the other branch.

Reuben Hawkins and Isaac Stevens in 1802 erected a saw-mill upon this stream, which was burned in 1814 by a fire that extended over the surrounding hills and destroyed much valuable pine timber.

These streams are celebrated for the abundance of fish that formerly frequented their waters, the Paul stream for its trout, and the Wheeler stream for its suckers, affording amusement and profit to those of piscatorial habits, and being a great source of support to the early settlers.

CURIOSITIES.

There are some three or four natural curiosities in Brunswick which perhaps are worthy of notice. The first that I shall mention is the mineral spring or springs, as they seem to issue from two or three points. They are located in the north-easterly part of the town, and come forth from a high bank of the Connecticut River, about 60 feet from the waters of the river, and perhaps 20 feet from the top of the bank.

*This history was written early in 1861.—Ed.

Their waters are strongly impregnated with iron, sulphur, lead, and perhaps silver, and a thick sediment is formed upon every substance with which the waters come in contact, and in such quantities that bushels could be obtained with little labor.

The volume of water discharged is large, making quite a brook as it leaps and tumbles down the hill into the river. These springs have long been celebrated for their medicinal qualities, and at an early day some rude structures were erected for the convenience of invalids; and many have realized permanent relief by bathing and drinking of the waters, particularly those of cutaneous or eruptive complaints. The water emits a strong sulphurous odor, is clear and cold, and is used as a common beverage in warm weather by persons residing in their immediate vicinity. A. J. Congdon, Esq., of Lancaster, N. H., has recently purchased a few acres of land embracing the springs, in anticipation of erecting a boarding-house and other accommodations for invalids or those who may desire to visit the springs from curiosity or pleasure.

In the north-westerly part of the town is a natural pass between two high mountains, it is called the Little Notch. The Magog road, leading from Connecticut river westerly to Island Pond, passes through this notch. Tbis pass is about 20 rods long, and barely wide enough to admit of building the road, the mountains rising abruptly on each side forming a grand and picturesque appearance.

In the west part of the town is a ridge of land called the Hog-Back. It is three-fourths of a mile long, its course being nearly north and south, coming to an abrupt termination at its southerly end, and 50 feet high, rising on both sides at an angle of 45 degrees, forming a sharp ridge at the top. On the west side of this ridge towards its northerly end the south branch of Wheeler Stream meets it at right angles, thence flowing south along the western base makes a short curve around the south end of the ridge, and runs directly back on its east side. The water of the stream being so still and smooth that it is hardly perceivable which way it runs.

The ridge is covered with a beautiful growth of sapling pine timber, and its formation, taken in connection with the stream, is a matter of much curiosity.

On the farm upon which Daniel M. Smith resides is a very large granite bowlder which probably weighs more than 500 tons, and stands upon so small a base that it has taken the cognomen of "the rock that stands upon nothing." In order to give the reader some idea of the size and position of this rock, we will make a comparison: We will suppose a two-story house, having an old fashioned hip roof, cut off at the top or apex of the roof, so as to form a flat surface of four or five feet square; then suppose this house turned bottom side up, and standing upon the roof, on a rocky foundation, and one will have quite a correct understanding of the same. While we may wonder at the peculiarities attending this huge block of granite, He who holds the ocean as in the hollow of his hand can only tell when and how this rock was placed in its present position.

Since the Grand Trunk railroad was built in 1852, which passes through the north part of this town, considerable capital has been invested in Brunswick, in the erection of mills and other machinery, for the manufacture of lumber, which has added much to the business-like appearance and wealth of the town. Gen. R. M. Richardson & Co., of Portland, Me., in 1855, erected a capacious saw-mill on the Nulhegan river, at the point where the railroad crosses the river, at an expense of $30,000. The mill is one of the largest in the county, if not in the state, having a set of gang-saws, a large circular saw or board-machine, a single upright saw, and butting-saw, besides machines for filing saws, making shingles, clapboards and sugar boxes, &c., &c. The company employ some 50 or 60 men in the various departments connected with the establishment.

The mill is capable of sawing 50,000 feet of boards from the log in 24 hours, and during the last three or four years have manufactured 3,000,000 feet or more annually, besides large quantities of shingle, boxes and heading.

Enos Woodard, an energetic and enterprising member of the company, who has had the care and superintendence of the establishment for the last two or three years, has purchased a large tract of hard wood-land in the vicinity of the mills, and is carrying on quite extensive farming operations. He has, in connection with his son Charles, erected a store near the mills, being the first store in town, and a brisk trade has sprung up where a few years since the solitude of the forest was only broken by the scream of the owl and the roar of the water-fall. D. H. & T.G. Beattie, of Maidstone, have recently built a large saw-mill on Paul stream, and are actively engaged in lumbering operations.

Digitized by Google

Other mills, of less size and capacity, have been built within a few years, on Wheeler stream, for the manufacture of lumber; and perhaps no town in the county sends more lumber to market, in the various forms in which it is prepared, than Brunswick.

Prior to the facilities extended to this county by the railroad enterprise but little progress, since 1810, was made in this town in point of wealth and population.

The broken and sterile condition of the lands not immediately bordering on the river did not give sufficient inducement to agricultural pursuits to cause their settlement, and the want of a ready market for most of the products of the soil, had a tendency to laxity in its cultivation; but, since 1852, a new order of things is seen, not only in active mechanical operations, but also in the cultivation and improvement of farms.

The article of hay, which perhaps is as much entitled to the appellation of king in the North as cotton in the South, has more than doubled in price; and a ready market is found, at an advanced price of former years, for the various productions of husbandry.

MEMORY'S DREAM OF THE DEAD.

BY MRS. M. M. JOHNSON.*

Like foam on the crest of the billow,
Which sparkles and sinks from the sight,
Like a leaf from the wind-shaken willow,
Tho' transient, yet beautifully bright:

Like dewdrops exhaled while they glisten,
Like perfume which dies soon as shed,
Like melody hushed while we listen,
Is memory's dream of the dead.

* Now of Stratford, N. H., formerly Maria Marshall, of Brunswick.

On the Shore.

There's a calmness and beauty in evening's decline,
A joy and sweet peace that has ever been mine,
A quiet that rests on the heart like the ray
That falls in the water at closing of day.
Yon trees, in full foliage o'er the still water bending,
Seem waving their branches in quiet delight,
While the small pensile twigs to the water depending,
Seem to welcome the coolness and quiet of night.

CONCORD.

BY J. E. WOODBURY, AND OTHERS.

To write the early history of a town whose first settlement dates as far back as does that of many towns in our state, is extremely difficult; especially so, when—as with the history of this town—the public records afford but a meagre supply of the requisite material and data, and the early settlers have nearly all passed away, leaving but little record of themselves from which to gather up the scattered fragments of a town history. Their memorial is found rather in well cultivated farms and comfortable dwellings—in the church, the school-house, and the thriving village, with all their accompanying evidences of a progressive, intelligent and prosperous people, where the deep, dark forest once proclaimed that rough, stern, rugged nature held undisputed sway. By their unwearied labors the wilderness has been made to literally "bud and blossom as the rose." These are their monuments—more eloquent, truthful and enduring than sculptured marble and chiseled granite—of the deeds and characters of those who "reared amid the wilderness

The hamlet and the town."

To us who live in these "later days," when the savage grandeur and sternness of nature has yielded to the onward and conquering march of labor and progress, it is hardly possible to realize the almost insurmountable obstacles with which the first settlers had to contend.

This whole northern region was an almost unbroken wilderness; and, in addition to the hardships experienced in the first settlements of places lying contiguous to settled portions of country, the inhabitants of this town had to bring all the necessaries of life from the southern part of this state and New Hampshire, as well as from Massachusetts, and to transport them over roads which would now be considered hardly passable either for man or beast.

Digitized

Yet amid all these discouragements the early settlers persevered, being men and women of "iron frame" and determined will, for whom toil and privation tended but to call forth stronger effort and greater endurance. Such were the men and women to whom Vermont to day owes much of her sterling integrity, careful industry and prudent thrift, her manliness and intelligence—elements which make her sons and daughters respected both at home and abroad.

Concord lies in the southern part of Essex Co. Lat. 44° 25′ north, and Long. 5° 8′ east from Washington. It contained when granted about 47 square miles, bounded north-westerly by Kirby, north-easterly by Lunenburgh, south-easterly by Connecticut River, south-westerly by Waterford—being larger than the average of towns in the state; and has within a few years been increased by the annexation of a part of Brodley's Vale. The town was granted Nov. 7, 1780, and chartered Sept. 15, 1781, to Reuben Jones and 64 others,* with 5 other rights as usual: the governor's, the ministerial, the school, the college and county grammar school right.

The first meeting of the proprietors was holden at the inn of Jehial Webb in Rockingham, Aug. 17th, 1784; at which a committee was chosen "To view ye lands in Concord, and if they find a convenient place for a town plot, to lay out a street or streets five rods wide, and long enough to lay out fifty acres to each right, fronting fifty rods on one of said streets; said plot to be as nigh ye middle of the said township, as ye land will permit."

In pursuance of these instructions the committee did lay out lots of 50 acres to each right. But instead of its being "as nigh ye middle of the town, as ye land will permit," it was located near the west part of the town, though there was a situation equally as good near the geographical center. No explanation of this is now available.

At the third meeting of the proprietors it was "Voted, to give the first ten proprietors that will settle in Concord, (provided they shall move into said town on or before May 1786) liberty to pitch 100 acres each in Form, with ye Town Lines, or so as not to leave Gores at the next draught of land in said Town."

At a subsequent meeting it was "Voted, to reserve the Meadow Lands on Passumpsic [Moose] River, [so called] in ye town of Concord from ye Privelige of such proprietors as may pitch Lots in said Town."

At a meeting of the proprietors, Sept. 1786, it was voted to give Joseph W. Morse a gore of land containing forty acres, "in consideration of his extraordinary services, towards settling the town. What the nature of those "services" was does not appear, though they seem to have produced no immediate results, in the advancement of settlements in town; there being no settlements made till 1788 when Joseph Ball—who came with his family from Westboro, Mass.—made a permanent settlement. He commenced upon the farm now owned by Mr. Alba Caswell. His son John Ball, born in 1789, was the first child born in town, and received a grant of a lot of land from the proprietors of the town.

Sally Lewis, daughter of Mr. Jonathan Lewis, born the same year, was the first female child born in town.

A Mr. Noyes, who was killed by the falling of a tree has been said to be the first person who died in town. He was buried in what is now known as the Pike Burying Ground. This is however incorrect, as from reliable evidence we find it to have been the wife of Mr. Joseph W. Morse, who died in 1790.

A very intelligent lady, of remarkably tenacious memory, who still retains a vivid recollection of the early events of the town, writes as follows:

"According to the best of my recollection, Mr. Joseph Ball told me that he moved into town in the spring of 1788, with his wife; and that his first child was born June, 1789,—and also that Amasa and Joseph Morse, and one other family, whose names I have forgotten, came in the same year a little before him; but when winter came and the weather was severe, all those families went over into Littleton, N. H., and stayed through the coldest of the weather, and then returned, while he and his wife staid all winter in their shanty made of crotches stuck in the ground for posts. The wife of Joseph Morse, whose maiden name was Annis Burnett, was the first person known to have died in town."

* Concord Grantees.—Joseph Wood, Ebenezer Wallbridge, Edward Aiken, Moses Spofford, Gideon Tiffany, William Gilkey, John Smith of Chester, John White, Walter White, John White, jr., Uriah Howe, William Wood of Poultney, Elisha Smith, Obadiah Merrill, Josiah Willard, Prentice Willard, Josiah White, Elisha Galusha, Noah Chittenden, Thomas Putnam, Levi Putnam, Isaac Wyman, Edmund Hodges, Steel Smith, Moses Brigham, John Beach, Thomas Chittenden, Abraham Ives, James E. Beach, Samuel Uffatt, Barney Beach, Jotham Ives, Abijah Hurd, Freeman Hurd, Ephraim Carter, Benjamin Hall, Nathan Blake, jr., Jonathan Dwinel, Sylvester Tiffany, Jonas Prescott, Abijah Gale, Seth Morse, Samuel Wetherbee, Susannah Wetherbee, Jason Wetherbee, Samuel Wetherbee, jr., James Wetherbee, Azor Wetherbee, Jonathan Freeman, Otis Freeman, Joshua Webb, Charles Webb, Nath'l Robinson, Joseph Ellis, Simon Ellis, Benjamin Ellis, Daniel Davis, Moses Willard, Levi Lincoln, Benjamin Green, William Carter, Nathaniel Davis, Jonathan Holton and Timothy Clark.

In a paper entitled "Early Reminiscences," the same lady says:

"Two young men by the names of Moses Gleason and Daniel Gregory, of Westboro, Mass., came to Concord in the year 1789 and commenced there a settlement. Daniel Gregory began the farm that Chauncey Hill now lives on. He built a camp and cooked his board, with the exception of his bread, which he had baked in Littleton, some seven miles distant, where he went once a week, being guided only by the aid of marked trees. There were no roads, it being truly "a howling wilderness." Mr. Jonathan Lewis settled on a lot near his, a little before him. He chopped and cleared a few acres and staid alone in his camp. Moses Gleason, his relative by marriage, began the farm where Charles F. Gregory now lives, and chopped and cleared several acres. In the fall both started to return to Massachusetts, to stay through the winter. Young Gleason said he did not like this northern region, and he should go South. He started with that intent, but his friends have never heard from him from that day to this. Daniel Gregory and his father-in-law came up to Concord and looked over both lots, and the old gentleman advised him to take the one on the Connecticut that his son had begun. He did so, and built a small house into which he moved his family the next year, and spent his days there. The place is now owned by his son Charles F. Gregory, Esq. A young man by the name of Andrew Scott, from Scotland, came into town not far from the same time, and commenced a settlement on the farm now owned by William Buck, adjoining Daniel Gregory's, and built himself a house by the side of an enormous great rock which he had for the back of his chimney. He cleared up his farm and lived alone many years. The old people all agreed in opinion, many years ago, that he was a very good man, and benevolent; and that he had a very thorough knowledge of the Bible.—One of the old ladies told me he knew more of the Bible than all the other settlers put together. He was a firm Presbyterian. As an instance of his goodness I will mention the following incident; A poor family by the name of Hoyt, had moved into town. They were very poor indeed—they had several children, and the hardships of the wilderness proved too great for the mother, and she sickened. Mr. Scott took them in. She had to be carried five or six miles, through the woods, on a bier, on men's shoulders; and died at Mr. Scott's after lingering several months. The old gentleman said, when he told the story, "I let them have grain, potatoes, and meat, to keep them from starving—for they had nothing—never expecting to get any pay; nor did ever I get any." The old gentleman was unfortunate after that; I believe he is rich, now, in heaven, where misfortune and sorrow can never come."

Joseph W. Morse began the place where Jackson Perry now lives, and raised the first grain (rye) in town; by cutting some of which, as soon as it would possibly do for use, and beating it out upon a stone, and drying the grain in a kettle, he furnished a poor family with sustenance, and kept them from starving.

Benjamin Streeter began the farm where John Morse now lives—his father, Zebulon Streeter, chopping the first tree. "Mr. Amos Underwood settled on the place where the late Aaron Tilton lived; Mr. Moses Chase where John W. Williams now lives. A Mr. Knight began the place where the Hon. Samuel G. Babcock now lives. Levi Ball began the place where Mr. James B. Ball now lives. Samuel Wetherbee commenced the farm where Samuel Heywood now lives; Jonathan Lewis on the place lately owned by the heirs of Nathan Morse; Jonathan Woodbury the place where Nathan Pike now lives; Jesse Woodbury the farm where Abel Stacy now resides; Benjamin Streeter, 2d, the place next above, where Charles F. Gregory lives."

The foregoing is probably the most correct account of the early settlement of the town which is now available.

In 1795—seven years after the first settlement—there were but 17 families in town; in 1798, 40.

Among the early settlers were Jonathan Lewis, Amasa and Joseph W. Morse, Solomon Babcock, Jonathan Hutchinson, Amos Underwood, Daniel Gregory, Benj. Streeter, Jonathan and Jesse Woodbury, Samuel Hudson and Samuel Wetherbee. The early settlers came principally from Royalston and Westboro, Mass., or towns in their vicinity. One portion of the town was settled by "Woodburys" from the former place, and has ever been known by the name of "Royalston Corner."

The first town meeting was held March 3, 1794; Joseph Ball first town clerk. The first "freeman's meeting" was Sept. 2, following. Elijah Spofford was chosen representative.

At a meeting of the proprietors, held in

Digitized by Google

1786, it had been voted to give two lots of land to any one who would build a saw and grist-mill in town, and keep the same in repair for 15 years. At a subsequent meeting it had been voted to give an additional hundred acres to the builder of the mills. The first mills were built by Joseph Ball, sometime prior to 1795, upon "Hall's Brook," in the S. E. part of the town, on the site of what are now known as "Goss's mills." That the grist-mill, at least, was a "rough specimen" compared with those of the present day, the following anecdote, although gross exaggeration, will serve to illustrate:

A Mr. Powers having got some grain ground there, his wife, as he said, "tried to sift it with a meal sieve, but could not, it being so coarse. She next tried to sift it by using the ladder for a sieve, but it would not go through between the rounds; and it was only by taking out every other round that the thing could be accomplished."

Still this mill was of great service to the people, for previous to its erection, they were obliged to go to Lancaster or Haverhill, N. H., a distance of 30 or 40 miles; and this journey must be performed either on foot or on horseback.

It is related of a Mr. Lewis, that having bought a bushel of corn at Lancaster, N. H., (25 miles off) he got it ground, and taking it upon his back started for home; but being overtaken by night and darkness, when he had reached the S. E. part of the town he lay down on the ground till morning, when again resuming his journey he at length arrived at home.

But a greater difficulty than the distance to grist-mills was oftentimes experienced by these pioneers in the great scarcity of grain, as it sometimes could not be had at any price short of going from 50 to 100 miles "down the river." The writer has often heard his father tell of having, when a boy, to go to Bradford, and sometimes further down the river, in company with others and get a "horse load of corn," which was as much as a horse could fetch upon his back.

The following "anecdotes" related to the writer by Dea. John Frye,* now living in town at the advanced age of 86 years, may serve to illustrate some phases in the early history of the town; and, as such, are worthy a place here:

* Deceased since the above was written.

Dea. Frye, who was then a youth of 19, came from Royalston, Mass., in February, 1795. The journey occupying 11 days—which is now made in as many hours—was performed with a team of four oxen drawing a "big sled," in which were deposited the "goods and chattels" of his father, together with quite a numerous family, who were "stowed away" in the upper part of said "vehicle," which was covered something like the western emigrant wagons of the present day.

* * * * *

At one time, getting out of grain, the father of young Frye sent him off with about five dollars in money to try and buy some. Traveling for sometime without succeeding in procuring any, he at length was so fortunate as to find a young man on the road to Lyndon who had 10 bushels of wheat to sell, which he offered for one dollar per bushel—only about one-half the regular price. Here was a golden opportunity, but unfortunately he declined to sell a part; but at the earnest solicitation of Frye was induced to let him have what his money would pay for, at a dollar per bushel. It being noised abroad among the neighbors that he had been thus successful, he was dispatched again, the next day, with what little money they had, as a sort of "general agent," to buy grain for them; but alas for their hopes! After riding all day he succeeded in procuring only a single bushel, for which he had to pay double the price of the day before.

On one occasion, needing a kettle for sugaring, he went to St. Johnsbury (10 miles), and procuring one of the kind denominated a five-pail kettle, he turned it bottom side up over his head, and in this way carried it home.

Capt. John M. Darling,* now living in town, at an advanced age, an active and hardy specimen of the past generation, drove the first wagon into town March 6, 1806. He came with his wife from Keene, N. H.—performing the journey in six days. Mrs. D. rode a horse without saddle or bridle the last mile or two of the journey.

Having no churn, Mr. Darling split out some staves and shaved and fashioned them, and made the hoops and bottom of the churn with a piece of broken scythe and a jackknife. Needing some buckets in which to gather sap, he made them of birch bark, with wood bottoms, and they did good service for many years. Such are only samples of the expedients to which the early settlers resorted

* Deceased since the above was written.

Almost the only means some of the settlers had of procuring their "groceries," &c., was by cutting down trees—usually maples—and burning them into ashes, leaching the ashes to obtain the lye, which they boiled into "salts" and sold at St. Johnsbury for about one cent per pound. Said an aged woman who died in town some years since, but who formerly lived in the adjoining town of Lunenburgh,* "I have sat up more nights to boil salts than I am years old. My husband carried them to St. Johnsbury on his back (20 miles) to get something to eat. I was obliged to make baskets and turn every way to keep my children from starving."

SOIL, &C.

Concord is an agricultural town producing a good supply of grass and grain, with abundance of the very best pasturage. The inhabitants send annually to market a large number of cattle, sheep and horses. Also many pounds of butter, wool and hops.

The following "statistics" exhibit the leading products of the town in 1860, according to the census reports of that year: Bushels of wheat, 2328; bushels of oats, 15330; average corn crop, 8000 bushels; bushels of potatoes, 26400; pounds of wool, 4434; pounds of hops, 8683; pounds of butter, 81232; orchard products, 4000 bushels.

Large quantities of sugar are yearly made. From the census reports we also glean the following: Number of horses, 328; milch cows, 737; working oxen, 314; other cattle, 1135; sheep, 1244; swine, 164; value of real estate, $432,400; personal estate, $175,231; population, 1291; over 20 years of age who cannot read and write, 6; blind, 1; paupers, 5.

A large portion of the town is more or less stony and uneven, but the soil is very strong, fertile and well calculated to resist wet and drouth. On both the Connecticut and Moose rivers are some fine meadows. The township is abundantly supplied with never-failing springs of pure, soft water; and several streams furnish adequate sites for mills and machinery, some of which are of much value, especially those at West Concord. Hall's brook, issuing from Hall's pond, in the south-westerly part of the town; Miles' stream, issuing from Mile's pond, in the north-easterly part; Mink brook, near the center; Moose river, in the westerly part; and Connecticut river, on the south-easterly side of the town, afford ample facilities for not only saw and grist-mills, but the two latter for factories. The Connecticut river, however, in Concord, is not yet improved for mills or factories. The width of it is such as to render dams expensive.

Hall's pond is a beautiful sheet of water more than 1 mile in length and from 1-4 to 1-2 mile in width. Miles' pond, in the north-east part of the town, is considerably larger. It washes the base of Mile's mountain, the highest elevation of land in town. From these ponds the early inhabitants drew immense supplies of fish, and considerable quantities are still procured from them, especially from Miles' pond.

The geology of the town is somewhat different from others in the vicinity. The rocks are granite, mica, schist, talcose schist, silicious limestone, argillaceous schist. A bed of coarse conglomerate and a calcareous disk also occur. The latter is 5 or 6 feet wide, and may be traced for a mile or more, crossing the strata at an angle of 20 or 30 degrees. No minerals of much value have been found. Small veins of galena occur in the S. E. portion of the town, but have never been carefully examined. Fibrolite, porphyry and pargasite are abundant in the rolled stone. The former occurs in places on the north end of Miles' mountain. Veins of quartz, calcite and chlorite occurs, some of which furnish beautiful cabinet specimens. Small deposits of earthy manganese occur in several places, and much of the rock in town is that in which gold may be found; but so far as is known to the writer, never has been discovered.*

* Rev. S. R. Hall's History of Eastern Vermont.

* Since the above was written, copper has been discovered in various places, in town, and a company has been formed for the purpose of mining for it, called the "Essex Mining Company," whose principal office is in New York City. From the report of the Mining Engineers we extract the following particulars of the Essex Mine. "The Essex Mine is situated in the town of Concord and is commonly known as the Moulton and Darling farms. The rocks of this district are of a highly cupriferous character, consisting of the talcose schists. There are also exposed to view parallel bands of quartzite, though the schist seems to be the charac-

The only natural curiosity of interest in the town is a cave on Miles' mountain. It is said to be of considerable extent, but has not been fully explored or described.

Deer were formerly very abundant, and long after the town was settled they were quite plenty, but now are not frequently seen, though more or less are caught nearly every year. Bears also were seen much more frequently in former years than at present. The following authentic bear story is perhaps without a parallel: A bear having been caught in a large trap, two or three men were leading him along by a rope attached to the trap; when the muscles of his leg giving way, he was liberated at once, and turned directly for the woods. Mrs. Morse, wife of Mr. James Morse, and one or two other women, with several children, were following the bear, and as he turned to run for the woods, a boy of Mrs. Morse's hit his heels against some impediment and fell over backwards, directly before the bear, when Mrs. M., seeing his danger, caught the trap and, with one well directed blow, laid the savage beast dead at her feet; but in doing so, received quite a severe wound herself, under her chin, by one of the grappling hooks at the end of the chain attached to the trap.

Wolves were also very abundant in town some 25 years since. An old hunter, by the name of French, caught numbers of them in the woods around Miles' pond. The bounty for killing a wolf being $20, it was thought that the same animal sometimes "did duty" more than once, by which means the state was cheated into paying for him the second time. Whether these surmises were true or not we have not the means of knowing. A wolf has not, to our knowledge, been seen in town for quite a number of years.

Moose were formerly caught in the woods around Moose river, in the northern part of the town. Some hunters, by the name of Hall, having killed a number of these animals, in the north part of the town, offered one-half of the meat to those who would bring it in. A Mr. Hunter brought in 100 pounds upon his back, and the father of the writer, 95 pounds, traveling upon snow-shoes; it being a warmish day and the snow very light and moist, they had to be often rapped against the trees to unload the snow from them, which made the traveling with so heavy a load very laborious. Moose have long since become extinct in town.

teristic rock of the district, and belongs to the lower silurian system. Their position is as near vertical as possible, and they contain the copper-bearing veins of the mine: these veins are composed chiefly of iron pyrites, quartz, and feldspar, and are richly charged with the yellow sulphurate of copper. They are conformable with the stratification, and take a course of N. 56° E. by S. 65° W. The upturned edges of the strata which are abundantly exposed on the property, exhibit incrustations of gozzan throughout."

This company now employ some 20 hands in the mines—but whether it is destined to be a "paying operation" or not, is probably undetermined.

REPRESENTATIVES

from the organization of the town to the present time: Elijah Spafford, 1694; Jonathan Lewis, 1795 and '96; Samuel Wetherbee, 1797, '99, 1800, '01, '02, 03, '06; John Frye, 1798; David Hibbard, 1804, '05, 07, '18; Richardson Graves, 1809, '10, '13, 14: Robert Taggard, 1812; Cornelius Judevine, 1815, '16; Jesse Woodbury, jr., 1817, '19; James May, 1821; David Hibbard, jr., 1822, '23; Dyer Hibbard, 1824, '25, '26, '27; Archibald Taggard, 1828, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35; Moses Hill, 1836, and '37; David Hibbard, 3d, 1838, '39, '40, '43, '44, '58, '59; Nathan J. Graves, 1841, '42; Harvey G. Frye, 1845, '46; William B. May, 1847, '48; Jeneson Carruth, 1849, '50; Preston May, 1851; Ebenezer Holbrook, 1852, '53; John G. Darling, 1853, '54; Chauncy Hill, 1856, '57; L. H. Tabor, 1860, '61, '62; Levi Howe, 1863, '64; Harvey Judivine, 1865.

TOWN CLERKS.

Joseph Ball from 1794 to 1803; Nathan Fisher from 1803 to 1804; Benjamin May from 1804 to 1805; David Hibbard from 1805 to 1811; Robert Taggard from 1811 to 1813; Andrew Spaulding from 1813 to 1828; Harvey G. Frye from 1828 to '57, with the exception of the year 1830; John Scoby, 1830; George C. Frye from 1857 to present time.

COUNTY OFFICERS—HIGH SHERIFFS.

David Hibbard, jr., 1813, '14, '15, '16; Dyer Hibbard, 1821; Elijah Hill, 1822; Charles Chase, 1863, '64.

STATE'S ATTORNEYS.

David Hibbard, jr., 1813, '14, '15, '16; Oscar F. Harvey, 1860, '61.

ASSISTANT JUDGES OF COUNTY COURT.

Samuel Wetherbee, 1803, '04, '05, '06, '09; Azarias Williams, 1811, '12; Richardson Graves, 1821, '23, '24, '31, 34; Dyer Hibbard, 1823; Brigham Pike, 1836, '37; David Hibbard, jr., 1838; Warner Brigham, 1844;

Digitized by Google

Nathan J. Graves, 1847; Samuel G. Babcock, 1848; David Hibbard, 3d, 1850, '51; Harvey G. Frye, 1852, '53; Asa Hibbard, 1857, '58.

COUNCIL OF CENSORS.

David Hibbard, 3d, 1856.

MEMBERS OF CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Cornelius Judevine, 1814; Dyer Hibbard, 1822; Archibald Taggard, 1828; Harvey G. Frye, 1836, '50; William B. May, 1843; Asa Hibbard, 1856.

CENSUS AT DIFFERENT DECADES.

1791, 49; 1800, 322; 1810, 677; 1820, 800; 1830, 1031; 1840, 1024; 1850, 1153; 1860, 1291. Families in Concord, at the present time (January, 1866), 240; inhabitants, 1186.

The number of deaths in town, from its first settlement to the year 1830, was 254, of which a large proportion were children under ten years of age.

Concord has usually been a very healthy town. In 1822 the dysentery prevailed to a great extent, and was very fatal among the children. In 1833 the canker rash prevailed, and was quite fatal. The erysipelas was very prevalent and fatal in 1844. During the fall of 1863 and winter of 1864 the diphtheria and canker rash proved very fatal.

Among the remarkable instances in which diphtheria has swept off almost entire families, may be mentioned that of Mr. Luther W. Russell, whose entire family, consisting of his wife and four children, and also a sister living in the family, died in the space of a few days.

West Concord,*

a flourishing village, containing some 80 dwellings, 90 families and nearly 350 inhabtants, is situated in the westerly part of the town, on both sides of Moose river.

It was founded by John D. Chase in 1837, who, against the earnest solicitation of his friends, erected a dwelling-house in the autumn of that year, and moved his family into it in June, 1838, at which time he commenced the building of a dam and saw-mill on Moose river, on the site of the mill now owned by the Hon. Asa Hibbard. He had but little capital for such an enterprise, except uncommon natural mechanical skill, indomitable will, active hands, and a fixed determination to see a village grow up around him. Having completed his saw-mill, he soon after commenced making preparations for erecting a grist-mill; and associating with him his nephew, Mr. Levi Howe, they built a grist-mill, in 1840 and 41, which was then considered the best in the state.

The first store was built by C. S. S. Hill in 1840. Various mechanical shops were soon after erected and occupied by people of different trades.

A cemetery was laid out in 1843, and a neat and commodious church edifice erected in 1844, owned by the Universalist Society, in which preaching has been sustained the greater part of the time.

The West Concord House was built by Levi Howe in 1844.

In 1845 Messrs. J. D. Chase, Levi Howe, M. H. Hill, and W. Joslin built a second dam and saw-mill; and the next year J. D. Chase and others erected a foundry and machine shop near it. Mr. Chase, in connection with his two sons, carried on an extensive business in the machine and mill manufacturing business for several years. The following statistics of the business of J. D. Chase & Sons are taken, by permission, from the last census report, and will convey something of an idea of their works and business at that time (1860):

Capital invested in mills and machinery, $28,000. Materials consumed yearly, as follows:

100 tuns pig iron,	valued at		$3,600
20 " wrought iron,	"	"	1,300
30 " anth. coal,	"	"	465
3000 bushels charcoal,	"	"	150
30 tuns molding sand,	"	"	450
100,000 feet lumber,	"	"	1,500
1½ tons lead and zinc,	"	"	425
Other articles,	"	"	1,850
			$9,740

Manufactured during the preceding year:

16 circular saw-mills,	valued at		$5,920
12 planing-mills,	"	"	6,350
1 fire-engine,	"	"	1,000
5 grist-mills,	"	"	5,000
3 lumber-mills,	"	"	6,000
25 force-pumps,	"	"	625
Other work,	"	"	4,500
Value of lumber manufactured,			5,625
			$69,280

The financial crisis, which soon followed the breaking out of the Rebellion, compelled

*For many of the materials of this sketch the author is indebted to Jefferson Chase, Esq.

the Messrs. Chase to suspend their business and seek other fields of labor.

The water power and buildings are now owned by the West Concord Manufacturing Company, who are about converting the principal machine buildings into a woolen factory, which is expected to give employment to some 30 or 40 operatives.

A post-office was established at West Concord, in 1849, and Charles Chase was appointed postmaster. He was succeeded in —— by D. W. Hibbard, who gave place in —— to the present incumbent, S. S. Gould.

West Concord is now the principal business center of this as well as parts of several adjoining towns, and contains, in addition to what has already been mentioned, 2 stores, 1 boot and shoe store, 2 millinery stores, 1 furniture store, 1 grocery store, 1 harness maker's shop, 2 carriage manufactories, 1 stove and tin ware store and manufactory, 1 bedstead manufactory, and various other smaller branches of business carried on by different mechanics and artisans.

CONCORD CORNER,

a village situated in the south-westerly part of the town, dates back nearly to the first settlement of the town; and was for many years its business center and the place of a flourishing mercantile trade with this and adjoining towns; and boasted its lawyer—its physician, and its minister, years before many of the now adjoining villages had sprung up.

We have not been able to ascertain who made the first settlement here. Among the earlier ones may be named the Hon. Samuel Wetherbee, and Joseph Frye, Esq; also Mr. Andrew Hardy, who kept the first tavern. The Hon. Azarias Williams was a merchant here, probably as early as 1798; and Reuben Grout flourished as a lawyer, only a few years later.

"Concord Academy and Essex County Grammar School" was a very flourishing institution and added much to the life of the place in former years. Of late years mercantile and mechanical business has become withdrawn to other localities, till, at present, there is little carried on here, In days of yore the people met at the "Corner" on all "public days," and full many an anecdote of the sayings and doings of 50 years ago might be recounted, which tho' amusing and interesting as matters of local history are not worth a place in a work like this.

We might tell, however, how a certain lawyer by the name of Richardson becoming obnoxious to the people, was rode out of town upon a blacksmith's bellows; as how on another occasion when the "ardent" had flowed pretty freely, "old Oliver Perry" an eccentric and "roystering" "old bach," washed landlady Hardy's cap in the swill-pail and dried it on the gridiron—or how a certain justice had his "official dignity" somewhat "damaged" by having the contents of the landlord's swill-pail poured upon his head while the pail was placed upon it as he was crowned "King of the Swine."

All these, and many others, behold, are they not written in the "legends" of "long ago," and we will not recount them here.

SABBATH-SCHOOL.

During several years it has been supposed that the first Sabbath-School in Vermont was established at Greensboro, during the year 1814. But it will clearly appear by the subjoined testimony which is itself reliable, and is confirmed by others, that a school was commenced at Concord at least two years earlier. The writer of the following statements had complete means of showing her entire accuracy. She says;

"The first Sabbath-School established in Concord commenced in the autumn of 1811 or '12. I think it was in 1811, but I am not positive, but am certain it was in operation in the year 1812. It was established on this plan. The Rev. Samuel Goddard, that eminent servant of Christ, was minister of the Congregational church in Concord. He gave notice at the close of meeting on the Sabbath that he would meet with the young people, one evening that week for biblical instruction, and requested us to bring our Bibles, which we did. He made a prayer. We then all read some in our Bibles. He then made an address, stating the object of the "Bible-School," as he called it, and requested us to commit portions of Scripture and Hymns to memory and recite them to him Sabbath intermissions, which we accordingly did for several months. He then adopted a different mode and gave us a question, and we looked up passages of Scripture, to answer it.

We could write down our answers as we chose. The first question he gave out was "What is the character of God?" The second "What is the character of Christ?" The next "What is the character of man?" and so on. I remember perfectly well that he said those schools were first started in England, where there was a multitude of very poor, ragged children, that had no means of instruction, and some pious people felt pained and anxious to do something for their good, and in other places they had followed their example with the best results. Although the church has nearly run down, that Sabbath-School has kept along to the present time. We had no Sabbath-School books, except the Bible and hymn books, for some years; though we had the help of the catechism if we chose. The school was composed of scholars from 10 to 20 years of age. But where are they now? Mostly dead—but very few remain, and they are old people full of infirmities. I feel the purest pleasure in thinking over those ancient times, and the faithfulness of that servant of Christ, who was never behind the time in any good work for the spiritual good of his fellowmen."

Religious Societies.*

Many of the early inhabitants had emigrated from places where they enjoyed the ordinances of the gospel; and hence were not long contented to be deprived of them.

A Congregational church was organized Jan. 7th, 1807, consisting of 17 members, over which the Rev. Samuel Goddard was ordained pastor Sept. 7th, 1809. The ordination services were held in the open air, near the residence of Hon. Samuel Wetherbee, at the Corner; and were attended by a very large number of people from this and the adjoining towns, and by most of the Congregational preachers in neighboring towns; The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. Joseph Lee, of Royalston, Mass., from Jer. iii. 15.

A house of worship was erected for the church in 1816, at a cost of some $3000, it being a very large and—for the times—costly edifice. It was modeled after a church in New York City, in accordance with the wishes of Mrs. Williams, who made liberal contributions towards its erection. It was furnished with a very excellent bell, "the first in all the region round."

The Rev. Samuel Goddard continued his labor with the church till June 6, 1821; and, from its formation in 1807 to June, 1821, the additions to the church were about 80, or an average of about 6 yearly, making the total number of membership then 97.

In June, 1822, Mr. Samuel R. Hall, a licentiate of Worcester County Association, Massachusetts, visited the place, at the request of the preceding pastor, and was induced to remain and accept a call to become their pastor. He was ordained March 4, 1823. As a condition of settlement he was to be allowed to establish and maintain a seminary, with special reference to the training of teachers for the schools, and furnishing the young with greater facilities for education; but the parish being large and the school numerous, he found the labor too exhausting to be continued many years.

During his ministry of 8 years, 48 were added to the church, and a number of hopeful conversions occurred in the seminary, of those from neighboring towns, one of whom has long been an able missionary in Turkey; and several others who entered the work of the ministry at home. One became the succeeding pastor of the church. Two, of great promise, died before completing their preparatory studies. The number of conversions in the school probably exceeded those which occurred in the parish. Mr. Hall gained and maintained great influence over the young, and was enabled successfully to inaugurate several plans for their improvement. Having accepted an appointment as principal of a seminary for educating teachers at Andover, Mass., Mr. Hall was dismissed in August, 1830, and Mr. Solon Martin, who had been connected with the school at Concord, and also assistant teacher, was ordained pastor of the church June 7, 1835, and continued as such till Oct. 8, 1838. He had labored with the church and people more than a year previous to his ordination, with eminent usefulness, and was greatly endeared to both parish and seminary. A revival of great interest occurred during his ministry, and 30 were added to the church. Mr. Martin found the field too laborious for his state of health, and was constrained to request a dismissal, greatly to the regret of all.

After his dismission, several different parties supplied the pulpit from time to time. The Rev. John Wooster and the Rev. Josiah Morse each laboring some three years.—Since which time there has been no stated preaching, and no additions to the church.

The Freewill Baptist Church, which was gathered by Elder Daniel Quimby, was organized Nov. 10, 1821, and consisted of 11 members; Abner Haywood being the

* We are indebted to Rev. S. R. Hall for valuable aid in the preparation of this, as well as other portions of the history of Concord.

Digitized by Google

first deacon. There are no definite records of the earlier ministers who labored with this church.

In 1840 the Rev. J. M. Russell was ordained over it, and continued his labors for some 16 years, since which a number of different preachers have been employed for short periods of time.

Previous to 1843 they held their meetings in private dwellings and school-houses. In this year they erected a comfortable house, which they have since occupied. This church has always been few in numbers and of small means, consequently have never been able to give their ministers a very able support.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

For the past few years the Methodists and Congregationalists have united in sustaining meetings at Concord Corner a portion of the time. At present, Methodist preaching is sustained at North Concord (formerly "Bradley's Vale"), where there is a small society and a neat and commodious church edifice—built a few years since.

During the past year meetings have been discontinued at the Corner, and a society formed at West Concord, under the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. Buswell. A church has been formed which now numbers sixty members, and a Sabbath-School of some seventy-five scholars, with a well selected library. The society at present worship in the town-hall, which has been conveniently fitted up for its use,—March, 1867.

THE UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY IN CONCORD.*

February, 1835, Daniel Pike, 2d, Senaca Sargent, David Moulton, and others, met at Joseph Frye's and organized the first Universalist Society in Concord, by choosing Daniel Pike, 2d, moderator, and Senaca Sargent, secretary, pro tem.

After adopting a constitution by which to be governed, they then chose the following persons as officers for the ensuing year: Daniel Pike, 2d, David Moulton, Archibald Taggard, committee; Senaca Sargent, secretary; Elmore Chase, treasurer.

For several years, having no settled minister in town, they sustained preaching by securing the services of different individuals. Rev. Moses Ballou, Merrit Sanford, and B. M. Tillotson ministered unto them successively. Their meetings for a time were held in the old academy, then located at Concord Corner, except as they were permitted occasionally to worship in the Congregational meeting-house.

About the year 1840 a little village began to be built up in the west part of the town, now known as West Concord. Here, in 1843, the society made arrangements for building a house of worship, which was completed and dedicated Dec. 25, 1844. The next object of the society was to secure the services of a preacher to reside in their midst. In this they succeeded, March, 1845, when Rev. C. C. Clark accepted an invitation to become their pastor, and labored with the society three years.

Rev. P. Hersey supplied the desk for the next six months, when Rev. R. S. Sanborn, having accepted an invitation to become their pastor, commenced his labors October, 1848. He was succeeded, in August, 1850, by Rev. Wm. Livingston, who remained with the society until 1855. Rev. J. Britton, jr., next ministered to the society for one year, and in March, 1857, the Rev. L. H. Tabor succeeded him, who is their present pastor. As the village increased in size, and as there was no other meeting in the place, it became necessary to enlarge their house of worship, which they did in 1859, by adding 20 pews. The house now numbers 68 slips. In March, 1859, 19 members of the society and congregation entered into church covenant with each other, "That they might mutually help each other to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Savior of the world," and several others have been added to the church since the organization.

Connected with the society is a Sabbath school of 80 members, and a library of 300 volumes. The following is the number of habitual attendants upon public worship, in Concord, according to the report of the Rev. N. W. Aspinwall, agent of the Essex County Bible Society: With Universalists, 170; with Methodists, 111; with Freewill Baptists, 38; with Congregationalists, 8; miscellaneous, 33; Total, 360. This, with a population of 1186, shows that less than one-third of the people are regular attendants upon public worship.

* For the materials of this sketch we are indebted to Rev. L. H. Tabor.

Educational.

Scarcely had the early settlers cleared a spot sufficiently large upon which to erect a log cabin, ere we find them making provisions for the preached gospel and the common school—those objects so dear to a free people.

From the early records we learn, May, 1794, it was "Voted, to raise thirty bushels of wheat for the use of schools." Also, "to build three school-houses;" and this, too, when there were less than 20 families in town.

At a subsequent meeting it was "Voted, to build only one school-house, and to cover that with barks."

Education has ever received a commendable share of the attention of our people. Concord Academy and Essex County Grammar School—an account of which is given—was the first chartered institution in this vicinity, and aided very materially in elevating the common schools of the town, by furnishing teachers much better qualified for their vocation than they could otherwise have been.

Common schools have multiplied till now there are in town 15 school districts, and schools which are in session from 4 to 6 months yearly, at an annual expense for teachers' wages, board, fuel, &c., of some $1400, besides large sums expended for scholars attending select schools and academies.

Concord Academy.

Soon after the settlement of the Rev. S. R. Hall, he established a seminary with special reference to the elevation of common schools, by improving the character of teachers. The first term was commenced in his own house; but was, soon after, removed to a convenient hall, over one of the stores in the village. More ample accommodations being soon after demanded by the great increase of scholars in the seminary, an academy building was erected on the same site where the present school-house now stands. The school was commenced in March, 1823, and incorporated at the session of the legislature the succeeding autumn. In 1825, by an act of the legislature, it was made a County Grammar School, so far as to receive the rents arising from the grammar-school lands in Concord; and has since been known as the Essex County Grammar School.

A course of study was arranged, and teachers' classes formed during the first year; but during the second, a regular normal school course was instituted. Lectures on school keeping were given during the spring and autumn of each year, intended to illustrate improved modes of both teaching and governing schools. A small volume of these lectures was prepared for publication in 1828, and published in 1829, being the first attempt of the kind on the western continent, if not in the world. This volume was received with great favor. Several editions were issued and sold. One edition of 10,000 copies was purchased by the state of New York, and a copy placed in each school district of the state.

The editor of the Congregational Quarterly (January, 1861) says: "To Mr. Hall undoubtedly belongs the credit of being the father of normal schools in America." "Here," says the Hon. Henry Barnard, "in an obscure corner of New England, under the hand of one who was, to a remarkable degree, self-taught, self-prompted, and alone in planning it, was an institution with all the essential characteristics of a normal school, 18 years before the Massachusetts movement had reached that point of development which secured the establishment of the normal school at Lexington."

Space cannot be allowed in this place for an extended notice of this first Normal School in America, and for giving the details of the course of study, modes of teaching, &c. The little germ planted here, in the wilderness, has sent forth its fibers, leaves and fruits to every part of the land. Methods of teaching, first adopted in this town, are now common in every state, and in almost every school. Men filling many important places of trust and usefulness, here received the bias which has resulted in their becoming an honor to the town and a blessing to the world. Rev. Daniel Ladd, missionary in Turkey; Rev. Solon Martin Rev. Wm. Peck; Rev. Mr. Orton; Rev. Mr. Benton, now in California; Hon. Harry Hibbard, late member of Congress; Hon. Wm. Heywood; Hon. Reuben C. Benton (senior); Prof. James Dascomb, M. D.; Mark R. Woodbury, M. D.; Hon. David Hibbard, and many others, were members of the school during the period wich Mr. Hall was principal, many of whom have become eminently successful as teachers, or in the common walks of life.

Digitized by Google

WEST CONCORD HIGH SCHOOL

is now in a prosperous and flourishing condition, under its present justly popular and efficient teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Elmore Chase, 2d, and affords excellent facilities for the people of this and adjoining localities to educate their children at a much less expense than at many other more expensive, but far less thorough and practical schools.

Biographical.

We have to regret, very much, that want of adequate information has prevented our giving sketches of the lives of only a very few of the early settlers of the town. Among those of whom we have been able to obtain very brief records may be mentioned the one of the early settlers and a large landed proprietor, who came from Charlestown, N. H. His wife, whose maiden name was Susannah Johnson, was taken captive by the Indians, in company with her father's family, and carried to Montreal, Canada, where she was bought by a French family, and lived several years with three maiden sisters by the name of "Jesson."

HON. SAMUEL WETHERBEE,

Mr. and Mrs. Wetherbee were the parents of a large family of children, who lived to the period of manhood, and many of them to old age.

JAMES MORSE, ESQ.,

came to Concord in February, 1792, there being then only 6 families in town. He came from Barre, Mass., bringing a pack upon his back weighing 91½ pounds. He was a man of strong, hardy endurance, great memory and untiring energy. He filled many offices of trust in the early history of the town.

THE REV. SAMUEL GODDARD

was a native of Royalston, Mass., where he and a brother engaged in mercantile pursuits before he studied for the ministry. He was a man of deep and ardent piety, and exerted a salutary influence upon the community in which he dwelt.

HON. AZARIAS WILLIAMS*

was born in Sheffield, York County, England, A. D. 1765. He came to the United States in 1786, landing at New York city. He married Miss Sarah F. Warner, of that city, in 1789, and came to Concord in 1796. He was the first postmaster in this town, and subsequently one of the Associate Judges of Essex County Court; also, for a time, a merchant in town.

Erecting a splendid mansion on his farm, about a mile from the Corner, he lived in a style far above any other family in town, and, with his truly amiable wife, dispensed hospitality with a profuse and lavish liberality to all. His mansion, together with much valuable furniture and household goods, was burned in 1825; after which, Mrs. Williams resided in New York, in the former home of her parents, which was left her by her father, who died the same year. In 1839 Judge Williams, in consideration of the payment of certain debts and an annual annuity of $400, deeded to the corporation of the University of Vermont his lands in this state, amounting to some 1500 acres, and estimated to be worth $25,000. Mrs. Williams died in the city of New York, in 1848, and Mr. Williams in Concord in 1849, being in his 84th year.

The corporation of the University of Vermont erected a beautiful and appropriate monument over his remains, "As a tribute of respect to one who in his life devoted his fortune for the promotion of liberal learning in his adopted state."

Judge Williams was a most excellent penman and correct accountant, adding two and three columns of figures as accurately and rapidly as ordinary business men could one.

THE HON. RICHARDSON GRAVES

came to Concord from Barre, Mass., in 1798, and commenced a farm about three-fourths of a mile from the Corner, where he lived till his death in 1852. He was a man of uncommon activity, of a strong constitution and great endurance. He took a decided and prominent part in not only the early, but subsequent history of the town, and held various offices both in town and county. He cleared up and cultivated a large and valuable farm, and accumulated a handsome property now owned by his only son, Hon. N. J. Graves.

DEACON DAVID HIBBARD

was born in Windham, Conn., Dec. 2, 1755, and was married to Eunice Talcott, Nov. 11, 1779, living for a number of years in Cov.

* For the materials for this sketch of the life of Judge Williams we are indebted to Col. J. G. Darling, of Boston, Mass., a former resident of Concord.

Digitized by Google

entry, in that state. They were the parents of 13 children, all but one of whom lived to manhood. In 1782 or '83 he moved to Norwich, Vt., where he resided till 1799, when he came to Concord, where he lived till his death, which took place Feb. 18, 1844, in his 90th year. From an obituary published soon after his decease, we make the following extract, as being peculiarly to the point as a truthful account of his life:

"He became of age in December, after the celebration of Independence, and engaged with ardor in the struggle that resulted in its acknowledgment by Great Britain. Soon after the Revolution was closed he married and removed to Norwich in this state. After a residence in Norwich of a number of years, he came to Concord in A. D. 1799, with his family. This was but a few years after the settlement of the town commenced. Previous to his coming to Concord he made a public confession of religion by uniting with the Congregational church in Norwich.

When he came to Concord there was no religious society in town; but he did not consider this circumstance as releasing him from his covenant vows. On the contrary, he considered it an indication of Providence that he should enter into the vineyard of the Lord and labor. He accordingly assembled the few scattered inhabitants of the neighborhood in devotional service upon the Sabbath. He led their minds to the throne of grace in prayer. He read to them from the word of God, and gave them illustrations of truth in the sermons of others. And this he continued to do from year to year, till God sent them a pastor, the Rev. Samuel Goddard, recently deceased in Norwich.

Thus he was emphatically, as remarked by a friend on the day of interment, the father of the religious society in the town. In 1807 the Congregational church was organized, and he was appointed the first deacon, which office he held until his death, and the duties of which he discharged with the strictest fidelity. He also held various important and responsible offices in town and county. In short, was a man greatly respected by all acquainted with him for the strength of his mind, the soundness of his judgment and the integrity of his life. In all places his labors were untiring; his example worthy; and his memory blessed."

HON. DAVID HIBBARD, JR.,

son of David and Eunice Hibbard, was born at Coventry, Ct., Dec. 23, 1780, and was the eldest of 13 children. He came to this town with his father's family in 1798, being then some 18 years of age. His means for acquiring an education were limited; but his superior natural abilities compensated in a great degree for this deficiency. He pursued the occupation of a farmer till considerably past the period of manhood, and then turned his attention to the law as a profession. He was emphatically what is termed a self-made lawyer. Though not possessed of brilliant oratorical powers, he was an excellent judge of law, having a strong mind and remarkably retentive memory; and, best of all, he was a man of unbending integrity, and one who most thoroughly despised duplicity or dishonesty in others. He was honored with many important offices of trust both in town and county. It was frequently remarked, after his decease, that community had lost an honest lawyer. He died March 21, 1852, having suffered much in body and mind for several years from the effects of a severe attack of paralysis in 1845.

HON. DAVID HIBBARD, 3D, son of David Hibbard, Jr., was born in Concord, being the eldest of three children. Like his father, he is a man of strong mind and large and varied information, a most thorough hater of oppression and lover of liberty and freedom. He has usefully and honorably filled many important offices in the town and county; but the space for biography in this work is intended rather for the dead and absent sons of Vermont than for the living and resident, however they may be an honor unto and beloved by town or county.

HON. HARRY HIBBARD,

second son of David Hibbard, Jr., born in Concord, June 1, 1816, is also a man of decided talent, a lawyer by profession, residing at Bath, N. H. Entering college at the early age of 16, he passed rapidly through his collegiate and professional studies and commenced the practice of law at a very early age, and rose rapidly to the head of his profession. He has held many responsible offices in his adopted state, being twice elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, and twice President of the state Senate. He served 6 years as member of Congress from the third district in N. H. In 1845 he was a candidate for the United States Senate, but was defeated by John P. Hale, whose political views were more in accordance with the public sentiment in New Hampshire than his. For a number of years past he has devoted himself entirely to his profession, and ranks with the most able advocates in his state.

Digitized by Google

Captain John M. Darling, whose portrait appears in this number.

BY H. A. CUTTING.

One of the most noticeable farms in the excellent grazing town of Concord is "Maple Grove," the residence of Capt. John M. Darling, one of the early settlers of that town. The fine orchards and magnificent groves of maple trees he early planted have long been admired and have attracted the attention of every one visiting that locality. The worthy Captain, now in his 81st year, still lives* to enjoy the fruits of his labor, and though thus advanced in age retains to a remarkable degree the intellect, strength and ambition of his early manhood. His noble wife died in the full belief and hope in Christ, May 14, 1862, after living with him in Concord over 56 years. As I believe a brief sketch of his life will not be without interest, and is appropriate to this work, I will narrate a few facts, such as have come under the notice of all his large circle of friends, and will also glean some dates and items of his early life from his manuscript autobiography, written when in his 78th year, for and at the request of his son, Geo. B. Darling, of Boston.

John M. Darling was born in Surry, N. H., Nov. 8, 1782. For his education and thorough knowledge of military science he was greatly indebted to his father, Rev. David Darling, a graduate of Rhode Island College, at Providence, now called Brown University. At the age of early manhood, being ambitious and wishing to carve out a home and name for himself, he formed his plans to go to the far North, as it was then called. He left Keene, N. H., in the spring of 1805, with the intention of purchasing land for a permanent residence in the North. He arrived at Concord, on his land-hunting expedition, the 6th of June, and put up with Oliver Cutting, who was from Athol, Mass., and had before purchased and was already settled in his new home. After looking about for a short time he purchased about a mile from Mr. Cutting's, and commenced chopping on his land immediately. Of his first day's experience he says: "I commenced work alone, yet not alone, as I had hardly cut a bush before millions of midgets, black flies and musquitos were there to keep me company. Being unused to them, it seemed for a time that they would devour me. I however steadily worked on, but not unmindful of their presence." In about three weeks he had fallen 7 acres, and engaging Mr. Cutting to set fire to his chopping when dry, he returned to Keene. In the autumn of the same year he made another journey to Concord, cleared off his land and built a log house ready to accommodate his future family. He now having a house, farm and pair of steers, went back to his native town for a wife. He was married Feb. 12, 1806, to Salome Reed, a daughter of Hines Reed, a Revolutionary hero, and grand-daughter of Gen. James Reed of Fitchburg, Mass. He soon started for his new home, bringing his goods on a wagon, which was the first one that ever came into the town of Concord. For the want of roads he could only get within about four miles of his farm, the remaining distance being by marked trees.

On the 10th of March, 1806, he reached his new home and began life in earnest, considerably in debt, 125 miles from his old home and friends,—and in a wilderness is certainly a life in earnest. Of his own account of his first day's housekeeping he says: "After building a good fire in one corner of our house upon some flat stones, placed there for the purpose, and pouting about for a while we aroused ourselves and went to work putting our things in order, and before night our cabin looked like a little parlor." We now pass over an interval of years of struggle with hard times and cold, backward seasons, and look again upon his farm bearing a more cultivated aspect, and with his children arising around him, which arouses new aspirations and new wants. Schools are needed and a nucleus of society must be formed, and his energies are devoted to that purpose. After the usual amount of talk with neighbors, they have a bee and a log school-house rises out of the primeval forest, and the few children of the neighborhood gather there for instruction. But his energies do not end here; a town must have a meeting-house, and in 1816 the large church that stands now as a memento of times past, at the corner was built; and, although not in affluent circumstances, we find the name of John M. Darling with those of Hon. Azarias Williams, Cornelius Judevine, and one or two others as instigators and perfecters of the project, and that Capt. Darling contributes liberally and does everything in his power to further the design and interests of the society of which he and his wife were members. Soon comes the need of a more thorough system of education than the district school, and we find him also with a few others, energetic like himself, projecting the plan of an academy; and in this then great and important enterprise we find the Captain engaged with his whole energy, contributing his means and labor in the most liberal manner. The result was the completing, in 1823, of the brick academy afterwards known as the "Essex County Grammar School;" and under the instruction of Rev. Samuel R. Hall, became very popular, and did more to build up and populate the town than perhaps any other thing, and the good emanating from that once flourishing institution is felt through all this section, and many of our most able men date their educational starting point from it; and at the present time, looking back through the history of that institution, we see the moving, guardian spirit to be that energetic, persevering man John M. Darling.

*This paper was written in 1864. Capt. Darling died after a few days illness, Feb. 28, 1866.

Digitized by Google

He was also the founder of the Sabbath-School in Concord, and was superintendent of the same for more than 25 years, and during that time maintained an interest which was surprising and very beneficial to the church and congregation.

In 1842 a small Baptist society in town wished much to build a church, and laid the plan before him for assistance and advice. Quietly as ever he advises them to build, giving them the land for church and common and contributing largely towards the building. Though, as ever, a Congregational professor, he showed by his liberal spirit that he was willing to aid in all religious and benevolent enterprises. But of the predominant traits of his character one is peculiar: he was no office seeker. He would accept no civil offices, but as he fully understood military affairs, he could not well reject a commission, yet always wore it lightly, and though he was very energetic and did much for the military of Vermont, he never sought its offices and emoluments. He accepted a Captain's commission, which he held several years, during which time he brought the militia of Concord up to a high degree of proficiency.

Through his long career of business and usefulness, his many contracts and building mills and machinery, he never had a law suit, and, as far as I know, never a quarrel or arbitration. He was always a friend to the poor and needy, and frequently gave away so much and assisted the poor to such an extent that he gained the censure of a portion of the vicinity, who would appear to think that he assisted them so much that they did not try to help themselves. But, on the other hand, ask the poor who was ready to lend a helping hand and to whom they poured out their troubles and gained substantial aid and sympathy? Ask them further whom they loved to see at their lowly homes and who received remembrance in their prayers, and who they believed was a noble man and a true Christian, and their answer would be quickly given.

He always in his leisure moments improved his mind by reading, and accumulated a respectable library and quite a museum of rare and interesting curiosities, and was always ready to lend a helping hand to those trying to obtain an education.

In life he was not unmindful of death, and his family lot in the burying ground is laid out and prepared with a taste not inferior to that displayed in the best cemeteries in the country, upon which he has erected an elegant and appropriate monument. We will add, in acknowledgment of the assistance gained from him, especially in writing the natural history of the County, that he always kept a diary, writing a description of all interesting events.

We might speak more of him, but suffice it to say that he and his worthy wife, now gone, have a large circle of friends, as people of their character and standing must have; and it is through their earnest solicitations and his very reluctant consent that his portrait appears at the front of this number, and I speak thus much of him.

We have no great political characters in Essex County, and for our book must select one of our men that has been influential in good works, and though we hope and trust we have had and still have many worthy men, yet we may have none better; none that stands higher in the scale of honor; none that have raised a more energetic family, or none that have done more for the public good. I will venture to express his sentiments in the following lines, as he would naturally express them in defending his generosity, if assailed:

Digitized by Google

Who would scorn his humble fellow
For the coat he wears?
For the poverty he suffers?
For his daily cares?
Who would pass him in the footway
With averted eye?
Would you ever? No, you would not.
If you would, not I.

Who when vice or crime repenteth,
With a grief sincere,
Asked for pardon would refuse it—
More than Heaven severe?
Who to erring woman's sorrow
Would with taunts reply?
Would you ever? No, you would not.
If you would, not I.

Who would give a cause his efforts
When that cause is strong?
But desert it on its failure,
Whether right or wrong?
Ever siding with the upmost,
Letting downmost lie?
Would you ever? No, you would not.
If you would, not I.

Who would lend his arm to strengthen
Warfare with the right?
Who would give his pen to blacken
Freedom's page of light?
Who would lend his tongue to utter Praise of Tyranny?
Would you ever? No, you would not
If you would, not I.

Who would give as his opinion
What he knew was wrong?
Ever siding with his patron,
Making error strong;
Who would give his words to strengthen
Humbug or a lie?
Would you ever? No you would not.
If you would, not I.

Of his family, Eliza R. the oldest daughter married Stephen C. Cutting, and has always lived in Concord. She is a kind wife, a noble mother, and a respected member of society.

Fanny, his second daughter, was an intelligent, interesting child, died May 1, 1828, in her 15th year. John G., his oldest son, carried on the mercantile business at Concord Corner over 27 years, during which time he was postmaster 20 years, and held commissions in the militia of Vermont from 1830 to 1860 in almost every capacity from a Lieutenant to Colonel commandant of the 16th Regiment, being the Caledonia County Regiment, one of the largest, finest and best in the state. During this time he collected a library of about 1200 volumes, and the largest museum of curiosities, shells, &c., in this part of the state. He is now a merchant in Boston, also being a partner in the firm of J. G. Darling & Co. of Lunenburgh, Vt. As he is a man of perseverance, sterling integrity and fine business capabilities, his removal was greatly regretted by many in the county. James P. his second son, has most of the time resided in Concord. He kept a hotel at Concord Corner, where he now lives, for several years, but as he is the owner of an extensive farm he has devoted his time mostly to agricultural pursuits. Hines R., his third son, was engaged in the mercantile business at Guildhall for several years, and now resides in Boston, where he is engaged in mercantile pursuits. While in Vermont he held commissions in the militia from Lieutenant to Lieutenant Colonel, and was Deputy Sheriff in the county of Essex most of the time while at Guildhall. George B., his fourth son, went to Boston to live when a youth, is now a respectable merchant in that city, William H., his fifth and youngest son, resides on the old homestead at "Maple Grove;" is an extensive, persevering farmer and active man.

MY NATIVE STATE.

BY O. W. TURNER.*

Vermont—"The star that never sets"—
Thy genial rays seem brighter yet;
Though distant from my native hills,
Thy fertile vales and murmuring rills;
Though many years have o'er me flown,
Since I could call thy joys my own,
Yet my fond heart will ne'er forget
The hallowed "star that never sets."

Thy wintry scenes have charms for me,
When joyous hearts in concert free,
The social evening hours beguile,
And friendship wears her happiest smile;
Or, when from some propitious height,
Alone at moonlit hour of night;
The scene sublime I'll ne'er forget—
Thou hallowed "star that never sets."

The voice of thy returning Spring
Bids every heart with rapture sing,
When earliest bluebird skims along,
And redbreast chants his sunset song;
Flocks long pent up now skip with pride
Again upon the mountain side;
No sombre cloud obscures thee yet—
Thou hallowed "star that never sets."

*A native, and for many years a resident of Concord.

Digitized by Google

The lowing herds—the wild bee's hum—
Thy far-famed mountain's dappled dome—
The timid cuckoo's plaintive song—
The dusted fields and fruity throng—
Thy sylvan shades and crystal spring,
Bright Summer's cheerful offering—
Cling fondly 'round my memory yet,
Thou hallowed "star that never sets."

Thy sisters never, never shall—
Not e'en Pacific sister Cal—
Eclipse thy radiant, golden beams,
When Autumn nature's pledge redeems;
Thy harvest moon—thy landscape views,
With mellow light and varied hues—
Those rural scenes I'll ne'er forget,
Thou hallowed "star that never sets."

On thy green hills fair Freedom dwells—
No bondman's tears her flame shall quell—
No haughty Southron ever dare
Pursue a panting chattel there—
No hireling of a tyrant's power
The hearts of thy free sons shall cower;
A halo bright surrounds thee yet—
Thou faithful "star that never sets."

NEWTON, MASS., April, 1861.

SOLDIERS FURNISHED BY THE TOWN OF CONCORD

For the defense of our country, and the suppression of the slaveholders' rebellion, showing the age of each, the time of enlistment, and subsequent history as far as known. Compiled mainly from the reports of the Adjutant General of Vermont, for the years 1864 and 1865.

VOLUNTEERS FOR THREE YEARS.

NAMES.	Age.	Date of Enlistment.	Reg't.	Co.	HISTORY.
Adams, Dan	23	Oct. 28, '61.	Cav.	D	Re-enlisted Dec. 31, '63; pro. Corp.; do. Serj.; must'd out of service June 21, '65.
Aldrich, Harvey B.	19	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, 64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Oct. 20, '64.
Aldrich, Hosea B.	19	Dec. 27, '61.	8	K	Mustered out of service June 22, '64.
Aldrich, John Hoyt	18	Dec. 21, '61.	8	K	Died March 18, '63.
Babcock, Frelon J.	19	June 1, '61.	3	I	Disch'd sick Oct. 22, '62; re-enlisted Aug. 6, '63; pro. Corp; disch'd for promotion in Col'd troops; pro. to Lieut. of 41st U. S. Col'd Reg't.; pro. to Adj.; pro. Capt. Mustered out of service Sept. '65.
Barker, Freeman C.	26	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Sept. 7, '64.
Barker, Thomas F.	28	Nov. 13, '63.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; prisoner at Andersonville, Macon, &c., for five mos.; mustered out of service at close of war.
Berry, Chauncy R.	20	June 1, '61.	3	I	Corp'l; Discharged Jan. 25, '63.
Blancher, George T.	29	July 21, '62.	10	A	Died in service.
Brown, Jacob	31	July 10, '61.	3	K	Discharged Jan. 8, '62.
Brown, Lorenzo	22	Oct. 26, '61.	Cav.	D	Discharged May 19, '62.
Brown, Joseph B.	33	Dec. 16, '63.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Oct. 16, '64.
Burbank, William R.	24	June 1, '61.	3	I	Deserted July 22, '61.
Carbee, James B.	28	July 1, '63.	11	L	Pro. corp.; must'd out Aug. 25, '65.
Carr, Alonzo P.	18	Jan. 24, '62.	10	A	Died Nov. 5, '62.
Carr, Benjamin P.	45	do.	10	A	Transferred to Vet. Res. Corps Apr. 17, '64; mustered out of service July 5, '65.
Carr, William B.	23	Oct. 2, '61.	6	D	Discharged May 28, '62.
Carter, Charles H.	21	June 1, '61.	3	I	Re-enlisted Dec. 21, '63; pro. 1st serj; Tr. to Vet. R. Corps; disch'd Dec 31, '64.
Carter, George H.	38	do.	3	I	Died June 18, '62.
Conant, Henry C.	24	do.	3	I	Corp'l; Discharged Nov. 19, '62.
Cook, Geo. W.	48	Aug. 6, '62.	Cav.	D	Saddler; transferred to Vet. R. Corps; mustered out of service July 14, '65.
Crane, William B.	45	Aug. 15, '62.	11	A	Musician; disch'd Feb. 27, '65; re-enlisted Mar. 23, '64; mustered out of service July 14, '65.
Congdon, Henry E.	21	Nov. 21, '63.	1st Bat		Transferred to 2d Bat.; mustered out of service July 31, '65.
Currier, Geo. A.	19	Dec. 19, '63.	2d S. S.	H	Killed at Wilderness May 6, '64.
Dow, Frank E.	27	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Disch'd for pro. in Col'd troops Feb. 24, 64.
Drown, George W.	24	Jan. 20, '62.	8	K	Mustered out of service June 23, '64.
Dunton, Henry H.	22	Aug. 22, '62.	4	G	Killed at Wilderness May 5, 64.

NAMES.	Age.	Date of Enlistment.	Regt.	Co.	HISTORY.
Durlam, Consider F.	19	Oct. 28, '61.	Cav.	D	Died a prisoner at Belle Island Sept. 5, '62.
Durlam, Jonathan S.	38	Dec. 23, '61.	8	K
Drown, Noah jr.	21	Aug. 6, '64.	8	K	Mustered out June 29, '65.
Eastman, Alfred W.	31	Jan. 4, '62.	8	K	Mustered out June 22, '64.
Frye, David M.	22	Dec. 8, '63.	2d S. S.	H	Trans. to Co. H, 4th Reg't; mustered out July 13, '65.
Gee, Charles	18	Nov. 12, '61.	3	I	Discharged Oct. 13, '64.
Grant, Frank C.	27	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; confined at Andersonville, Macon and other rebel prisons for five months; pro. Corp.; mustered out of service June 24, '65.
Grant, John W.	31	July 29, '62.	11	A	Musician; pro. artificer Sept. 21, '64; mustered out June 24, '65.
Grant, Ira jr.	18	Nov. 7, '63.	11	A	Tr. to Co. D; mustered out Aug. 25, '64.
Hale, Charles A.	18	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Nov. 17, '64.
Hall, William	15	July 11, '62.	10	A	Musician; mustered out June 22, '65.
Hendrick, O. Scott	18	Sept. 24, '62.	Cav.	D	Mustered out of service Nov. 18, '64.
Hendrick, William W.	26	June 1, '61.	3	I	Re-enlisted Dec. 21, '63; pro. Serj.; mustered out of service in fall of '65.
Hill, Albert	32	Dec. 19, '61.			Discharged July 5, '62.
Howard, William E.	20	Mar. 29, '64.	17	G	Died a prisoner at Danville, Va., Apr. 6, '65.
Ingraham, William C.	29	Dec. 9, '63.	Cav.	F	Missing in action June 29, '64; died a prisoner at Andersonville Oct. 1, '64.
Kennedy, Ronald A.	24	Jan. 1, '61.	3	I	Serj.; Pro. 2d Lt. Co. D Sept. 22, '62; pro. 1st Lt. Oct. 13, '62; pro. Capt. Co. K Jan. 8, '64; pro. Lt. Col. of 5th Vt. Vols. Feb. 20, '65.
Lewis, John D.	18	Aug. 5, '64.	8	K	Died Nov. 16, '64, of wounds received in action Oct. 19, '64.
Lewis, Sumner W.	32	Dec. 4, '61.	8	C	Serj.; reduced; discharged Sept 16, '63.
Longee, Henry H.	21	Mar. 31, '64.	17	G	Pro. Corp. Nov. 13, '64; mustered out July 14, '65.
Morse, Hiram	53	Dec. 22, '63.	10	K	Died in service June 10, '64.
Mooney, Otis C.	18	Dec. 9, '61.	8	K	Re-enlisted Jan 5, '64; deserted May 18, '64.
Moulton, Edward W.	21	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; a prisoner for five months at Andersonville, Milton, &c.; mustered out June 24, '64.
Parker, Moses A.	22	June 1, '61.	3	C	Discharged Sept. 24, '62; re-enlisted in 2d Reg't, Co. H, U. S. S. Aug. 31, '64; transferred to Co. H, 4th Vt. Vols. Feb. 25, '65; mustered out June 19, '65.
Parker, Stephen M.	24	June 1, '61.	3	C	Died Jan. 9, '62, being the first "martyr" from Concord.
Persons, Milo P.	31	Dec. 8, '63.	Cav.	D	Pro. Corp. Dec. 7, '64; pro. Q. M. Serj. May 24, '65; mustered out Aug. 9, 65.
Quimby, Charles	19	June 1, '61.	3	C	Died Nov. 2, '62.
Reed, Lucius S. F.	19	Oct. 3, '61.	Cav.	D	Re-enlisted Dec 31, '63; mustered out of service June 26, '65.
Reed, Nathaniel G.	22	June 1, '61.	3	I	Corporal; reduced to ranks; mustered out of service July 27, '64.
Richards, Lester S.		Aug. 12, '62.	11	A	2d Lt.; pro. 1st Lt. Nov. 2, '63; taken prisoner June 23, '64; confined in different rebel prisons for five months; resigned May 16, '65.
Rickard, John	18	Nov. 30, '63.	11	A	Mustered out June 23, '65.
Royce, Maxson L.	34	Aug. 8, '62.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, 64; died in rebel hospital about Dec. 15, '64.
Shehea, Bryon E.	33	Jan. 1, '61.	3	I	Deserted Jan. 20, '63.
Smith, Dan	19	July 7, '63.	11	M	Pro. Corp.; mustered out Aug. 25, '65.
Southworth, Edwin W.			Cav.	D	Pro. Corp.; re-enlisted Dec. 30, '63; pro. Serj; mustered out Aug. 9, '65.
Spencer, Loren H.	19	Dec. 13, '61.	8	C	Pro. Corp.; re-enlisted Jan. 5, '64; pro. Serj.; mustered out June 28, '65.

Digitized by Google

NAMES.	Age.	Date of Enlistment.	Regt.	Co.	HISTORY.
Stary, Curtis L.	20	Oct. 26, '61.	Cav.	D	Mustered out Nov. 18, '64.
Streeter, Charles	23	July 5, '61.	3	I	Discharged Sept. 12, '61.
Somers, Harvey C.	21	Aug. 2, '64.	17	K	Discharged Jan. 16, '65.
Thomas J. Wellington	18	Jan. 1, '62.	8	K	Discharged July 5. '62.
Tabor John A.	20	June 1, '61.	3	I	Corporal; reduced to ranks; re-enlisted Dec. 21, '63; killed at the battle of the Wilderness May 5, '64.
Whipple, Daniel E.	22	do.	3	I	Deserted July 7, '63; returned to army, March, '65, under proclamation of President.
Whipple, Hiram S.	19	Dec. 9, '61.	8	C	Pro. 2d Lt. La. Vols. Feb. 28, '63.
Whipple, Bradford G.	23	Dec. 8, '63.	Cav.	D	Died March 3, '64.
Willey, Chester S.	25	Nov. 7, '63.	11	A	Taken prisoner June 23, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Nov. 25, '64.
Williams, Jacob	31	Dec. 4, '63.	2d S.S.	H	Trans. to Co. H., 4th Vt. Vols., Feb. 25, '65; must'd out of service June 24, '65.
Williams, Hosea B.	18	June 1, '61.	3	C	Pro. Corp; re-enlisted Dec. 21, '63; killed at Spottsylvania May 12, '64.
Woodbury, Charles H.	20	do.	3	I	Pro. Serj. Feb. 20, '64; re-enlisted Feb. 20, '64; pro. 1st Serj. Apr. 1, '65; pro. 2d Lt. May 10, '65; mustered out July 11, '65.
Woodbury, Isaac P.	44	Oct. 30, '61.	Cav.	D	Discharged Apr. 6, '62.
Woodbury, John W.	18	Oct. 22, '61.	Cav.	D	Pro. Serj.; re-enlisted Dec. 31, '63; died June 24, '64, of wounds received in an engagement at Nottoway Court House, Va., June 23, '64.

VOLUNTEERS FOR ONE YEAR.

Barker, John C.	40	Aug. 31, '64.	17	K	Mustered out June 2, '65.
Brooks William	35	Sept. 3, '64.	3	A	Discharged June 12, '65.
Carbee, Edward	21	Aug. 20, '64.	11	L	Mustered out June 24, '65.
Chase Henry M.	19	do.	11	A	Pro. Corp.; mustered out June 24, '65.
Cutting Oliver B.	26	do.	11	A	Mustered out May 22, '65.
Gale, James R.	26	Aug. 29, '64.	11	A	Discharged Aug. 4, '65.
Griffin, William H.	21	Aug. 24, '64.	11	A	Discharged May 27, '65.
Harroun, Geo. F.			Cav.		Killed Nov. 12, '64.
Hibbard Silas H.	25	Aug. 20, '64.	11	A	Mustered out June 24, '65.
Morse Hiram L.	33	Aug. 3, '64.	2d S.S.	H	Tr. to Co. H, 4th Vt. Vols.; mustered out June 19, '65.
Parker, Moses A.	25	Aug. 31, '64.	2d S.S.	H	Mustered out June 19, '65,
Pike, Alphonso	21	do.	2d Bat		Mustered out June 2, '65.
Quimby, Geo. W.	21	do.	17	K	Mustered out June 2, '65.
Richardson Wm. A.			17	K	Discharged before reaching the army.
Thompson, Stephen	30	do.	3	A	Mustered out June 19, '65.
Williamson Leslie G.	21	do.	2d Bat		Mustered out July 31, 65.
Woodbury Benj. F.	28	do.	3	A	Mustered out June 19, '65.

VOLUNTEERS FOR NINE MONTHS.

Fifteenth Regiment.

Co. D.—Charles W. Cowen, Warner V. Hardy, Thomas H. Noland, deserted; Thomas Leonard, deserted; Myron Roys.

Co. K.—John C. Barker, Silas H. Gaskell, Harvey S. Gates, William E. Howard, Sam'l H. Kellogg, Michael Laughrey, Horace Matthews, Alexander McQueen, Milo P. Persons, Henry R. Pratt, William C. Pratt, Geo. W. Quimby, Francis F. Stary, Nelson G. Wallace, William Williams, Benjamin F. Woodbury.

None of the nine months men were killed in battle or died of disease.

DRAFTED AND PAID COMMUTATION.

Willard Chase, Curtis Gates, Horace Hastings, Valentine C. Hastings, George I. Higgings, Wm. W. McGregor, Daniel W. Parker, Daniel Pike, James B. Wallace, Hiram Williams.

TOWN BOUNTIES, &c.

Of the three years men the town paid bounties to twenty-one, while the remaining seventy received no bounty from the town. The twenty-three one year's men received bounties ranging from $500 to $800 each, as will appear by the accompanying account.

The town paid to volunteers in bounties $20,830, as follows:

NINE MONTHS MEN.

John C. Barker, Alexander McQueen, Charles W. Cowen, Samuel H. Kellogg, Geo. W. Quimby, Wm. C. Pratt, Myron Roys, Nelson G. Wallace, Michael Laughrey, Wm. E. Howard, Harvey S. Gates, Warner V. Hardy, Henry R. Pratt, Horace P. Matthews, Francis F. Story, Thomas Leonard, $50 each.

Benjamin F. Woodbury, Wm. Williams, Silas H. Gaskell, $60 each.

ONE YEAR MEN.

Oliver B. Cutting, Henry M. Chase, Silas H. Hibbard, Edward Carbee, Benjamin F. Woodbury, James R. Gale, Alphonso Bowman, John M. Scales, Peter Trainer, $500 each.

Hiram S. Morse, Stephen Thompson, Geo. F. Harroun, Lester G. Williamson, Alphonso D. Pike, George W. Quimby, Wm. Brooks, $700 each.

Moses A. Parker, Wm. H. Griffin, Holoman Damon, O. Scott Hendrick, $600 each.

John C. Barker, $800.

Elisha May, Edward Potter, frontier cavalrymen, $100 each.

THREE YEARS MEN.

Henry E. Congdon, Wm. C. Ingraham, Jacob Williams, Bradford G. Whipple, David M. Frye, Milo P. Persons, Joseph B. Brown, Geo. H. Currier, Hiram Morse, Horace W. Cutting, Chester S. Willey, Thomas F. Barker, Ira Grant, jr., Thomas Rickard, Wm. B. Crane, Henry H. Longee, Wm. E. Howard, $300 each.

Harvey C. Somers, Noah Drown, jr., John D. Lewis, $500 each.

A southern recruit, $400.

Of the volunteers from Concord, 91 were three years men, 23 one year men, and 20 nine months men. No one who was drafted entered the service, but ten paid commutation. Eleven of the three years men were re-enlisted veterans, and three others who were discharged for disability, subsequently recovered and re-enlisted. Six of the Concord volunteers were killed in action, and eighteen died while in the service—nine of whom while in rebel prisons.

EAST HAVEN.

BY KITRIDGE AND D. C. HUDSON.

East Haven, lying in the west part of Essex County, is rather an uneven township, but is well adapted for arable purposes. The Passumpsic river runs through the west part, and there is a high ridge of land through the center of the town, extending from the north to the south line, and the Moose river, which heads on the east side of said ridge, runs south through the east part of the town. Both of the above named rivers are famous for trout, and the vicinity of the Moose river, in years gone by, was famous for hunting the moose and deer and other wild game common in northern Vermont.

The town was chartered by Gov. Chittenden, Oct. 22, 1790. Of the grantees none ever lived in town. A request having been made to Joseph Heath, of Groton, one of the justices of the peace within and for the County of Caledonia, by the owners of more than one-sixteenth part of the lots of land in the township of East Haven, a proprietors' meeting was called by him Aug. 31, 1810, to be holden in Newark, at the dwelling-house of James Ball, Nov. 15, 1810. At the meeting held on that day and the following days, Norris Walter was appointed moderator, and James Whitelaw, proprietors' clerk. Appointed Andrew Lockie a committee to lay out the town into lots of 106 acres each, to be divided into 1st, 2d, and 3d division lots, an equal number to each.

Aug. 6, 1811, the proprietors of East Haven met agreeably to notice and voted to accept of the returns and survey of their committee, and appointed James Ball to draw out the number of lots for each proprietor as the names were called by the clerk, and chose Humes French, collector. At this time there appears to have been but few settlers in town. The first settler was John Walter, Jr. He moved into town May 1, 1804; he was born in Winchester, Conn.; came to Vermont 1799, and built the first house in the township, of logs. He married Uneca Blakesley, and they had 14 children, 10 of whom lived to be men and women, and is now living on the same farm where he first commenced. John Walter's wife died March 5, 1848.

The next settler was Norris Walter, brother of John. He moved into town March, 1805. His children's names were as follows: Harriet, Elam, Merrit, Clarissa S.,—she was the first child born in town—Harlow B., Samuel, Emiline and Ann, the most part of whom settled in town. The next settlers were Blake, Casey and Coalfax, but they did not stop long.

Digitized by Google

John Walter planted the first orchard. The first school-house built in 1832; the first school taught by Betsy Blake. The first marriage was that of Peter Atwood and Harriet Walter, daughter of Norris Walter; first death, Jemima Coalfax; the oldest person deceased in town, John Walter father to John Jr. and Norris Walter; he was 101 years old when he died, Sept. 23, 1848; he had lived in town 7 years previous to his death. John Walter, Jr. is the oldest man now living in town—80 years old.

School District No. 2 was organized in 1845, the school-house built in 1848. There are 30 scholars in District No. 1; in District No. 2, 26, and the average time of school in each district is 6 months in the year. There are two religious societies in town; the Methodist society has 20 members, and the Free-will Baptist, 18; one attorney, H. B. Root; one doctor, botanical, John Walter, Jr.; and one Methodist minister. The first tavern was built in 1848 by K. Hudson. The town was organized July 28, 1845, and the following persons were chosen town officers, viz.: H. W. Belden, town clerk; Russel Horsford, Jeremiah Lund, Aner Clagsdon, selectmen; H. M. Lund, constable.

John Walter was the first representative, and represented said town in the years of 1845 '46; Abraham Powers in 1847, '48; Horace L. Walter in 1849; Horace B. Root in 1850, '51; Jeremiah Lund in 1852, '53; Elam Walter in 1854, '55; Horace L. Walter in 1856 to 1860; D. C. Hudson in 1861.

A post-office was established in 1850, Elijah Avery, first P. M. He held the office 2 years, and D. C. Hudson was appointed in 1852, he held the office 7 years and resigned, and K. Hudson was appointed in 1859, and is the present P. M. The burial-groupd was laid out in 1846. The first person buried in it was Uneca, wife of John Walter, Jr. H. B. Root, assistant judge of county court, 1860; H. L. Walter, county commissioner for 1862.

The first saw-mill was built by Joseph Woods. The first settlers in town had to endure many hardships. They had to go to Lyndon and St. Johnsbury to buy grain, and getting it ground had to fetch it home on their backs. Sometime about 1812 Norris Walter was burned out while himself and wife were gone to Connecticut on a visit. Norris Walter accumulated a large property and left it for his children. The most of them settled in town and are well off.

LEADING TOWN OFFICERS FROM 1845.

1846: M. H. Walter, town clerk; Elam Walter, Manning Walter, M. H. Walter, selectmen; H. L. Walter, constable and collector.

1847: Russell Horsford, town clerk; John Walter, Jr., M. H. Walter, Kitridge Hudson, selectmen; H. L. Walter, constable.

1848: H. W. Belden, town clerk; M. H. Walter, C. C. Thurber, Elijah Avery, selectmen; H. L. Walter, constable.

1849: H. W. Belden, town clerk; M. H. Walter, K. Hudson, Jeremiah Lund, selectmen; H. M. Lund, constable.

1850: Horace B. Root, town clerk; Elam Walter, Horace B. Coe, Elijah Avery, selectmen; H. L. Walter constable.

1851: H. L. Walter, town clerk; Elam Walter, Russel Horsford, Nelson Hartwell, selectmen; Russel Horsford, constable.

1852; H. Walter, town clerk; Elam Walter Russel Horsford, Nelson Hartwell, selectmen; Russel Horsford, constable.

1853: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; H. B. Root, Ozra L. Ross, M. H. Walter, selectmen; H. B. Root, constable.

1854: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; O. L. Bass, K. Hudson, James Campear, selectmen; constable, Russel Horsford.

1855: H. L. Walter, town clerk; A. S. Howard, H. L. Walter, H. B. Walter, selectmen; Russel Horsford, constable.

1856: H. L. Walter, town clerk; Manning Walter, M. H. Walter, Russel Horsford, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1857: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; H. L. Walter, A. S. Howard, Elam Walter, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1858: H. L. Walter, town clerk; H. L. Walter, M. H. Walter, A. S. Howard, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1859: H. L. Walter, town clerk; H. L. Walter, M. H. Walter, Wm. Smith, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1860: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; A. S. Howard, Wm. Smith, H. L. Walter; selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1861: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; A. S. Howard, H. L. Walter, O. T. Walter, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

1862: D. C. Hudson, town clerk; H. L. Walter, Wm. M. Smith, O. T. Walter, selectmen; D. C. Hudson, constable.

Present population 200 (July 3, 1862).

VOLUNTEERS FOR THE RECENT WAR.

3rd Regt.: John M. Hudson, Lyman Hudson, Henry McMiller, Elam White, Hollis Coe, Eli Horsford. 8th Regt.: Hanson White. 9th Regt.: Robert Murry, Wm. Murry.

GRANBY.

BY LOOMIS WELLS, ESQ.

This town was named, tradition says, in honor of Lord or Earl Granby, and was chartered Oct. 10th, 1761, by King George III. to Elihu Hall and 63 others.* Divided into 70 equal shares, containing by admeasurement 23040 acres, and to be 6 miles square and no more, out of which an allowance was to be made for highways, and unimprovable lands by rocks, ponds, mountains, and rivers, 1040 acres free.

The charter is in the usual form of the Benning Wentworth New Hampshire charters, containing conditions and reservations of no importance to the present inhabitants of the town, since the successful rebellion of the colonists. The "Governor's farm of 600 acres is in the S. E. corner of the town, and the public rights of "Glebe" and "Incorporated Society" are pretty much all that is left to remind the inhabitants—unless one looks at the copy of the charter in the Town Clerk's office—that their homesteads were once English property, and were granted to past generations by the special grace and mere motion of a British king.

Granby is bounded N. E. by Ferdinand and Maidstone, S. E. by Guildhall, S. W. by Victory, and N. W. by East Haven, in lat. 44° 35′ N. and long. 5° 5′ W., 47 miles N. E. of Montpelier.

The surface of the town is broken and hilly, not to say mountainous. The soil is mostly of the granite order, and is better adapted to grazing, and the growing of the coarser grains and vegetables, than for wheat and corn, which require the selection of the best fields, and a favorable season; and even then are more or less uncertain crops.

Rocks are abundant, affording an available material for fences; and there are some specimens of interest to the geologist.

Good clay is very scarce, and of minerals nothing of practical importance is known.

Cow Mountain in the S. E., and Mud Pond in the southerly part of the town, both rather small, are all the ponds known with any certainty to be within the limits of the town. Unknown Pond, also small, near the N. W. corner of the town, is believed by some to be in Granby, and by others in Ferdinand.

The streams too are small. Moose river or Gaswell's stream, as surveyor Gen. Whitelaw calls it, runs across the S. W. corner of the town, from East Haven to Victory, and two or three of its branches rise in the southerly slope of Granby. One brook runs easterly through Guildhall to Connecticut river, and with Paul's stream and its branches drain the northerly slope of the town, and these streams afford a pretty good supply of water power.

Of timber the white pine was quite plenty in the north part of the town, but a considerable portion of the best quality has been cut. Spruce and balsam however are abundant, as but a small part of the town has as yet been cleared, and hemlock, tamarack and cedar are found in a few localities. A few elms also are found growing on and near the streams, while maple, birch and beech are the principal varieties of hard wood.

There are no existing indications that the Indians ever inhabited any part of Granby, and who was the first white man that penetrated this wilderness region probably none of the present or future generations will ever know.

Henry Stevens the antiquarian writes, "I have heard Daniel and Levi Hall, early settlers of Barnet, tell of going up Passumpsic and Moose rivers and through the woods to Nulhegan river, hunting. This was before the settlement of St. Johnsbury, and before and after the Revolutionary war." Perhaps the fact that Elihu Hall, Elihu Hall, Jr., John Hall 5th, Benjamin Hall 2d and Abel Hall were original grantees, makes out a probability that these old hunters first ex-

*GRANTEES OF GRANBY.—Elihu Hall, Joshua Ray, Samuel Mansfield, Thomas Rice, Thomas Ray, Joshua Ray, jr., Edward Carter, Elisha Whittlesey, Timothy Barker, Sam'l Baker, John Willowsby, Jonathan Barker, David Hubert, John Hall, 5th, Medad Dudley, Abraham Kimball, Samuel Sharp Beadeel, Elihu Hall, jr., Daniel Hubbart, John Stevens, Nathaniel Parker, Thomas Howell, Francis Wooster, jr., Jonathan Johnson, Joshua Cullen, Jonathan Butterfield, Joseph Atkins, Jesse Parker, Samuel Ives, Jonathan Ives, Samuel Whittlesey, Chauncy Whittlesey, Nath'l Chauncy, Esq., James Drake, Timothy Hardy, John Thompson, Charles Whittlesey, Thebis Doolittle, Eben Ball, John Phillip, Nath'l Merrill, Hezekiah Handet, Ebenezer Hartshorn, James Blanchard, Daniel Warner, Esq., Joseph New, Isaac Cook, Oliver Dudley, Jos. Bartholomy, Benj. Hall, 2d, Abel Hall, Stephen Ives, Stephen Andrus, Philemon Johnson, Andrew Parker, Abraham Parker, Jacob Parker, Gamaliel Parker, Isaac Parker, Didemus Parker, Samuel Parker, James Marks, Jonathan Marks, Joseph Doolittle.

Digitized by Google

pored this locality, and procured a charter of Granby for the benefit of their family connections. Yet all that pertains to the first settling of the town must in the main be left to conjecture, as the first settlers and their descendants are all dead or moved beyond the knowledge of the writer: and there is not a tradition, much less a memorandum or scrap of record, of anything that transpired in town before 1777, and it appears to have been more than 10 years after this date before the first settler came into town; for the first census taken in 1791, shows Granby blank. So says Henry Stevens.

SURVEY AND ALLOTMENT.

Gen. James Whitelaw, of Barnet, surveyed the town line in 1765, commencing at Guildhall Corner, thence N. W. between Victory and Granby six miles, noting the mile marks and place of the streams with his usual accuracy. Then N. E. between East Haven and Granby 6 miles to a large rock.

The line was then run between Guildhall and Granby, then between Maidstone, Ferdinand and Granby.

Edward Bucknam, and Thomas Darling, under Gen. W.'s direction, surveyed the range lines and made the corners in Sept. 1787, according to a plan in Henry Stevens' possession, but their field book is said to be lost.

A few particulars from the proprietors' book of records for Granby, may be of interest.

By the way, the old parchment-covered book was bought by Lieut. Timothy Andrews of New Haven, Ct., "as the first book to record all the proceedings of the Propriety," and the Propriety voted to assess themselves 28 shillings to pay for above book, and for carrying the same to upper Coos.

On the fly leaf of this book is the following entry:

We, the subscribers, being appointed a committee, in the year A. D. 1777, to survey and lot out some land at the Coos, especially the township of Granby, which we undertook to do but could not accomplish, for well known reasons; therefore, gentlemen, we think it not improper to give you an account of our expenses:

Our expenses on the road for each,	£4	12	6
To horse hire, 230 miles, at 2½d per mile for each,	2	18	2
To 20 days, at 6s per diem for each one,	6	0	0
Amos Morris, jr.	13	10	8
Eros Hemenway,	13	10	4
	£27	1	4
Benj. Andrews,	13	10	8
	£40	12	0

East Haven, June 29, 1777.

On the next leaf is a vote of the proprietors of Granby, No. 1:

Voted, That a tax is laid on us by a vote of the proprietors, at the rate of fifteen shillings, hard money, to defray the former charges that have arisen or may arise on account of locating and laying out said town.

September, 27th day, 1779.

Attest: Amos Morris,
Propriators' Clerk.

A line and a half of the sentence have a heavy black line drawn across them. Ten pages are then left blank, then comes a regular notification of a meeting of the proprietors of Granby, which was called by Eben Curtis, Esq., Aug. 17, 1783, to meet at the house of James Rosebrooks, in Guildhall, on Monday, the first of September, one o'clock P. M., to see if the proprietors will tax themselves to defray the expense of locating and lotting out the town, and raise a committee for that purpose.

The meeting was duly organized, and adjourned to Ebenezer Rice's dwelling-house in Lunenburgh, Sept. 5th, when a committee, consisting of Timothy Andrews and six others, was appointed to locate and lot the town as soon as circumstances will permit, and into such sized lots as they think proper.

They also voted an equal tax on each right to pay Amos Morris, E. Heminway and Benj. Andrews, £48 and 12s for their services as a committee, appointed at a former meeting, to locate and lot the town.

At the same meeting voted to assess $10 on each right to locate and lot the town and other necessary expenses.

A meeting of the proprietors of Granby, in the County of Orange, was notified and warned by Elisha Burton, Esq., of Norwich, May 9, 1787, to meet at the house of the late Ebenezer Rice, in Lunenburgh, on the second Tuesday of September next, at 1 o'clock P. M. to raise a committee necessary to procure and promote the settlement, to locate and bound out said town and agree upon some suitable encouragement to be given for building a mill or mills, either by surveying land for the purpose or by grants of money, and agree upon an allotment and division of said land to and among the proprietors, either in whole or in part, as may be most convenient. At this meeting Jonah Clark, Esq., Capt. Thomas Darling, Capt. Timothy Andrus and Edward Bucknam were chosen a committee to lot out the said town of Granby into such division lots as they shall judge most convenient for the proprietors of said town, as soon as conveniently may be done, agreeably to Mr. Whitelaw's survey, and where the said Whitelaw has run the outlines and made the corners thereof. Also voted a tax of 3 pounds 6 shillings and 7 pence on each right, to pay expenses.

The accounts for surveying Granby were presented and allowed at North Haven, Ct., Dec. 5, 1787, and the allotment of the township, as made by the committee in three divisions, was approved at a meeting held at Guildhall, Dec. 9, 1789.

At a proprietors' meeting held at Guildhall June 10, 1790, Eben W. Judd, Joseph Herrick and Benoni Butler were appointed a committee to make a draft of lots agreeably to the laws of Vermont. A report was made at the same meeting, which was accepted, approved and recorded. See page 26 Proprietors' Records.

It was alledged at a meeting of the proprietors of Granby, in the County of Caledonia, held at the dwelling-house of Joseph Herrick, in said Granby, that the draft of the town and the survey of Messrs. Darling and Bucknam was incorrect and unequal. Joseph Herrick and Eben W. Judd were appointed a committee to examine and measure several of the lots and lines in said town as heretofore run by Messrs. Darling and Bucknam, and if, in the opinion of said committee, they conceive it expedient to make a new allotment, they proceed at the expense of the proprietors to complete three divisions of lots in said town, of one hundred acres to each right—to follow the original design, and not disturb the settlers' lots without their consent.

A proprietors' meeting was warned to meet at Joseph Herricks, Granby, Jan. 20, 1801:

"To accept of and ratify the several divisions or declare them void; to agree on the mode of making divisions; the number of acres to each right, and appoint a committee to make such division."

A vote was taken at the meeting and recorded, after a preamble, that

"We therefore declare the several divisions and drafts of lots to be void, and the lands in said town to be in common, except lots voted to the several settlers, and that we will proceed to make a legal division of the lands in said town."

The meeting was adjourned to May 25, 1801, when the vote taken Jan. 20, 1801, was reconsidered, and the proprietors then voted

"To ratify and confirm the divisions and drafts of lots in said town, and that the proprietors will rectify any mistake that has taken place in the records at a future meeting;"

which appears to have been done by interlining the record of the draft, and here the contest about the survey seems to have ended, except a petition to the general assembly for a re-survey about 1845, or 1846. Some of the corners found near the openings have the numbers marked upon the bark of the trees by the side of the spottings, and the spottings are not as old as those back in the woods, and the original corners have the numbers made on the spottings with a marking iron. But as the range lines only were run by Darling and Bucknam, and the corners were made by measuring on the range lines through the forests and over high and steep hills, they are of course almost necessarily more or less incorrect; and as the lines appear to have been run from alternate sides of the town, either singly or in pairs, hence, when a corner rots away, controversy naturally ensues, as there is no apparent rule established or agreed upon to fix the locality of the missing corner.

FIRST SETTLEMENT OF THE TOWN.

The proprietors of Granby appointed Lieut. Timothy Andrews their agent, Sept 1, 1783,

"To transact all and every matter whatsoever for and in behalf of said proprietors, as he shall think beneficial to bring forward the settlement of said township," and a similar vote was taken Oct. 1, 1787. A committee was appointed Dec. 8, 1789, consisting of Nathaniel Herrick, William Amy, Joseph Herrick and Sherman Hemberly, to lay out and complete a road through the town, and Jonah Clark was appointed agent to give leases of tracts of land, not exceeding 150 acres, to each of 12 first settlers who will engage to settle and improve under the proprietors.

"Guildhall, June 14, 1790. The proprietors voted that Joseph Herrick and Benjamin Cheney, being the first settlers in Granby, that each of them have, as inducement for settling, two lots (ever); that is to say, the said Herrick lots No. 7 and 8 in the 5 range, and the said Cheney the lots No. 7 and 8 in the range 4, being the lots on which they have begun improvements, which is to include all grants heretofore made, provided that each of them pursue and prosecute their improvements as fast as could reasonably be expected."

At a meeting held at Guildhall, June 21, 1791, the committee appointed to lay out and clear a road through the town of Granby were directed to complete the same as soon as possible.

At the same meeting an offer was made to any person or persons that would build a saw-mill and grist-mill, and keep them in repair for 10 years, should have the land on which they were built and 300 acres of public land.

Provision was also made for supplying teams in making bridges, and "that the price of each yoke of good oxen so employed shall be the same price per day as a man's labor," which was 5s per day.

"Nov. 4, 1791, then surveyed the road through Granby, beginning on the S. E. line of said town, 3 miles and 10 rods from the N. E. corner, and running," &c.

Here follows the courses and distances through the town, the last 2¼ miles of the road next to East Haven run due N. W.

"Granby, Nov. 11, 1791, then completed the road through the town of Granby, and surveyed the same, according to the vote of proprietors.

Attest by us, WILLIAM AMY,
JOSEPH HERRICK,
CHARLES CUTLER."

"Voted, 2d, to accept of road through Granby as it is now surveyed, cleared and bridged."

The bill brought in for building this road amounted to £174 13s 6d, and has this certificate appended:

"The within is a true account of the labor done on Granby road.

Attest: WILLIAM AMY, JOSEPH HERRICK, CHARLES CUTLER, } Committee."

This road was re-surveyed as a county road, leading from Memphremagog Lake in Derby, Orleans county, to Connecticut river in Guildhall, Essex county, Sept. 1810.

Attest, NEHEMIAH WRIGHT, Surveyor.

CHALLES CUTLER,
ABNER COE,
JOSEPH HERRICK, } Committee.

Distance seven miles one-quarter and 34 rods.

The first proprietors' meeting as per record held in Granby, was held at the house of Joseph Herrick, October 27th, 1795. At this meeting they voted:

"That whereas the proprietors at their meeting holden heretofore, have given as encouragement to the 12 settlers who shall first settle in said town, a tract of public land, not exceeding 150 acres to each, and whereas the following persons have made improvement according to said vote, and are considered as settlers, and to hold and enjoy, to themselves and heirs and assigns forever in fee, the lands as hereafter voted to them respectively, viz: "To Mr. Nathaniel Herrick lot No. 6, range 4th, containing one hundred acres, and the half of lot No. 5 in the same range adjoining to the other, to him, his heirs and assigns forever."

The names of the others and their allotments were as follows: Joseph Herrick (200 acres) Benjamin Cheney, Samuel Ward, Nathaniel Herrick junior, Robert Pike, John Crawford, Joseph Roberts, Jeremiah Harris, Charles Curtis, John Cook, and Enos Cook, and voted to extend the time for building mills two years from the meeting.

The last entry upon the proprietors' records bears date April 19, 1802, when the meeting was adjourned one month, but here the curtain falls and the remainder of the page is blank paper.

After a careful examination of all within my reach that pertains to the first settlement, I have come to the conclusion that Joseph Herrick and Benjamin Cheney moved into the town in 1790 or 1791, probably the former.

In the first book of town records, under the head of "Births and Deaths and Marriages" on page 11, is the following:

"Herd Cheney, son to Benjamin and Eunice Cheney born September 16, 1791, the first child that was born in town."

On page 8 of the same book the record says:

"Samuel Hart married to Susanna Herrick March 31st, 1796—also on page 9, Anna Pike died July 13th, 1795, and these are understood to be the first marriage, birth, and death that occurred in town.

For about 20 years, up to 1810, the settlement of the town appears to have gone on favorably if not prosperously, and there were 24 or 26 families in town. About 1810, for some cause, to the writer unknown, several families removed to Canada, some to northern New York and some to adjoining towns; and the famous "cold seasons," 1813 to 1818, produced a general stampede, so that in 1816 or 1817 there were but three families left in town, viz:—Nathaniel Bell, Zacheus Cook and James Waid, and they were hardly near enough to each other to be neighbors. After a year or two some who had removed to adjoining towns, returned, and others moved in, so that in 1825 or '30, about the standard of 1810 for number of families was attained, and has kept along to the present time (1863) very uniform."

ORGANIZATION OF GRANBY.

William Amy, Esq. of Guildhall, warned the meeting for the organization of the town Feb. 27th, 1798, and the meeting was held on the 2d Tuesday of March following, at the dwelling-house of Joseph Herrick. Nathaniel Herrick was chosen moderator,—Samuel Hart town clerk,—Nathaniel Herrick junior, Robert Pike and Benjamin Cheney, selectmen —Samuel Hart treasurer,—Zadock Herrick constable,—listers same as selectmen. James Morehead, surveyor of highways.

Those who were chosen to town office and four others, Elijah Bugbee, John L. Crawford, James Morehead junior, and Eben Johnson, took the freemen's oath, and the town officers down to highway surveyor, took the oath of office.

Joseph Herrick's dwelling-house was voted the place for putting up advertisements, and September following Clarke Curtis was chosen the first representative.

For some reason that does not appear on the record, no town officers were chosen in 1799, nor any representative.

March and Freemen's meetings were held regularly until Sept. 1814 when but 11 names appear on the check-list, and state officers only were voted for. In March, 1815, the town failed to choose town officers, and the organization was abandoned, and the records delivered to the county clerk at Lunenburgh. The town was re-organized Jan. 10th, 1822, and at the March meeting following, was for the first time divided into school and highway districts, which had the same bounds and designation of North and South.

Gen. Seth Cushman of Guildhall built the first saw and grist-mill about 1810. During the "cold seasons" the grist-mill entirely run down. The granite mill-stones lay near the old mill site, and the people go "out of town" to mill, and have for nearly 50 years. The saw-mill held out until 1826 or 1827. About this time Martin Joslyn built another saw-mill and sawed a few thousand feet of boards, but the dam proved to be on a clayey foundation, and Joslyn failed in health and financially, so the mill went to ruin without ever being inclosed or covered. About 1845 Gershom Carpenter built a saw-mill near the main road on the same stream, which has some years done good business, but is now badly out of repair.

About the year 1810 or 1811 a Mr. Green, blacksmith, from Connecticut, moved in and built him a blacksmith shop, and commenced to carry on his business, but in the course of a year or two Green had some difficulty with the boys in town, and the boys took retributive justice into their own hands, and one day when Green was away to dinner rolled his anvil out of doors, and carried his tools into the woods and hid them where he never found them, but a part of them were found more than 30 years afterwards in a hollow log in the vicinity of the old shop in a pretty good state of preservation. Green soon after moved back to Connecticut; and all who ever attempted to start the blacksmith business in town since, have for some reason entirely failed to accomplish their object.

The inhabitants have up to the present time been dependent on adjoining towns generally for shoemaking and most mechanic work done in shops.

But as an offset in part for these disadvantages—such as going so far to mill, getting mechanic work done and getting goods from stores for family use (for there has never been anything like a store of goods kept in town), the town has never been cursed by a tippling shop and its surroundings, so that the people are generally temperate and frugal in their habits, and there are no internal police expenses for the detection and punishment of crime, and there has not been a pauper on the town since the re-organization in 1822, and the whole expense for transient poor and incidental charges during the period just named has been less than $25.

The hard wood was cut from large tracts of land and burned to obtain ashes, which the early settlers leached and boiled into salts, and carried to Guildhall, Vt., or Lancaster, N. H., a distance of 10 to 20 miles. Yet "where there is a will, there is a way." Those that had a horse would make what they called a "car," by pinning cross-pieces to two light poles of suitable length, putting the horse in as into the thills of a wagon, the hind part dragging on the ground, and the load fastened on just behind the horse. Those that had oxen got up a similar arrangement with a wide spread crotched stick like a cart tongue, this they called a "go cart." And those who had no team either drew their load by hand or carried it on their backs; and, in fact, the man that could not carry a hundred pounds on his back ten or twelve miles was hardly fit to begin a new settlement. And, let it be borne in mind, money was so scarce the most the people could get went for taxes. Besides, the rum bottle stood on every merchant's counter, and even those of small means were urged to "take a drink," and perhaps take a jug full home. Then of course they would feel rich, buy what they could have done without, and if they could not pay up, the sheriff would "walk in" with "greeting" and relieve the poor man and his family of what little property they might have, and then "for want thereof take the body" to jail until he or she should pay "the uttermost farthing," with costs. Hence by far too often poverty was the rule and plenty the exception.

Digitized by Google

During the cold seasons the snow fell fearfully deep, and the few families that stayed in town found it next to impossible to keep a road open in the winter. Mr. Bell has told me that he had worked hard to break a road two miles from his house towards Guildhall for two entire days. In the winter of 1816, I think it was, when the roads were blocked up with snow, his bread stuff failed, and he started with a bushel of wheat on a horse to go to Guildhall to mill, leaving a family of small children alone with their mother, and one or two of them so sick that he hardly expected to find them alive when he should get home; and, after wallowing about two miles through the snow drifts, had to turn his horse back, put on his snow-shoes and take his grain on his back and go on his gloomy way to mill. The mill owner, Gen. Cushman, sent his hired man with him the next day, and helped him back with his grist home to his family, who were better. In December previous Mr. Bell's mother, a woman in the prime of life, started from Guildhall for Granby one very cold day on horseback. The next morning her horse was found in the barnyard and the woman in the road, within a hundred rods of home. Apparently chilled too much to sit upon a horse she fell or got off, and after crawling a rod or two in the road on her hands and knees, sunk down in despair on her bed of snow and slept the "sleep that knows no waking."

The wife of Mr. Waid, who lived at the outside clearing towards East Haven, who had long been in feeble health, died unattended by any kind neighbor, in one of the winters when there were but three families in town (1816, probably), and Mrs. Cook went on snow-shoes two or three miles and helped lay her out, she being the only woman that could get to the funeral.

In the month of March, 1835, Mr. Wm. Griffin, a resident of Granby, aged 72, who had been at work in Guildhall, started for home during a very severe snow storm, perished in the snow, and was found by those who were breaking out the road one or two days afterwards nearly opposite to where the dwelling-house of Chas. Gleason now stands. But I will not enlarge in this direction, for hardship and suffering were the lot of all who commenced new settlements, which we that enjoy the fruits of their toils and privations can hardly realize or fully appreciate.

I shall perhaps be pardoned if I make some allusions to the reckless manner that the agents of the proprietors did the business entrusted to them. Proprietors' meetings were called very frequently, adjournment piled upon adjournment, committees and agents appointed, schemes started, pursued awhile, then reconsidered and abandoned, roads cut in various directions by committees who would let jobs to each other, so that all could make a rich thing out of it; tax was voted on tax, and land sale followed land sale, until the original proprietors were worn out or became bankrupt;* speculators bought up the lands and in turn failed and made assignments to trustees for the benefit of creditors; the trustees managed dishonestly; rival claimants under different land sales were in convention; Daniel Boardman, of New York city, laid claim to a large quantity of land in Granby, and to perfect his title a suit in chancery was commenced,

* The taxes on each right, up to 1802, had run up to £16, and after a national currency of dollars and cents was adopted by Congress, nearly $30 is to be added to the first named sum; and, for the next 10 or 15 years after 1802, somebody besides the proprietors and landowners of Granby must have been growing rich.

and in 1814 a decision was made in his favor, which quieted the controversy about title, and to a great extent accounts for the land in Granby being so generally owned by a very few individuals, and mostly by one who claims under the Boardman title.

The first mail route through Granby was established in 1832. Martin Joslyn was the first P. M. In three or four years the route was discontinued by reason of the representations of rivals for the contract to carry the mail.

In 1849 a mail route was established from East Burke, Vt., to Northumberland, N. H., through and back once a week. John Wooster was the first postmaster on this route, he held the office until October, 1854, when he resigned in favor of Loomis Wells, the present incumbent.

MILITARY.

In 1811 a military organization was formed. Capt. Timothy Fairchild held the post of commander until he left town, about the time the "cold seasons" commenced, when the company run down for want of material.

When the military system of Vermont was remodeled and attempted to be revived in 1842 and '43, a company was formed in Granby and Victory, and Jonathan Matthews was 1st Lieutenant.

In the war of 1812 James Elliot went as aid for Gen. Seth Cushman, and others took part in guarding the road from Connecticut river through Granby to Canada against smugglers.

During the war of 1861 Benj. McDaniels, the first in town to respond to the call for soldiers to put down rebellion, enlisted Sept. 9, 1861, in Co. G, 4th Vt.; died in Verginia, near camp Griffin, Feb. 7, 1862, of diphtheria.

Alonzo L. Ford enlisted Dec. 14, 1861, Co. K, 8th Vt.; taken prisoner in Louisiana, Sept. 4, held about 3 months; died, Sept. 6, 1863, at New Orleans, of chronic diarrhea.

George O. Ford enlisted December, 1861, Co. K, 8th Vt.; was taken prisoner Sept. 4, 1862, in Louisiana, held about 3 months; served under Gens. Butler and Banks in the department of the Gulf with distinction, was several times promoted, and Dec. 1863 was 1st Lieut. and acting Captain.

Ethan P. Shores enlisted Dec. 9, 1861, in Co. K, 8th Vt.; was wounded Sept 4, 1862, at Bootee Station, La., when the detachment were returning from the sacking of the Taylor estate, by a buckshot in the head, another in the foot, and a ball through the left leg near the knee; was taken prisoner, escaped, during the melee, to the woods; eluded the vigilance of his pursuers, procured some food once, sucked water from old logs, traveled more than 30 miles, and the third day got into camp more dead than alive, so haggard that his companions did not recognize him; had his wounds dressed for the first time. Refused a discharge after his recovery; served with credit in the assaults and seige of Port Hudson, and was appointed corporal.

Paschal P. Shores enlisted with his brother Ethan; was taken prisoner at the same time the Fords were. A ball wounded him severely in the right shoulder at the first assault on Port Hudson, June 14, 1863; refused a discharge, and returned to his post when able, and when fit for duty was always ready.

George W. Shores enlisted Jan. 1, 1862, in the 8th Vt., Co. K; was discharged July 4, 1862, by reason of hernia, produced while on service at Ship Island.

Solon D. Buzzell enlisted Dec. 1861, in Co. K, 8th Vt.; died at Ship Island, April 28, 1862, of typhoid dysentery.

Richard T. Boyce enlisted Jan. 3, 1862, Co. K, 8th Vt.: taken sick at Brattleboro, Vt., while in camp; furloughed and discharged after a few months. Re-enlisted as a 9 months man, Sept. 16, 1862, in Co. G, 15th Vt.; mustered out Aug. 6, 1863. Detailed for hospital duty most of the time.

John W. Boyce enlisted Jan. 3, 1862, with his father, R. T., Co. K, &c.; died in the hospital at Brattleboro, Vt., Feb. 28, 1862, of diphtheria.

James M. Boyce enlisted Aug. 1862, in Co. B, 10th Vt.; died Oct. 6, 1863, of typhoid fever in Virginia.

Otis E. Griffin enlisted Jan. 5, 1862, Co. K, 8th Vt.; died at Fort Hubbard, La., Aug. 14, 1863, of dysentery; was always a faithful soldier.

John W. Buzzell enlisted Sept. 20, 1862, as a 9 months man, in Co. G., 15th Vt.; mustered out Aug. 6, 1863. Not brought into action at any time, but took to soldiering naturally.

EDUCATION.

At the second town meeting provision was made for schools. The first schools were kept in private houses. Miss Cheney, daughter of Benj. Cheney, taught the first in the east part of the town, and a Miss Howe in the west part. The first log school-house was built in the east part of the town, about 50 rods westerly of the present house. The first frame school-house was built by Martyn Joslyn in 1825, near Gershom Carpenter's. There are at present two whole districts in town, and one fractional. School-houses ought to be better.

Digitized by Google

The writer believes, from a careful examination of all the facts within reach, that there never has been a child raised to maturity in Granby that could not at least read and write. Nearly all have had a fair common school education, while many have aimed to excel, and being uniformly encouraged and assisted to the extent of the means of their friends have made attainments that will lose nothing by a comparison with scholars in the more favored portions of the state. We are, it is true, and always have been destitute of an academy; but those in neighboring towns have been as largely patronized as by any other section of country so thinly peopled.

The two accompanying "original specimens" from two young ladies born and raised in Granby, written impromptu, will speak for themselves.

RELIGION.

Previous to 1806 nothing is known of the religious history of the town.

Capt. Timothy Fairchild, who moved into Granby in 1806 and left in 1813 (moved to Guildhall), wrote me just before his death:

"There was no organized religious society in the town during the time that I resided there, but religious meetings were held on the Sabbath and very well attended. During most or all of that time there was no recognized leader; but they used to sing, and some one would read a sermon, and another would offer prayers. They had preaching occasionally by ministers from the neighboring towns and also by missionaries.

There was a revival of religion in the town in 1810–11. What the number was that finally made a profession of religion I do not know, as there was no church organization in the town. Some joined the church in Guildhall (Congregational), and some embraced Baptist sentiments. I recollect one couple, a man and wife (Bugbee), over 70 years of age who were baptized by immersion."

During the cold seasons, which lasted some or six years, commencing about 1813, increasing to 1816, and then becoming less and less severe, meetings for religious worship were held at uncertain intervals; but, as the population increased they became more frequent and regular, the people being assisted and encouraged by ministers from adjoining towns; and after Dea. Joel Basset moved into town, which was about 1820, meetings were held every Sabbath, the deacon taking the lead if there was not a minister present; and as he was a man of considerable energy of character and enjoyed uniform good health, no matter how inclement the weather, the deacon was sure to be "at his post."

The Congregational church was organized June 8, 1825, by Rev. Samuel R. Hall, then pastor of the church in Concord, Vt. There were but 8 members, 3 males and 5 females. Joel Basset was chosen moderator, and officiated as deacon, having been previously chosen to that office in Guildhall, Vt. He left town in 1835, and in 1836 Silas Buck was chosen clerk of the church and officiated as deacon. Ashley Appleton was the first deacon chosen by vote of the church on June 30, 1843. Aug. 31, 1843, Ansel Hannum was chosen by the church second deacon. He died March 1, 1850.

In 1836 Rev. James Tisdale was settled over the churches of Guildhall and Granby for 5 years. After his time was out Rev. Mr. Smith, of Guildhall, and Rev. Mr. Duncan, of Burke, were hired a portion of the time.

And if there was not a minister of any denomination, deacon meetings were uniformly held, and a Sabbath school has been kept up always in the summer since 1825, and for the last few years we have had one the year round.

Rev. John Wooster, the first settled minister of Granby, was settled in 1843 for 5 years, and installed Aug. 9, of the same year. He was hired from year to year, after the first contract, until 1858, when he was dismissed by an ecclesiastical council from the pastoral care of the church.

Since that time Rev. Jeremiah Glines has been acting pastor, the church having been assisted every year since 1843 by the Home Missionary Society.

The Congregational meeting-house (first in town) was built in 1845, dedicated Jan.

15, 1846. The church has now, I believe, 28 members.

Since my first acquaintance in Granby, in the spring of 1825, there has been a portion of the inhabitants in favor of Methodist principles, and clergymen of that denomination have from time to time preached in town. In 1836 Elder Wells preached regularly about half of the time. Elder Williams, of Lancaster, N. H., organized a church in Granby the same year. At that time there was no Methodist church in Victory, and some from the northerly part of Victory united with the Granby church. The members found themselves unable to sustain preaching regularly, and after a few years the members were transferred to the Lunenburgh church. For several years past there has been, for a portion of the year at least, Methodist preaching in town, and a separate Sabbath school has been sustained portions of the time, and several have been baptized and joined the Methodist church; but whether they stand connected with the church in Lunenburgh or Victory, or exist as a distinct organization, I do not know, as there are no meetings of the church or class of late in town to my knowledge.

In closing this humble effort at compiling the fragmentary historical sketches of Granby, my acknowledgments are due to Henry Stevens, Esq., of Burlington, Miss A. M. Hemenway (the editor), Capt. Timothy Fairchild, of Guildhall (deceased), John Shores, of Victory, Mrs. Nancy M. Appleton, Mr. Nathaniel Ball, of Granby, and to several others who have very kindly assisted me.

IMPROMPTU.

Written during an evening Military Parade.

BY MARY W. RICE.

O sweetly sound the merry bells
So bold and clearly ringing!
And sweet the harp's soft music swells,
Its gentle murmurs flinging;
Sweetly the lute's soft voice may greet
The organ's swelling anthem come;
But there's no music half so sweet
As the "rub-a-dub-dub of the drum."

No wonder that the soldier's heart
With brave and noble daring fills,
That purposes heroic start,
As on his ear that music thrills;
No marvel at its stirring notes,
That thoughts sublime roll on their tide,
While over him there proudly floats
The banner of his country's pride.

Now clearly on the night air calm
That martial strain is loudly swelling;
Its echoes wake a strange alarm,
And seem of conflict fearful telling;
Insults, too long and tamely borne,
Now loudly call for stern redress;
And 'twill be given—that warlike tone
And drum's deep cadence answer Yes!

Oh, in this wild, conflicting hour!
In thrilling accents it shall speak,
And onward roll with startling power,
"From vale to vale and peak to peak,"
Till thrilling with the kindling word,
Each soul shall glow with purpose high,
And grasping stern the ready sword,
The hearts of oak shall make reply.

The opening cannon's mouth in vain
May threaten with its living fire;
In vain spread out the blood-drenched plain,
Where friend and foe in death expire;
They feel no throb of quailing fear,
Their noble souls think not of death,
And willing at their country's call,
They yield to her their latest breath.

GRANBY, May, 1861.

"GOOD BYE."

BY JEAN WELLS.

Borne along on wings as lightning
Swift the fleeting moments fly,
And the hour is drawing nearer
When we each must say "good bye."

Scarce we dare to break the silence,
Bound as by a magic spell;
One fond, lingering look is given,
Speaking more than words could tell.

Tear drops on the eyelids glisten,
Hands are clasped in silent woe,
Each sad, earnest look is telling,
"O! I cannot let thee go."

Still we linger, loth to sever,
Still the hour is drawing nigh,
When we part, perhaps forever,
Bid one last, one fond "good bye."

Tender let the word be spoken,
Let its music thrill the soul,
Lest that magic spell be broken—
Binding us in sweet control.

Oft that hour will be remembered,
Oft will memory love to dwell
On each look, each parting token,
From the friends we loved so well.

Like a cadence in the music,
Like the low wind's gentle sigh,
Lingers in our hearts the echo
Of that parting word, "good bye."

Sweet yet sad will be its memory,
And we scarce suppress a sigh,
As the thought comes startling o'er us,
"This may be our last good bye."

GRANBY, Vt.

Digitized by Google

GUILDHALL.

BY MILTON CUTLER.

Guildhall is situated in the southern part of Essex County, nearly 40 miles from Canada line; and, by the old stage road through Danville, about 70 from Montpelier; and, by way of White River Junction, 150 miles; bounded N. by Maidstone, E. by Connecticut river, S. by Lunenburgh, W. by Granby, and contains 19,477 acres. The soil on the plains and intervals is very good and easily cultivated; on the hills strong and generally better adapted to grazing than grain growing. Newly cleared land formerly produced excellent crops of wheat, but of late years it has been by no means a sure crop, and our people depend chiefly upon the West. Most of our farmers, however, raise some every year, and occasionally get a fair yield. Agriculture is the almost exclusive pursuit; cattle, horses, sheep, swine and poultry, corn, rye, oats, buckwheat, peas, beans, potatoes, maple sugar, &c., are the principal products.

There is a small village in the N. E. corner of the town containing the county buildings, Congregational meeting-house, academy, post-office, three stores, two public houses, a lumber and grain mill, one blacksmith's shop, one law office, and is connected with Northumberland, N. H., by a good toll-bridge. The best farms and principal wealth are in the south part, which is also connected with Lancaster, N. H., by a toll-bridge.

The market facilities are now good by means of the Grand Trunk railroad, which is, at the Northumberland depot, less than 4 miles distant; but there are no streams, except the Connecticut, that afford water power of much account. Hence, the large quantities of lumber, especially pine, which this town and vicinity produced, have been drawn to the river and floated down to find a market in Massachusetts, Connecticut and some intermediate towns. There are several small streams upon which mills have been at different times erected. "Spaulding's Brook," which takes its rise in Granby and by a circuitous route runs through Maidstone and empties into the Connecticut, is the stream upon which the first mills were built; from which circumstance it received its pres-ame of "Mill Brook."

ave since been saw-mills upon this stream within the town of Maidstone, the last of which was built during the last summer (1861) by Z. K. Washburn & Sons. Somewhere about the year 1830, Gilbert B. Mann built a saw-mill on "Burnside Brook," about half a mile from the river, which did considerable business during high water. Said brook probably received its name from the circumstance of a Mr. Burnside, one of the first settlers of Northumberland, having lived on the river bank directly opposite its mouth; and so the high hill around whose base the stream courses, was called "Burnside Mountain." Several mills have been erected on other small streams, but some years since became extinct.

Another mountain stands by or near Burnside mountain, and the two appear like twins, the second being named "Cow Mountain," which received its name from the following circumstance:

In the earlier days of the town there lived in that part of the same denominated the "North Road," a sable African called Bacchus, or "Old Bacchus," who resided in that neighborhood for a considerable number of years. He was physically powerful and fond of sport, usually good natured, but of sufficient amount of temper when offended. At last he broke up housekeeping and retired to the forest upon this mountain, taking with him another man's cow without leave, and for sometime sustained himself in the woods, baffling his seekers. But at last, having, like greater mortals, reached the end of his chain, was captured and imprisoned, and did not long survive his misfortune.

There are none of nature's wonders exhibited in this vicinity, more picturesque and grand—and our scenery is pleasant and even in many points beautiful, including the views of the hills of New Hampshire, and particularly the White Mountains, which are seen from many localities in this and other towns lying along side one of the most beautiful rivers—the Connecticut.

Our state geologists decide we are not located in one of the fields that are natural deposits of mineral wealth; there is, however, a bed of iron ore in the west part of the town, though not thought rich enough to encourage capitalists to work.

This town was chartered by Governor Wentworth, of New Hampshire, Oct. 10, 1761. It was granted to Elihu Hall and 63 others.* These original proprietors appear to have been residents of New Haven County and vicinity, in Connecticut. Their first proprietary meeting was holden at New Haven on the last Wednesday of October, 1761. The first deed was given by John Blakeslee, Enos Todd, Giles Dayton, Sam'l Mix, David Thorp, Joshua Ray, Gershom Todd, Titus Tuttle and John McClure to John Hall, 5th, and dated Nov. 2, 1761; the second, by Daniel Mackey to John Hall, 5th, dated Nov. 6, 1761; but by whom the name of Guildhall was given to this town is not known. There is a town or locality in England, near London, of the same name, and, as far as known by us, the only one in the world.

The proprietors held frequent meetings and passed sundry votes preparatory to occupying their lands, but as appears did not themselves first settle, or perhaps not even visit the same, until men from another state (Massachusetts) had occupied portions thereof. The first actual settlement seems to have been brought about by other means.

It will be recollected that, during the French and Indian war, several unsuccessful expeditions were planned and attempted for wresting Canada from France. One of the means employed by the authorities of the Province of Massachusetts to induce young men to enlist in one of these expeditions, was an offer to apprentices of freedom from their indentures. One of those who accepted this offer was young Emmons Stockwell, an orphan, whose parents died when he was very young. Upon the failure of the expedition to which he was attached the soldiers composing the same became disorganized and separated into small parties and returned on their own account. It was winter, and the sufferings of these men proved so severe that many died by the way. It was the fortune of young Stockwell and his party to strike the Connecticut river near its head waters, and follow its course until they reached settlements, and by this means he became acquainted with much of this beautiful valley. Mr. Stockwell arrived home ragged and penniless, and returned to and completed his apprenticeship; and, in the spring of 1764, David Page, David Page, Jr., aged 18 years, Emmons Stockwell,—now 23 years old—Timothy Nash, Geo. Wheeler, and a Mr. Rice left Lancaster, Mass., for the purpose of commencing a settlement in the Connecticut valley. They intended to locate their settlement on what has since been known as the Great Ox Bow, in Newbury; but, on reaching that place, they found it already occupied by two men, a Mr. Johnson being one of them; consequently they continued their journey northward, and, on the 19th of April, they crossed the stream since known as "Israel's River," in Lancaster, N. H., and pitched their camps, on both sides of the Connecticut, on land since called the Stockwell place, on the New Hampshire side, on land now owned by Messrs. Allen and Small, on the Vermont side. They continued to occupy the lands on both sides of the river in common for some time, cutting and clearing off and planting to corn 17 acres the first season. This first product of Indian corn in this region was described by Mr. Stockwell as being full in the milk and standing 12 feet high, the ears as high as his shoulders, on the 26th of August, and the next morning was frozen through and completely spoiled. "But," he continues, "it was no worse here than in Massachusetts." His party took with them from Massachusetts 20 head of cattle, and in the course of the season added 20 more, all of which were kept through the next winter.

In journeying, horses and cattle were under the necessity of subsisting principally on "browse," or the foliage of trees, except when they were fortunate enough to find an open grass plot. David Page, Sen., we believe, never made a permanent residence here, but did much for its success as a new settlement, passing back and forth frequently, and in the course of the summer brought his daughter Ruth, then 17 years of age, to perform the indispensable housekeeping for these pioneers. She, not long after, became the wife of Emmons Stockwell.

*Grantees of Guildhall.—Elihu Hall, Edmond Ward, Daniel Thomas, John Benham, John Benham, jr., Gamaliel Benham, John Hall, 5th, Adonijah Thomas, Ebenezer Blakeslee, Elihu Hall, jr., Ashbel Stiles, Enos Todd, Samuel Mix, Giles Dayton, Gershom Todd, Joshua Ray, Sam'l Whittlesey, Chauncy Whittlesey, Daniel Mackey, Sam'l Sharp Beadell, Walter Munson, Thomas Ray, Joel Thorp, Hester Mackey, Simeon Tuttle, Ithamer Tuttle, Aaron Tuttle, Titus Tuttle, James Paine, David Sharp, John Blakeslee, Timothy Barker, Oliver Dudley, Medad Dudley, Abram Kimberly, Nathaniel Chauncy, Esq., Charles Whittelsey, Esq., Damaris Hall, jr., Elisha Whittelsey, Edward G. Sutwyche, James Matthews, Jas. Matthews, jr., Peter Russell, Richard Wibird, Esq., Daniel Warner, Esq., Comfort Sage, Thomas Darling, Esq., Thomas Dodd, Philip Mortimore, John McClure, Samuel Mansfield, Thomas Rice, Charles Cook, William Prindle, Jonathan Blanchard, Rev. Samuel Hall, Theophilus Doolittle, Richard Alsop, Thomas Hart, Dr. Wm. Gould, Andrew Andross, John Moss, Benajah Thomas, John Herpon, jr.

Digitized by Google

The first houses of these settlers were rather temporary camps or cabins, and when Mr. Stockwell made a permanent location it was upon the New Hampshire side of the river, upon the same farm on which his son Emmons and family now reside. He was said to be a man of iron constitution, weighing about 240 pounds, and insensible to fear; and Mrs. S. was in all respects qualified to be a companion and help, meet or suitable for him. In proof the following fact is adduced:

Indians were quite numerous in these parts and they frequently called in small parties at the houses of the settlers to stay all night, and frequently to have a "drunk," as they termed it. Their place of crossing the river was at this settlement, and the canoes of the white men their means when traveling by land, and their call, the "war-whoop"—not in hostility however. Many times has Mrs. Stockwell, on dark and rainy nights, on hearing the Indian whoop, gone alone, with her firebrand for a light, and taken the canoe over and brought the savages to her house. Their house was a general resort for the Indians, with whom Mr. Stockwell traded, purchasing their furs and giving various articles in return; but his authority, or that of Mrs. S., they never disputed—the tapping of his foot upon the floor being sufficient to quiet them when most rude or riotous. They raised a family of 15 children, their third child—being their first son, David Stockwell—was the first child born in Guildhall, and when the youngest of the 15 had reached 21 years, not a death had occurred in the family.

Mrs. Stockwell lived till her 80th year, and when she died her family could count 130 of her descendants then living.

Timothy Nash was a hunter and trapper, and located his camp on the land that is now included in the farm of Hon. R. W. Freeman and son. George Wheeler, also a hunter, pitched his tent on the south side of Fisk's Pond. Mr. Rice, we are informed, commenced upon the meadow now owned by Mr. Fisk, and near the river.

We have no knowledge of any addition to this settlement until the year 1775. As we l[illegible] Hull, Micah Amy and James [illegible] advanced northward as far as Colebrook, N. H.; but, at the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, hearing of the battles of Lexington and Concord, they were uncertain of the future action of the Indians and tories, and concluded to return to their old homes; but, on reaching the settlement in this vicinity, Mr. Stockwell and others prevailed on them to remain here, and they made their choice in this town.

In 1778 Eleazer Rosebrook and Samuel Page joined the settlement, and, in 1779, David Hopkinson, Reuben Howe and Simon Howe were added. When, about these days, the proprietors proceeded by appointing and sending some of their number as a committee to look after their interests and to make surveys of the township, these "squatter sovereigns" were, of course, jealous of their rights, or, at least, their interests, and rather rude contention ensued, as will appear by the record which we now quote verbatim et literatim,—and please, Mr. Printer, to have a care that you do exact justice to this specimen of the literature of that day, or of those particular individuals:

at a meetimg of the Propriators of the Township of gildhall—holden by adjurnment on the 10 day of march AD—1777 at the hous of Doctor Walter munsons in North haven New haven County Timothy Andrus Chosin moderator Joseph Wooster Chosin—Clark for the Propriators of said township—
Voted that thay would Locat & Lot the township of Gildhall—
Voted that Joseph Wooster—Abel Hull & Sam'l Andrus should be a Committe for the a bove purpos—and a Cordingly persude our Bousiness till being drove off from said town by the Inhabetents on account of expence our expence on the Road £18—0—0 to twenty Days each six shillings per Day 18—0—0 to hors hier 300 miles each 4—4—0 a true account of expence test Joseph Wooster Clark for Gildhall
Joseph Wooster—Abel Hull Sam'l Andrus Committe £40—4—0

The first settlers of this town were from Lancaster and Lunenburgh, lying upon opposite sides of a river in Massachusetts, and they gave the same names to the two towns lying, as they intended, upon opposite sides of the Connecticut. According to their calculations, Lunenburgh was to embrace nearly or all that was afterwards found to be the south part of Guildhall; and Guildhall was supposed to include what was afterwards the southern portion of Maidstone, so that, in their early records, Maidstone men figure as citizens of Guildhall, and men of Guildhall as people of Lunenburgh.

Digitized by Google

The first record of a town meeting of Guildhall is dated 1783, but the town appears to have been previously organized, as this meeting was called by their selectmen (who, of course, must have been previously chosen), Jacob Schoff, John Rich and Abijah Larnard, all really Maidstone men. At this meeting Col. Ward Bailey was chosen moderator; John Rich, town clerk; John Rich, Abner Osgood and John Hugh, selectmen; Micah Amy, treasurer; and Abijah Larnard, constable.

Meanwhile considerable additions had been made to these settlements, and the settlers had been confirmed in their possessions by the Assembly of Vermont. And here we will introduce an exact copy of the record of another proprietors' meeting:

"Gilhall—Sept 1st—1783

at a Propriators meting of the township of Gilhall Legally warned and Convened at the House of mr James Roosbroock in said Gilhall then opened the meting and maid Choyce of Maj Jonas Wildow for a moderator and Joseph Wooster—Clark—
1 voated to adjurn this meting till wednsday next to be holden at the Hous of Mr Phillop grapes at two of the o'clock on said Day—then met a Cording to adjurnment first voated to Run the Lines Round the town and Locat and Lot the same—
2 voated that a Committe of seven be chosen to Lay out said town—
3 voated that Lieut Andrus be the first
4 voated that Maj Jonas Wildow be the 2
5 voated that Capt Luther Richardson be the 3
6 voated that mr Joseph Wooster be the 4
7 voated that mr Philow Treet be the 5
8 voated that mr John Rich be the 6
9 voated that mr Abel Hull be the 7
then voted to adjurn this meting till thursday till nine of the oclock in the Morning at the a bove menchend Place then met a Cording to adjurnment and opened the Meting voted to tax themselves—then voted to Lay a tax of tun dollars on each original right to defray the Charges a rising for Loacating Lotting and Laying a roade threw said town—voted that Lieut. Andrus be a Collector for said tax—voted thay will assertain the quantaty of inter in said town and make a return of the same to sum feuter meting
Lastly voated to adjurn this meting to the first tuesday of November next at the hous of mr Philop grapes at one of the oclock in the afternon—this meting is adjurned &c

JOSEPH WOOSTER Clark"

Nothing appears to have been accomplished pursuant to these votes of the proprietors in relation to locating and lotting the town, and its actual boundaries were not established until the year 1785.

Gen. James Whitelaw, of Ryegate, Surveyor-General of the State, taking the mouth of the lower Ammonoosuc river as a starting point, and proceeding N. 30 miles, arrived at a point designated as the true one for commencing the southern boundary of Guildhall. Beginning at this point on the Connecticut river, a line was run in a due N. W. direction 6 miles; thence in a N. E. course 6 miles, thence in a S. E. course to the Connecticut.

The intention seems to have been to lay out the towns in this region 6 miles square, and such towns contain 23,040 acres; but the form of this town, necessitated by the angle formed in taking the first direction by the S. line and the river, together with the irregular course of the latter, making the north boundary line much less than 6 miles, reduces its area to 19,477 acres.

We will here introduce one more specimen of the literature of those days, and for the further purpose of showing the efforts of the early proprietors made for the purpose of locating and lotting the town, and for settling disputes that had arisen. This is in form of an account, running through quite a series of years:

"Timothy Andrus ajant to the Assembly of Vermont holden at Charlestown for the townships of guildhall granby and Eight townships to the Northward
Expence 4 weaks my self and hors £15—0—0 in order to git the bounds Established between gildhall and Lunenburg andrus paid to Devenport 3—0—0 Joseph Wooster ajant in the rome of Capt Elijah Hinman sent to the Assembly of Vermont holden at Charlestown for the townships of gilhall granby and Eight other towns Northerdly Expence 15—0—0 Timothy Andrus Elijah Hinman appointed ajents to settel the dispute with Colo groute relative to gilhall and granby at the assembly of Vermont holden at benington Expence 5 weaks my self and hors 18—0—0 Joseph Wooster Expence at bennington while in Capt Elijah Hinman absents agread uppon by him self and andrus for him to serve in his rome Expence at that time 9—5—0 Timothy Andrus Expence in going to Coos to git the Committee that was appointed by the assembly of Vermont to assertain the boundares of sundry townships begining with gildhall as may appear—sum time in June—1780 Expence my self and hors 5 weaks 8 dollars to be paid to the Committe 20—0—0 another time sent to wate on said Committe Expence 8—3—0 all the a bove Charges Lyes a gainst the a bove menchend ten townships Except the first Committe that a gainst guildhall onely—

Digitized by Google

March the 15—1799."

There were 12 settlers' lots in town, occupied at this time by 11 men, whose names we give, the number of the lots occupied by each and the present owners' names, viz:

No. 1—Col. Ward Bailey—included the tract now occupied by the village, extending on the west to land now occupied by John Dodge, Esq., and northerly nearly or quite to Maidstone line. No. 2—James Rosebrook—including the farm now occupied by Alva Ditson, and extended to and included land now owned or occupied by Greenleaf Webb, Chs. Webb, John Dodge, John Emery and David Kent. No. 3—D. Hopkinson—included the farm owned by A. M. Blunt, and a considerable portion of the plain owned by Messrs. Haskell and Long. No. 4—Samuel Howe—now owned by Col. E. H. Webb. Nos. 5, 6—Eleazer Rosebrook—now owned by Stephen Ames and H. N. Allen. Nos. 7, 8—Col. Jona. Grout and Edward Bucknam, Esq.—now owned by Messrs. H. N. Allen, Jose & Small, and Chas. Benton. Nos. 9, 10—Reuben and Simon Howe—by Anson Fiske. No. 11—George Wheeler—now owned by John Smith. No. 12—Benoni Cutler—now owned by John and George S. Boyce, Horace Hubbard and Z. Woods. These grants to settlers contained 100 acres, and in the case of No. 12, 400. The occasion of this difference was the grant by the proprietors in 1787 to Abner Osgood and Ward Bailey of 300 acres, in consideration of extraordinary expenses incurred by Osgood and Bailey in building mills upon Spaulding's Brook, since known as Mill Brook. These were the first mills built in town, and appear to have been commenced by Mr. Osgood as early as 1779, and he was finally assisted by Mr. Bailey; and, by the terms of the grant, Osgood was to have 200 and Bailey 100 acres extra.

Benoni Cutler bought out this tract, including the mills, and his name was given to the mills and the stream on which they were built, so that the stream was afterwards called "Cutler's Mill Brook."

Oliver Hancock is the first mentioned blacksmith and founder, and, in consideration of "his extraordinary ingenuity" in those a[illegible] him 90 acres of the common land; provided he, or any other person on the premises, do business 8 years."

Doctor Gott appears to have been the first physician, about the year 1785; and the second Zadok Sampson, 1790.

Col. Ward Bailey, one of the 12 first settlers, appears to have been a very active, prominent man, who assisted very materially in promoting the interests and convenience of this early settlement. He not only assisted Osgood in building the first mills, as has been mentioned, but, in the years 1786–87, built the first mills at the Falls on the Connecticut.

He also built, in these Revolutionary times, a "block-house," which would, in case of necessity, serve as a defensive resort. This building, which stood near where Mr. Cobb now resides, was composed of white pine logs of large size, being hewed 8 or 10 inches thick; and it was afterward used as the first jail of the county.

The first school of which we have any knowledge was kept in this house by a Mr. Bradley, long after known as old Master Bradley. This was in the year 1788–89. How long Mr. Bailey remained in town is not known; but we believe he was succeeded in the ownership of lands, &c., by Dr. Eben W. Judd.

JAMES ROSEBROOK,

who joined the settlement in 1775, remained in town, we believe, as long as he lived. He attained to some prominence in the business affairs of the town, being intrusted with offices of importance. "The Old Duke," as he was usually styled, had the reputation of possessing the ability for telling a larger story than any other man, and we will give one specimen and leave the reader to judge whether he was entitled to bear off the prize:

A party of three or four men were one day sitting in front of the tavern, and, seeing Mr. Rosebrook approaching, the following conversation, in substance, ensued: Says Mr. A., there comes the Old Duke, the man that can tell a bigger story than any body else. This remark was rather directed to Mr. B. who, by the way, thought himself a champion at that sort of play. Mr. B. replied, I'll bet I can beat him.

Mr. A.—Well, we'll see.

When Mr. R. had joined the company, the contest was commenced by Mr. B.

Digitized by Google

Mr. B. says: Mr. Rosebrook, as a number of us were passing along the road the other day, we saw an immense egg lying in the highway; as it was so large as to obstruct travel, we were obliged to remove it, and it took four men with levers to roll it out of the road!

I have no doubt of it, instantly replied Uncle James. I haven't the least doubt of it, for I saw the bird that laid that egg when she flew over, and she was so large that she darkened the sun for two hours!

DAVID HOPKINSON

joined the settlement in the year 1779. He was a man of good capacity and was quite prominent in the affairs of the town. He was chief judge of the county court for the years 1811, '12, '15, and '16. He had quite a family of children, and two of his sons were permanent settlers. One of them, David Hopkinson, jr., was for many years a prominent and influential citizen. He represented the town in the legislature of the state a goodly number of years, and was assistant judge of the county court for the years 1827 and 1830. His widow still survives him; but his children are much scattered, none of his family having a permanent residence in town at the present time. He died, suddenly, Nov. 1837.

SAMUEL HOWE

appears here about 1780. He married Mercy, daughter of Capt. Eleazer Rosebrook, and they both lived to a good old age, having brought up a quite numerous family, most of whom removed from this town some years since. There is, we believe, but one remaining—Abigail, wife of Col. Edward H. Webb, who lives upon the old homestead. Mr. Howe was for many years one of the most respectable, substantial and active of our citizens. He enjoyed the respect and confidence of his townsmen, being often entrusted with the duties and responsibilities of official stations. His eldest daughter, Lucy, married Ethan Crawford, of White Mountain fame, and also famous for his great strength, who could carry an old-fashioned potash kettle on his head for a long distance, or catch a young bear, tie his legs, swing him over his shoulders and carry him home; and, if young bruin behaved too rudely, would unload and take him by the heels and rap his head on a rock or tree until he would hold still. Mr. Howe died April, 1842, aged 85.

CAPT. ELEAZER ROSEBROOK,

apparently one of the most active and useful of the early settlers, located in 1778. At first, we believe, he had his residence on the meadow of the Dennison or Cushman farm, and afterwards lived on what has since been known as the James Perkins farm, that is now owned and occupied by Stephen Ames, Esq. During the latter part of the Revolution, Mr. Rosebrook was employed in the military service of his country—not in the regular army, but as a scout and ranger. He, with a small party, went into Canada on a reconnoitering expedition at one time; but, after remaining a while, were suspected of being spies, and learning this fact, fled for their lives. They were closely pursued, and obliged to resort to strategem to elude their pursuers. They halted beside a stream near the head waters of the Connecticut, built a fire, and then extinguished it with water; then stepped into the stream and followed it for some distance, thus leaving the appearances of having been there so long ago that the enemy concluded it would be useless to continue the chase, and so returned.

Thompson, in his Gazetteer, states that the Indians were hostile and troublesome, killing and driving off the settlers' cattle, &c.; but this is, doubtless, quite a mistake. They were usually friendly, and committed no acts of hostility, except in one or two individual instances, and were only troublesome in making pretty free use of the settlers' houses for the purpose of staying over night, and, occasionally, to "have a drunk." They took rather more liberty in calling at houses from which the man was absent, and as Mr. R. was much from home in these days, his house was a frequent resort.

On one occasion they became so troublesome that Mrs. Rosebrook drove them out of the house, except one squaw who was so much intoxicated that she appeared unable to move, and she caught her by the hair of the head and drew her out. This rough handling roused the squaw somewhat, and so improved her power of motion that she was able to throw her hatchet just as Mrs. R. was shutting the door, and cut off the wooden thumb-piece of the latch; but, having recovered by morning, and recollecting her improprieties of the night before, the Indian woman came in, confessed her fault, asked pardon, and promised better manners in future, and ever kept her word.

Digitized by Google

COL. JONATHAN GROUT AND EDWARD BUCKNAM, ESQ.

are among the 12 first settlers; but at precisely what time they came into town is not known. Mr. Grout appears to have been a man of some note, although we have been unable to learn very much of him. We learn, by some of the records, that there arose a "dispute" between him and the proprietors; but what the cause or nature of the contention might have been, we do not learn. Mr. Bucknam was one of a committee appointed to survey the town into lots, and he and Thomas Darling performed that important service in the year 1787. There are probably no descendants of either of these men residing in this town at this time.

REUBEN AND SIMON HOWE

settled in 1779. Reuben afterward occupied the farm since purchased by Pliny Rosebrook, and which is occupied by him and his sons. Joel C. Howe, son of Reuben, is at this time living in town. Capt. Simon Howe was one of the most substantial and independent farmers, and one of the pillars of society and the church. He had several sons, who for many years resided in this town and vicinity, but have since removed to the West. Asahel B. Howe, one of the sons, is a man of position and wealth in Beloit, Wisconsin. One of the daughters, Prudence, is the wife of Anson Fiske, Esq., one of the best and most independent farmers in town, and resides upon the old homestead.

GEORGE WHEELER

was one of the very first who came into the place. He came as a hunter and trapper, but afterward became a farmer. He resided here for many years, but whether he died in town we do not know. No descendants of his are known to be living in this vicinity.

BENONI CUTLER

was formerly a resident and, we believe, a native of Killingly, Ct. He served as a soldier through the French and Indian war, and as Captain in the Revolution. About the close of the war he removed to Windsor, Vt., [illegible] the spring of 1784 came to Guild[illegible] first on the meadow, near Mr. Rice first commenced, now owned by Mr. Fiske. A year or two subsequently he purchased the 12th settlers' lot and the 300 acre grant to Osgood and Bailey, including the mills, &c. He was one of the first justices of the peace, and there was scarcely a year during his after-life in which he did not hold one or more important town offices. He brought up a family of sons, viz.: Charles, Theophilus, William, Joseph, Royal, Erastus and Zara; and two daughters, Rebecca and Lucy. He was also one of the 7 persons composing the first church organization in town in 1799. He died in the year 1806, being between 60 and 70 years of age, and one of the first buried in the north burying-ground.

CHARLES CUTLER

resided in this town many years, and had a family of two sons—Gerard and Calvin—and several daughters. He was prominent and active in the public affairs of town and church, holding frequently offices of responsibility. He finally removed, with most of his family, to the far West, where he lived to be upward of 90 years of age. His son Calvin was educated to the ministry, and settled over the Presbyterian church in Windham, N. H., and continued to sustain that relation for life.

THEOPHILUS CUTLER

resided in Guildhall the greater part of his life, and was a man of enterprise and business capacity. Was rather distinguished as a constable and collector of taxes. He raised a family of 5 sons and 3 daughters. He died at Lunenburgh, being more than 80 years of age.

WILLIAM CUTLER,

an enterprising, resolute, active man; possessing the confidence of his townsmen and of the church; was chosen deacon in 1810, and held that office till his decease, which took place but little more than two years after. He had five or six children, but none are living in this region.

JOSEPH CUTLER died in early manhood and left no family.

ROYAL CUTLER

was born at Windsor, Vt., in 1778. He was about six years of age when his father came to Guildhall, and the whole of his after-life was spent here. During his whole life he enjoyed the confidence of his fellow-citizens, as is shown by the fact of his having been constantly entrusted with offices of importance by the town and county.

As town clerk, selectman, lister, overseer of poor, treasurer for nearly 20 years, delegate to Constitutional Convention, justice of peace, assistant judge of County Court, and judge of Probate for six years, he was identified with the public interests of his fellow-citizens in all branches during his entire life. He died in May, 1856, in his 78th year.

ERASTUS CUTLER,

born about the year 1783, died in April, 1832, aged 48 years, was a highly respected and useful member of society and of the church. He possessed the confidence of all his acquaintances; was honored repeatedly by his fellow-townsmen and the church, of which he was for 13 years an active and useful deacon; assisting his associates in sustaining meetings for religious worship on the Sabbath during such times as the church and people were destitute of a minister, and his premature death was much lamented. He left but one child, since Mrs. William H. Hartshorn.

ZARA CUTLER,

born in Guildhall in 1786, was bred to the legal profession, and removed to Conway, N. H., where he died in March, 1861, aged 75 years. He united with the church in 1807. We will make no other comment upon his life and character than to refer to the action of the Carroll County Bar on the subject of his decease:

"OSSIPEE, N. H., April 24, 1861.

At the recent term of the court in this place the following resolutions were passed by the Bar:

Resolved, That it is with deep sorrow the members of Carroll County Bar learn the decease of Zara Cutler, a member of this Bar, a man of sound judgment, discreet in practice, of strict integrity, exemplary in his deportment, and of irreproachable reputation."

And at this meeting of the Bar, F. R. Chase, Esq., of the same town, rose and, with accents of deepest feeling, alluded to his long and intimate acquaintance with the deceased—a friendship dating far back in early boyhood—in the Sabbath School in Conway, of which Mr. Cutler acted as superintendent for nearly 30 years. Mr. Chase paid a handsome eulogy to the character and many virtues of the deceased. And his Honor, Judge Doe, closed the solemnities of the occasion with a most appropriate eulogistic address.

Lucy Cutler married Dea. Joel Bassett and after removed to Granby, where they resided for a considerable number of years, and finally emigrated to western New York. They had several children, who are supposed to be residing in that vicinity.

Very few of the quite numerous descendants of the 12 first settlers are, at present, residing in Guildhall; and no families bearing the name of Bailey, Hopkinson, Howe, Grout, Bucknam, or Wheeler.

Benoni Cutler has but one male descendant in town of the name. His family are probably as remarkable as any for longevity; five of his children living, in the aggregate, 418 years, or an average of more than 83.

The oldest person who has died in town was, we believe, Calvin Hubbard, September, 1854, aged 93 years and 5 months. Anne, his wife, died September, 1857, aged 93 years 2 months.

MICAH AMY,

who is mentioned as joining the settlement in 1775, pitched his tent on what is now the farm of John W. Webb, in Maidstone, as it proved, though supposed then to be in Guildhall; and unfortunately for him, farther proved, subsequently, to be included in the "Governor's Right;" so that he lost his claim, improvements, &c. His sons—John, William, Micah, and Caleb—settled in Guildhall, and all brought up families in town; but have since mostly removed, some to Canada, but more to the West. William, usually designated Esq. Amy, was noted as an excellent carpenter and millwright. Several of his children are now residing in this town and vicinity. He had a son William, more familiarly known as Capt. Amy, who was, we believe, the only one of the family that spent his entire life in this town. He was a most valuable member of the church, of unbounded public spirit, energy and decision. He died, of cancer, May 16, 1845, leaving but one child, now Mrs. Franklin H. Keyes, residing in Massachasetts. The death of Captain Amy was considered a heavy and, we may say, irreparable loss, particularly to the church. The clerk of the church in recording his death, speaks of him as "a valuable and beloved member of the Congregational church."

Digitized by Google

CALEB AMY,

long known as Maj. Amy, married Rebecca, daughter of Benoni Cutler, lived in this town 60 or more years, and then removed to Cattaraugus County, N. Y. Mrs. Amy is still living, at the age of 88, the only survivor of the family of Benoni Cutler. Major Amy was one of the most active militia officers, and a man of the greatest integrity, amiability and neighborly kindness, beloved by all.

SAMUEL R. HALL,

another of the early settlers and a very prominent man in town and church affairs, came here from Cornish, N. H. He was long known as Deacon Hall; and, besides holding for many years important town offices, was a practical surveyor, and much employed in surveying roads, &c. He removed from this town about the year 1812, and became a preacher and settled in Rumford, Maine. He had several sons and daughters brought up in Guildhall. Josiah B. Hall, one of his sons, was an active, independent farmer, and raised a quite numerous family; but removed with his family to Oberlin, Ohio, in 1834, where his sons and daughters were educated. Heman Hall, one of his sons, is, or has been, a missionary in the island of Jamaica. Mr. Hall subsequently removed with part of his family to the south-western part of Iowa, where he died a few years ago.

SAMUEL R. HALL,

another of Deacon Hall's sons, is too well and favorably known in Vermont as a minister, teacher, author, geologist, &c., to require any comment from our pen.

At first there were no settlements nearer than Newbury, Vt. or Haverhill, N. H.; and no roads for many years. Mills were so distant that no grain was carried hence to be ground; although grain was sometimes purchased at a distant mill, ground and brought to their homes; but most of their grinding was done with pestles in huge mortars, manufactured from short logs of large hard wood trees, sometimes two or three feet in diameter. Excellent crops of wheat were produced on the new land; usually good corn, and almost any amount of potatoes were raised, which having passed through the furnace, or great coal [illegible] their kitchen fire-places, made many [illegible]-despised meal. Those were not "King Cotton," but then, linen, and tow-and-linen flourished, and in some instances, premiums were offered by towns to the family that produced the greatest number of yards in a year, and dressed flax was to some extent an article of export, and potash manufactured from the abundant forests, was, to a considerable extent, exported, principally to Montreal, Ca.

For a long time the river was, in winter, the principal highway. When the river road through the town was first laid out is not known, but it appears to have been permanently established in May, 1792, by Eben W. Judd, Benoni Cutler, David Hopkinson and Simon Howe, who were a committee appointed for that purpose by the legislature.

Granby road, which has since been considerably changed, was laid out in 1788 by Nath'l Herrick, Abner Curtis and Eleazer Herrick, and the first North road—some remains of which are still plainly visible—in 1794, the present North road by the selectmen—Samuel R. Hall, surveyor—in 1797. The "Northumberland Toll Bridge" Company was chartered by the Legislature of New Hampshire in the year 1802, and bridge built in 1806, by Maj. William Hewes—William Amy, masterworkman; Noah Sabin, Francis Wilson and John M. Tillotson directors; and the second bridge in 1826; the third—blown down in December, 1854—in 1842; the fourth, and present one, in 1855 by Charles Richardson.

The North Burying Ground was laid out in 1797. The first election of town representative, according to records, took place in September, 1798—Hezekiah May, Esq. chosen; 50 votes cast for State Officers—and at the March meeting following, 1799, the town was divided into two Pound Districts; Theo. Cutler, keeper for the North, and William Rosebrook for the South.

It appears to have been the practice of Benning Wentworth—British Governor of the Province of New Hampshire—in granting town charters, to reserve for himself, in the S. E. corner of each town 500 acres, which was termed the "Governor's right." Being a loyalist, he was, in the time of the Revolution, under the necessity of abandoning the country including these "Rights," and in 1798, this Governor's Right, in this town, was sold at vendue for taxes; portions of which were bid by the following individuals; Haynes French, Eleazer Rosebrook, Jeremiah Eames, Jr., Jesse Hugh and Gerard Clark.

Digitized by Google

This tract afterwards became the property of David Hopkinson, Sen.; was subsequently owned by his sons, David and Joshua; and is the same as now occupied by Thomas H. Carbee, and William Hopkins.

There has not been the great increase of wealth and population exhibited by more highly favored towns as to soil and location, and the greater part of the once numerous families have removed, principally to the great West. The population in 1850 was 501, and it has not increased very much since. There has been a slight increase however in the number of voters; there being now above 125. The grand list stands about $1400.

The following individuals have been resident physicians: First, Dr. Gott, 1785; Dr. Zadok Sampson, 1790; Dr; Thayer, 1805; Dr, Geo. A. Bolton, 1810; Dr. McDole, 1820; Dr. Bernice Richardson, in this town and vicinity for a great number of years; Dr. John Dewey,* 1824 and many years subsequently; Dr. Walter Burnham, 1830; Dr. Samuel Curtis, 1835; Dr. James Bullock, 1838; Dr. Henry L. Watson, 1840 to 1860; Dr. B. W. Dodge, 1860, succeeded Dr. Watson; and Dr. N. S. Boyce, 1862. These dates generally express the time in which each individual was practicing medicine in the town and vicinity; but the precise number of years each remained, cannot, in many cases, be determined. Besides these, there were some others, of whom particulars cannot readily be obtained. Those who have represented the town in the Legislature, are as follows:

First, Hezekiah May, 1798; '99; Daniel Dana, 1800, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '08; Elijah Foote, 1807, '09, '10, '11, '13; Calvin Perkins, 1812; David Dennison, 1814; Chester Thayer, 1815; Joseph Berry, 1816; Seth Cushman, 1818, '19, '20, '27; David Hopkinson, 1821, '22, '23, '24, '26, '29; Erastus Cutler, 1825; John Dewey, 1828, '30, '36, '37, '38, '41; Allen Gould, 1842, '43; Oramel Crawford, 1844, '45. '54; Horace Hubbard, 1831, '40; Stephen Ames, 1846 '47; Jonathan Benjamin, 1848, '50, '62; John P. Dennison, 1849, '51; Pliny Rosebrook, 1852, '53; Richard Small. 1855; Henry L. Watson, 1856; George Hubbard, 1857; William H. Hartshorn, 1858, '59; Geo. N. Dale, 1860; Greenlief Webb, 1861.

*Residence in Maidstone—at least in 1860—since deceased.—Ed.

John Dodge, the present town Clerk, has held that office, with the exception of one year, since 1832.

EDUCATIONAL.

About 1799 a third district was formed of the west, or hill settlements, and the town made arrangements for leasing 150 acres of the school lands, valued at $2 per acre; rented at .06 per cent; to be paid annually, and this arrangement continues to the present day; 100 acres being occupied by the family of the late Daniel Keith, Jr.; and 50 acres by Amos Rosebrook. There are now 7 or 8 districts in which schools are taught from 2 to 6 or 8 months in the year, and at the present time philosophy, astronomy, algebra, &c. &c. are taught in our district schools. By the terms of charters of several towns in this county, reservations of land were made for the use of a 'County Grammar School." Nov. 8, 1805, the "Essex Co. Grammar School" was incorporated, and located in Guildhall; and the first Academy building was erected at the south part of the town the following year. John Cushman, brother of Gen. Seth Cushman, was the first preceptor; has since been, for many years, a highly respected and honored citizen, and lawyer of Troy, N. Y. The second preceptor was a Mr. Leland, who, we believe, has since resided in Derby, Vt., but at the October session of the Legislature, 1823, Concord procured a division of the county school lands, by which that town was to have the benefit of rent accruing from so much of said lands as were situated in said Concord; these being the only lands from which any funds had been derived.

During how many years of the intervening time the Grammar School had been in actual operation, we have not ascertained; but between 1820 and 1830 it was sustained at least a part of the time, under the instruction of Rev. John Fitch, and others. The first Academy was burned during a term of the school; and the school was temporarily removed to the Falls and a second building erected on the same location as the first. Subsequently this, too, was destroyed by fire; after which, schools appear to have been discontinued until the year 1839, when they were revived, and have been kept in operation most of the time since—having one, or two terms per year, and varying in number at different times from 20 or 30 to 100; and of late years, principally through the effect of the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad, some county school lands, lying in Brighton, or vicinity, have yielded a small income; but not sufficient to render it unnecessary to depend chiefly upon the tuition for supporting the schools.

Digitized by Google

COUNTY COURT MATTERS.

Essex County was organized in 1800; and the first term of the Court was holden at Lunenburgh in December of that year. Daniel Dana, of Guildhall, Chief Judge; Samuel Phelps, of Lunenburgh, and Mills De Forest, of Lemington, Joseph Wait, of Brunswick, 1st Sheriff; Haynes French, of Maidstone, 1st Clerk. There are 7 cases on the first docket, and the first case is John Hugh and Anna Hugh vs. James Lucas and Nancy Lucas, and was continued: John Mattocks, Att'y for plffs. and Elijah Foote, of Guildhall, for defts. The second case was also continued, and the third, Abner Woodsum vs. Joab Hugh, is the first in which a judgment was rendered—and that by default, by which the plff. recovers the sum of $46,86 damages, and $8,63 costs; and execution was issued thereon Jan. 1, 1801.

At this term but two verdicts were rendered, the second being in No. 5. Isaac Bundy vs Levi Fay, which was the first trial by jury in the county, and in this case the deft. recovers his cost, $7.00. The names of these first jurors were: James Mills, Gideon Bowker. Moses Quimbe, Charles Cutler, Simon Howe, Elijah Spafford, Joseph Parker, John Rich, jr., Jacob Granger, William Rosebrook, Royal Cutler, and Jacob Rich. Two tavern licenses were granted at this term,—to Ithiel Cargill, of Brunswick, and Nathan Cass, of Guildhall; assessment in each case, $1,00; Court fees, $0,67.

Although several individuals at different times, and in different parts of the town, had kept a sort of public house, yet we believe Mr. Cass was the first regular hotel keeper. This, it will be noticed, was in the year 1800; and we think he had already "kept tavern" some years.

The second term of the County Court was holden at Brunswick, commencing on the third Monday of June, 1801; 23 new entries appear on the docket, and there was but one jury trial;—case of Hugh vs. Lucas continued from previous term; verdict for plffs. for [illegible]amages, and $60,70 costs; and at [illegible]avern licenses were granted to 11 different men in various towns in the county, among whom are, David Hopkinson, Nathan Cass, and John Dean, of Guildhall.

The third term was holden at Lunenburgh, in Dec. 1801. Meanwhile Guildhall had been made the county shire, and the 4th term of the Court was holden here, commencing on the 3d Monday of June, 1802. There was but one panel of jurors at this term and but four jury trials. Jurymen, Tim. Ladd, Jedediah House, Moses Quimbe, Aaron Ames, Joseph Berry, Zephaniah Perkins, Lemuel Cook, Royal Cutler, Jacob Rich, Ithiel Cargill, Asa Gaskell, and Joseph Merrill.

In September, 1797, Eben W. Judd granted to the county land on which to build a court-house, jail, and for a common. This grant included the hill back of the common, on which hill the first court-house was built. The first building used for a jail was Col. Ward Bailey's old block-house.

We are not certain in what year the first jail and court-house were built, probably soon after the appointment of a shire town; and, near as we can learn, the jail was built about 1808 or '09. In 1831 the court-house was removed down upon the common, in front of the hill on which it was first erected, and rebuilt, and was for many years used for the triple purpose of holding courts, a church, and district school-house. The present court-house was built in 1850; the present brick jail in 1834; and for nearly 25 years after the county was organized, the three judges were appointed in the several counties, until the present arrangement for the chief judges appointed by the legislature.

A LIST OF CITIZENS OF THIS TOWN WHO HAVE BEEN COUNTY OFFICERS, as nearly perfect as the incomplete county records and our other means of information will allow:

Daniel Dana, first chief justice, 1800 to 1807, and 1809, 1813 and 1814; second, David Hopkinson, 1811, '12, '15, '16; third, Joseph Berry, 1822, '23.

ASSISTANT JUDGES.—Noah Sabine, 1807, '08; Charles Cutler, 1810; Royal Cutler, 1819; John Dewey, 1826, '27; David Hopkinson, 1827, '30; Simon Howe, jr., 1831; Reuben W. Freeman, 1833, '34; John Dodge and Samuel Curtis, 1835; John S. Nelson, 1841, '42; Horace Hubbard, 1846, '47; Timothy Fairchild, 1849; Oramel Crawford, 1850, '51; John P. Dennison, 1856, '57; Milton Cutler, 1860, '62.

COUNTY CLERKS.—Noah Sabin, 1809; Anderson Dana, 1813; Timothy Fairchild, 1814, '15, '22, '23, '24; Lucius R. Webb, 1840; Allen Gould, 1841, '42, '43; Isaac Cummmgs, 1844, '45, '46, '48; William H. Hartshorn, 1847, '49,—'62.

STATE'S ATTORNEYS.—First, Joseph Berry, 1815, '17, '18, '23, '24; Seth Cushman, 1822, and an uncertain number of years; William Heywood, jr. '47, '50 '53, and probably several other years; William T. Barron, 1845; Wm. H. Hartshorn and George N. Dale, each several years. But the records are so imperfect it is impossible to do justice to all, and it is probable there were several others who filled this office.

SHERIFFS.—The first was William Hewes, 1806, '07, '08, '09, '10; John Dean, 1815, '16, '20; Henry Hall, 1817, '18; Greenlief Webb held this office 6 or 8 years; and, if we recollect right, George E. Holmes, and perhaps others. The county records are, in relation to this office, sadly deficient, and it is impossible to get a perfect history of it.

JUDGES OF PROBATE.—Daniel Dana from 1801 to 1809, and in 1813, '14; Chas. Cutler, 1811, '12; Isaac Cushman, 1815, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22; Royal Cutler, 1826, '28, '29, '30, '36, '40. William Heywood, jr., 1845; Isaac Cummings, 1846; Reuben W. Freeman, 1852, '53; Oramel Crawford, 1854.

LAWYERS.—The first lawyers of whom we have any information were Hezekiah May, Daniel Dana, Elijah Foot, and Joseph Berry; and, afterward, Seth Cushman, James Steele, John T. Wells, William Heywood, William T. Barron, William H. Hartshorn, Ira A. Ramsay, Geo. N. Dale, and Henry Heywood.

Hezekiah May, the first town representative, probably did not long remain in town, as his name does not appear as attorney upon the county court docket.

DANIEL DANA

was from Connecticut, and came to this place as early as 1800, as he held the office of chief judge of the county court at its first organization, in that year, and continued to fill the same 10 years in all. He united with the Congregational church in 1803, and was chosen deacon in 1813; held many important town offices; was elected representative 7 years in succession, and afterwards another year. He had a numerous family—none of whom are now residing in this vicinity—and finally removed to the state of New York, since which we have no particular knowledge of him. But two of his grand-children are living in Maidstone—Mrs. Mary Carlisle Dewey, widow of Hon. John Dewey, and Mrs. D. H. Beattie; and a grandson, Charles A. Dana, has been prominently connected with the literary department of the New York Tribune.

ELIJAH FOOTE,

who first appears on the county court docket as a lawyer of Guildhall, seems to have been a very respectable attorney and esteemed citizen, and represented the town 5 years.

JOSEPH BERRY'S

name first appears on record as one of the seven who were first formed into a church organization in the year 1799, and was appointed deacon in 1803. He represented the town in 1816; was state's attorney in the years 1815, '17, '18, '23, '24; and chief judge of the county court in 1822, '23. He removed with his family to Newbury, Vt.

HON. ISAAC CUSHMAN,

a descendant of Robert Cushman, who came over in the Mayflower, in the year 1620, resided in Connecticut, and married Sarah Paine, sister to the Hon. Elijah Paine. They had two sons—Seth and John—who were both bred to the law. Seth studied with a lawyer acquaintance who then resided in Vermont; and, at the close of his studies, was recommended to Guildhall, and came here about the year 1805. Not long subsequently his father removed here with his family and resided on the farm now owned and occupied by Messrs. Jose & Small. He was frequently entrusted with the duties and responsibilities of various town offices, and was judge of probate from 1815 to '22. In his old age he went to live with his son, the Hon. John Cushman, who had, after remaining a short time in Guildhall, removed to Troy, N. Y.

GEN. SETH CUSHMAN

continued his residence in this town, with the exception of one year, till March, 1845, when he died, of paralysis, at the age of 63.

Probably few men in this state possessed a greater amount and variety of talent than Gen. Cushman; and, had his moral and religious principles equaled his natural abilities, he would have been the pride of his friends, a bright ornament of the Church and of his state and country. He was equally graceful and entertaining at home, in the social circle, at the bar, and as an officer in the field. At the bars of the several counties in this part of the state, he was the associate and peer of such men as John Mattocks, James Bell and Isaac Fletcher, all acknowledged "giants of their time."

Digitized by Google

The Hon. James Bell, in addressing the court and jury of Orleans County in a certain murder case, and referring to "his fallen brethren whom his eye missed from their wonted seats" (see sketch of Mr. Bell in history of Walden, in No. 4 of Historical Magazine, Vol. 1), says:

"May it please your honor, and gentlemen of the jury:—I stood among giants, though not of them my comrades at the bar have fallen. Fletcher! the untiring and laborious councilor, the persuasive advocate, the unyielding combatant, is where? Eternity echoes, here! Cushman, the courtly and eloquent lawyer, the kind and feeling man, the polished and social companion and friend, where now is he? The world unseen alone can say. Mattocks lives, thank God; but is withdrawn from professional toil, from the clash of mind on mind, the combat of intellect and wit, the flashing humor and grave debates of the court-room," &c.

Soon after, Mr. Bell received from Gov. Mattocks a complimentary letter, in the course of which he says:

"You have justly called our two lamented friends giants; and, with the discrimination of a reviewer, have given to each the distinguishing traits of excellence," &c.

JOHN S. WELLS

was from New Hampshire, and practiced law in this place for some years—between 1830 and 1840—whence he removed to Lancaster, and subsequently to Exeter, N. H. He was a man of ability and eloquence, of high standing as a lawyer, and was, if we remember rightly, several times a candidate for the United States Senate, and received the votes of his party.

WILLIAM HEYWOOD,

a native of Concord, Vt., removed to Guildhall about the year 1836, and continued to reside here about 20 years. He is esteemed a very sound, thorough and highly respectable lawyer, and had an extensive practice. He held the office of State's Attorney for a good number of years; was judge of probate for year 1845; was several times a candidate for the legislature, and only failed of repeated election from the fact of the party to which he belonged being in the minority.

He is residing at Lancaster, N. H., but still practices at the bar of this county.

WILLIAM T. BARRON

resided in this town and practiced law for several years between 1840 and 1850; was esteemed a promising young lawyer, and held the office of State's Attorney one or two years. He removed to Chicago, Ill., where he rose to the position of Judge. A few months since he was killed by accident on a railroad.

WILLIAM H. HARTSHORN,

a son of Colburn Hartshorn, of Lunenburgh, Vt., came to reside in town about the year 1841. Studied law with William Heywood, Esq., and practiced in that profession some 15 years. He has been a man of much public spirit, and has enjoyed the confidence of his fellow-citizens of this town and county in an unusual degree. He has constantly been in office, and has generally succeeded in meeting the approbation of his fellow-citizens. He has represented the town and the county, each two years, in the legislature of the state, and held the office of county clerk 15 years. He gave up his practice to Mr. Dale, and has been, for two or three years, a merchant.

GEORGE N. DALE

came into town in the autumn of 1856. He was from Waitsfield, and, if we mistake not, was educated at Thetford, and studied law with Mr. Durant. He represented the town in 1860; was State's Attorney three years, being esteemed a popular and promising young lawyer, and a man of many good qualities. In 1861 he received an appointment of deputy collector at Island Pond, and his present residence is at that place.

HENRY HEYWOOD,

son of Hon. William Heywood, is the only practicing attorney at present in town—a highly respectable young man, and bids fair to follow in the footsteps of his father. He is elected State's Attorney for the coming year.

In conclusion, we would make our grateful acknowledgments to Hon. Moody Rich, R. W. Freeman, Timothy Fairchild, John Dodge, and Isaac Cummings, and Mrs. Hannah Cutler, for very valuable assistance in collecting material and facts contained in the foregoing, yet in some respects incomplete history.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

At the annual town meeting in 1788, we find recorded:

"Voted to raise twenty-five bushels of wheat to hire a preacher, and horse keeping and board."

"24th. Voted Eleazer Rosebrook and Ward Bailey be a committee to hire a preacher."

In a warning for a town meeting July 25, 1789:

"To see what encouragement the town will give towards settling a minister of the gospel in conjunction with the towns of Lancaster and Northumberland."

"3d. To appoint a committee to meet and confer with committees of the other towns respecting the settlement of said minister."

"4th. To appoint a committee to petition to the general assembly to grant the town liberty to join themselves into a parish with the towns of Lancaster and Northumberland."

Ward Bailey, Esq., Benoni Cutler, Esq. and Capt. Eleazer Rosebrook were chosen as said committee.

"Voted to give Mr. Bell as a settlement three hundred and thirty-five bushels of good merchantable wheat, provided he settles in the town of Guildhall."

"Voted Mr. Bell eighty bushels of wheat as a salary annually until there are eighty ratable poles at the age of sixteen years or upwards in the town where the said Mr. Bell settles, provided, he will settle in either of the towns of Guildhall, Lancaster, or Northumberland, and the said towns will agree to divide the distance of holding meetings of public worship according to each town's pay."

Similar action was occasionally repeated for some years, and in a number of instances the sum of $40 was voted for like purposes.

While this action of towns in raising money by tax for support of the gospel appears to have been authorized by law, it was nevertheless provided, that persons who differed from the majority in their religious sentiment, could, by causing a certificate of such difference to be recorded in the clerk's office, be exempt from payment of such tax.

Consequently we find recorded several such certificates; and finally one by "Elder Sabin" in the following words:

"To all people to whom these presents shall come, Greeting: Know ye, that I, Elijah R. Sabin, a traveling preacher of the sect of Christians known and distinguished by the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, do hereby certify that Benjamin Cook, Lemuel Cook, John Crawford, jr., and Caleb Call, all of Guildhall, are of the same sect of the subscriber; and that I, the said E. R. S. am an ordained minister of the said sect in the town of Guildhall, in the county of Essex and State of Vermont.

Guildhall, Aug. 31, 1801.

Attest,—ELIJAH R. SABIN, minister."

After a time, through the influence of clearer light, and the advance of liberal sentiment by which our fathers were distinguished, this monarchical custom of uniting church and state was abandoned, and the more democratic practice of each individual voluntarily subscribing or contributing for the support of the gospel in accordance with his own particular views was substituted. But our statute law still provides for the formation of societies by the people of each or any one denomination, whose members are holden to guarantee, in case of deficiency of subscription, the payment of whatever salary their committee may pledge a minister; such deficiency to be assessed on and apportioned to the grand list. But the people of this town, we believe never formed such society, but have depended entirely upon voluntary contribution.

A decided majority of the people of the town have always been Congregationalists; and of the same sect, it appears, were the first preachers, who were missionaries, principally from Connecticut. Besides Mr. Bell, who is first mentioned, were Mr. Ripley, Mr. Nathaniel Waldo, Mr. Calvin Noble, during the earlier years before and immediately after the organization of the Congregational church; and Rev. Messrs. Nott and Hart from Connecticut, and Ainsworth from Jaffrey, N. H.; but for what length of time each may have supplied the desk, cannot now be ascertained, as the records are very meagre and imperfect throughout. And there has always been a considerable society of Methodists, and we shall depend upon some individual of that sect for a sketch of the same. There are also a few Universalists, but, we believe, there has never been a regular society, and but little preaching of that doctrine.

The Congregational church in Guildhall was organized April 1, 1799, by Rev. Seldon Church of Northumberland—formerly of Campton, N. H.—and Rev. Joseph Willard of Lancaster; composed of 7 members: Benoni Cutler, Joseph Berry, Samuel R. Hall, Elizabeth Hall, Sarah Berry, Mercy Howe and Hannah Amy. S. R. Hall, first clerk.

The next record bears date Nov. 24, 1803, at which time Samuel R. Hall and Joseph Berry were chosen the first deacons; also Heman Bassett, Daniel Dana and William Cutler a committee to assist the deacons in examining candidates for church fellowship. In the meantime 26 persons had been added to the church it appears while Messrs. Bell and Ripley were preaching here. In 1805, the town and church gave Mr. N. Waldo a call to settle. Said call not accepted, and but four additions made in 1804, and but three more in 1807; when the church gave Mr. Calvin Noble a call, not accepted. In 1801 the town made provision for building a meeting-house, Capt. Simon Howe, William Cutler and Zephaniah Perkins, committee for the purpose, and Messrs. "Lemuel Holmes, William Amy and Samuel R. Hall" were chosen to draw the plan; the place fixed for the location being the center lot, and situated on the hill above the John Bothell farm, about one half mile from where Mr. Emery now lives. This hill has ever since been called the Meeting-House Hill. Such a place would now be considered very out of the way; but then it was central, besides the people of those days had much higher notions respecting the situation of their houses, and the location of roads than is usual of late years. Lemuel Holmes, Isaac Bundy, and Samuel Howe were the committee to sell the pews, and the building was set up at vendue to him who would build cheapest. Mr. Nathan Cass bid the sum of $2400, and it was struck off to him, and he built the house, furnishing all the materials. Completed in 1805, and July 8, 1808, the church gave the Rev. Caleb Burge "a call to be installed over us in the Lord,"—"voted unanimously." Mr. Burge was installed first pastor on the last Wednesday of August following; and sustained that relation with good success until Feb. 16, 1814, when he was dismissed for want of adequate support, consequent to the many removals, "deaths of many others, also the public calamities" resulting from the war with Great Britain. Additions during Mr. Burge's administration, 99,—74 united with the church in 1810, and 41 were admitted at one time. From 1814 to 1822 nothing appears upon the record but an occasional business meeting.

In 1822–3 Rev. Andrew Rankin labored among the people, and 45 were added to the church. He was invited in January 1823 to settle, but declined; and from 1823 to 1829 [illegible]urch seems to have had no very regular [illegible]ng, and during that time but five [illegible]; but about 1830, Rev. James Tisdale visited the place, and after laboring a few months, received and accepted the invitation to be settled as pastor over Guildhall and Granby churches, and was ordained Sept. 29, 1830, and continued to labor three-fourths of the time in Guildhall, and one-fourth in Granby, with faithfulness, and 28 were added to this church. He was dismissed May 5, 1836. And the following summer, Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, then, if we remember rightly, a student of Andover Theological Seminary, and latterly president of Knox College, Ill., supplied our pulpit for a few weeks, and six were added to the church by profession, and four by letter. The Rev. William E. Holmes, formerly of St. Johnsbury, next supplied the desk for a year, without much apparent result, though considered a pretty good preacher. Oct. 14, 1837, Francis P. Smith—formerly an attorney at law, and later a licentiate preacher, of New Hampshire—was invited to become pastor; and Mr. Smith removed his family to town, and continued preaching without further action in relation to his settlement until August 15, 1838, when the society, or subscribers to his support, seconded the invitation of the church, and he was ordained pastor September 12, following; and continued his labors over 6 years with general satisfaction and so good success that 67 were added to the membership. But the pastoral relation has of late years become very subject to change, and that of Mr. Smith with this church and people was terminated by his dismission May 1, 1844.

At the time the old meeting-house was erected, though large and remote, it was better filled than some more modern houses, situated in a village upon a river road, and easy of access to many more people; but at length a different location became desirable, and about 1828 the house was taken down and removed to the plain at the most convenient spot for all then concerned; and the town assisted in rebuilding the house, in consideration of occupying it for the purposes of September elections and March meetings. For some years it was the only place of worship on the Sabbath. But for some years before its removal from the hill the people had held meetings more or less at the Falls; and about the time that Mr. Smith commenced his labors, it was decided to have the meetings upon the Sabbath one-half the time at that place, the court-house being used for that purpose; but near the close of Mr. Smith's labors—in the spring of 1843—the Methodists, taking advantage of a temporary arrangement by which the Congregational society were holding meetings during the warm season at the old meeting-house, took possession of the court-house, and declined yielding thereafter its occupancy any part of the time; thus making it necessary for the Congregationalists either to contest titles or abandon the village altogether, or build a new house. The latter course was adopted, and the next year—1844—principally through the efforts and management of David E. Dennison, Esq., a persevering, energetic man, a good and sufficiently commodious house was erected at an expense of only $1200. And after the completion of the new house, the Rev. Thomas Hall, formerly of Waterford, Vt., was employed to preach, and in the course of the ensuing year to settle as pastor. He accepted the call, and arrangements were made for his installation, but, owing chiefly to the precarious state of his health, the matter was postponed, and, finally, abandoned. Mr. Hall remained in town several years, and, we believe, supplied the desk two or three years; but from that time to the summer of 1848, the desk was occupied most or all the time by Methodist preachers, sent by their conference.

In August, 1848, the Rev. Joseph Marsh became our minister, and sustained that relation with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of church and society for nearly three years. And after Mr. Marsh left us, early in 1851, Mr. Hall returned and supplied us again for about a year, we think. Afterward the place was occupied mostly by Methodists, there being little if any Congregational preaching till March, 1858.

For a distance of nearly one and a half miles the hills advance full to the river's side, admitting of no settlement; thus dividing the face of the township and the people into two parts, north and south; between which sections there had been for many years considerable rivalry and jealousy.

The village, including that upon the Northumberland side of the river, as being in one fact of business interest, is situated near the N. E. corner of the town; but containing the mills, stores, post-office, public houses, mechanics, &c.; and being the center of business of Guildhall, Northumberland, Stark and Maidstone, had been claimed to be the point at which the interests of much the greater number could be served; while the agricultural wealth and importance was found chiefly at the south, and for some parts of the time in years past, the meetings for worship on the Sabbath had been divided between the north and south, and held at each alternately. And the opinion of clergymen who visited the town and observed impartially, as may be supposed, the situation of the population as regarding their religious interests, was generally expressed in favor of the Falls as the most important center; and there seemed to have been a growing conviction that sooner or later our meetings would have to become settled there. But the people of the south, feeling themselves required to perform too much travel, gradually leaned towards Lancaster, N. H., to which place they mostly became connected in their social, mechanical and trading pursuits. Finally, in March, 1856, most of the members of the church residing in that part of the town, including the two deacons, and the most wealthy and influential professors—from sense of duty, or inclination, or both, and influenced by convenience and the importunity of the clergy and people of Lancaster, virtually seceded from the church in Guildhall and united with the church in that town; thus reducing most essentially, and very seriously weakening the church they left. This secession, however, was not accomplished by rebellion, but peaceably and according to the forms of law, but was a severe blow from which the church has not recovered, and perhaps never will.

Early in 1857, however, the church and people, having been for some time destitute of Congregational preaching, began to feel the demands of spiritual hunger, and commenced a new effort by raising a subscription—the largest raised for many years—and endeavoring to find a man to settle with them. This effort, though continued for some time, did not prove successful; but during its continuance we were favored, for a few weeks or months at a time, with the services of Revs. Henry Loomis, jr., George Dustan, Mr. Dye, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Fellows, Mr. J. A. Blauvelt of New Jersey, Mr. Underwood of Hardwick, and J. H. Beckwith. Some of these gentlemen were invited by the society, others were theological students, and others sent by the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, it being hoped that some one would prove a settler. And some of these laborers were quite successful, and 12 were added to the church by profession, June 27, 1858, and 7 June 19, 1859.

During the winter of 1859–60 Rev. Josiah Morse, M. D. and Rev Mr. Adams, Methodist, supplied the desk alternately. April 1, 1860, Dr. Morse commenced to supply the society constantly, and has continued to do so until the present time (Sept. 1862), residing at Northumberland Depot, and is also a practicing physician.

Whole, or aggregate number of members, 318; average yearly additions, 5; greatest number admitted on one day, 41; present number of members, 56; present number of resident members, 40; present number of resident male members, 10; resident female members, 30.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The first efforts for Sabbath School instruction appear to have been made about 1816 or '17.

Mrs. William Farrar, of Lancaster, opened a school at her dwelling-house, and invited the young people of the south part of Guildhall to join it, and they did so. At or about the same time, Mr. Nathaniel Waldo was again residing and preaching in town, and Mrs. Waldo commenced a like school at the Falls. About 1821, a school was commenced at the south school-house, and, we believe, continued some years. This school had not the regular organization and classification of later times, but was a meeting for social, moral, and religious improvement; being conducted by a competent person who originated and proposed questions, bringing forward such as were suggested by whatever portion of Scripture they might have under contemplation, and inviting or requiring his pupils to do the same; and occasionally to give a written answer to some question, or opinion upon the doctrinal or practical import of a particular passage, and these efforts appear to have been continued more or less constantly until a regular organization was effected in 1830. The Rev. James Tisdale was ordained pastor the same year, the meeting-house had been rebuilt on the plain, as before mentioned, and this Sunday School organization we believe, kept up, at least during each ason, as long as meetings were con- is house.

The Hon. Reuben W. Freeman, who, for nearly 30 years was an active and influential deacon of the church, was elected superintendent of the sabbath school at its first regular organization, and held that office most of the time the same was continued. And much credit is due him in connection with deacons David Dennison, Erastus Cutler and perhaps others, for sustaining worship on the Sabbath, during those intervals when we were destitute of a minister. At times we have had several sabbath schools in different parts of the town; at the village, south school-house and in several other school districts.

At the time sabbath schools were first proposed, Dea. David Dennison, one of the fathers of the church, a man of strong mind and sound sense, questioned their desirableness, on the ground of the probability of their superseding family instruction. That this has, to a greater or less extent, been the result—that very many parents have committed their children almost exclusively to the care of the S. S. teacher, few if any will doubt, but how much has been gained or lost by this result, we leave to others to discuss.

One very great discouragement with us has been, the fact that very few adults—even of those who were professors of religion—have given them their influence by their personal attendance, and it is almost impossible to have very flourishing schools under such circumstances.

REV. CALEB BURGE.

Rev. Caleb Burge, first pastor of the church in this town, was, we are informed, born at Springfield, Vt., and educated at Middlebury; studied theology with Rev. Mr. Wines, of Newport, N. H., and came to Guildhall at about the age of 28, in the year 1808; left Guildhall 1814; had married the daughter of Dr. Chapin, of Benson; went from here to Brattleboro, where he preached some years; and from Brattleboro to Glastenburg, Ct., and from thence to the state of New York. He resided at one time at Sandy Creek, Oswego County, and finally died at Warsaw.

In person, Mr. Burge was tall and powerful, and possessed a corresponding mind; and the influence he exerted, was, probably, more the effect of strength of mind and will than of attraction and persuasion. Few opponents would long attempt to stem the current of his power—but yield, even though not convinced by his argument.

He was of the then approved Calvinistic school, and may, without impropriety, be said to be the founder of the church in Guildhall, being the author of their creed or articles of faith; and he labored to establish it in the soundest orthodoxy; believing it indispensable that a church should be firmly grounded in the Faith. During his ministry occurred the "great revival," as it was termed, in which on the first sabbath in Jan. 1810, 41 were admitted to the church; and in the course of that year, upward of 70.

Mr. Burge produced a work entitled "Burge on the Atonement," which was estimated by his friends equal, if not superior, to any that had been written upon that subject; but although a literary man, and talented preacher, he did not disdain physical labor, and owned and occupied a farm. A little anecdote is told, illustrative of his physical inclination and ability: One autumn, some of his parishioners collected to assist him in harvesting his potatoes. Upward of 100 bushels were taken from the ground in one day, and Mr. Burge insisted upon carrying them upon his shoulders in baskets to the cellar; and when one attempted to remonstrate with him, he replied, "Oh, it will do me good,—it will settle my bones together." It was remarked of him while at college, that he possessed little, pecuniarily, and wanted but little; and if any wag attempted to banter him, he would soon cause him to beat a retreat.

The results of the labors of Mr. Burge after leaving this town, are not particularly known to the writer; but the circumstances of his death at Warsaw, N. Y., were, we learn, as follows: He was on his way to a funeral, for which occasion he had prepared a sermon from these words—"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh,"—and, his horse taking fright and running, he was thrown from his carriage with such violence as to cause immediate death.

REV. JAMES TISDALE,

second pastor of the church, was from Taunton, Mass.; graduated at Brown University in 1821; spent two years teaching in North Carolina, and after his return-voyage—during which he was converted—turned his attention to the ministry; studied theology with Rev. Alvan Cobb, of Taunton; was sent into this region as a missionary, and after preaching in Burke and Granby for the space of a year, was invited to Guildhall, and, accepting a call of the church and society, ordained pastor, Sept. 29, 1830, and continued to sustain that relation with credit to himself and benefit to the church and people until May, 1836.

Mr. Tisdale was considered a faithful and successful pastor, seeking and promoting the health and prosperity of the church. During his ministry, 28 were added to its numbers. When Mr. Tisdale left this town he went to Gilsum, and afterward we believe, to Dublin, N. H. It was understood that his ministerial labors were, for a while, suspended on account of a bronchial difficulty. We have since heard of him as preaching in Illinois.*

REV. FRANCIS P. SMITH,

our third pastor, a native of Gilmanton, N. H., and son of a clergyman, was educated at Dartmouth, and bred to the law, in which profession he practiced for some years in that state. Having experienced a change of heart, his attention was turned to the ministry, and after a short period spent in studying or reading theology, was licensed to preach, and for two years previous to coming to Guildhall supplied the people of Epsom, N. H. His labors with us commenced the first sabbath of October, 1837, and continued to May, 1844.

Mr. Smith was, as a lawyer, remarkable for his uprightness and integrity; as a man, artless, amiable, social and friendly; as a Christian pastor, meek, and zealously engaged in promoting the spiritual and temporal interests of his church and people. At the commencement of his labors, the church numbered about 60, and during his stay 67 were added.

It was principally through his efforts that the County Grammar School was revived and put in successful operation, from which time we have usually had one or two terms a year. He was also instrumental in forming a social library association, and lent his influence in behalf of common schools; and whatever would serve the true interests of his people was his delight.

Friendly, familiar, simply honest and unsuspecting, he in some degree fell a prey to the malice of some whose errors and enmity his zeal and faithfulness corrected or reproved, and in his moral character was most villainously traduced and grievously wronged; and at this distance of time it is difficult to resist the conviction that the church did not uphold and sustain him as it should have done,—in witness whereof it is a noticeable fact that the church has not, from that day to this, enjoyed anything like its former prosperity. On leaving Guildhall, Mr. Smith removed to Sebasticook Me., and has since been engaged by the Maine Missionary Society, and held some other agencies.

*Rev. Mr. Tisdale died at Tonica, Ill., Feb. 28, 1863. See Cong'l Quarterly, Vol. V. No. 3, p. 265.—Ed.

Says the council, in dismissing Mr. Smith, "We rejoice that, among the reasons assigned why brother Smith's pastoral relation should be dissolved, nothing was presented derogatory to his Christian character, or his standing as a minister of the Gospel; and could cheerfully recommend him to the churches of Christ as a faithful, devoted and worthy minister."

We had anticipated a sketch of the Methodist society in this town, from some of their number,—but learn that we are to be disappointed; we are therefore under the positive necessity of omitting the subject altogether.*

LEMINGTON.

BY ARTHUR T. HOLBROOK.

Lemington is situated on the Connecticut river, near the N. E. corner of the state; first surveyed by Eben W. Judd in 1786, and contained, by admeasurement, 23,040 acres, and about 600 acres have since been annexed from Canaan, making the present area nearly 24,000 acres; bounded N. by Canaan, E. by New Hampshire, S. by Bloomfield, and W. by Averill; chartered in 1762, by Benning Wenthworth, to Samuel Averill and 63 others.

The first proprietors' meeting was held at a place called Matincook, August 3d, 1762, and the first town meeting held March 28, 1796; James Larned chosen moderator; Mills De Forest, town clerk; and Noah Buffington, James Larned and Ward Bailey, selectmen. The surface of the soil is generally pretty rocky and uneven, with the exception of the intervals on Connecticut river.

Monadnoc mountain is situated in this town. Its height has never been exactly ascertained, but is supposed to be about 3000 feet. A great portion of this mountain has been burned over at different times, the fire destroying large quantities of fine spruce and cedar timber. A spring, strongly impregnated with iron and sulphur, issues from the easterly side of this mountain, showing that these minerals exist somewhere in the interior. This spring is considered valuable for its medicinal properties, having proved itself efficacious in several cases of salt-rheum, scrofula, &c.

An extensive view of the surrounding country can be obtained from the summit of the mountain, with the aid of a telescope. A slide from the easterly side of this mountain took place, in the summer of 1805, in the night. It filled a large pond at the foot of the mountain, and afforded a chance for building the county road, which is built over the place that the pond used to occupy. Lewis Smerrage lived on the banks of the Connecticut, at a short distance from the slide at the time it took place. He was so frightened by the tremendous noise made by the great quantities of rocks, trees, &c., which came down from the mountain, that he jumped out of his bed and scrambled under it—thinking, as he afterwards said, that the day of judgment had come. The next morning he found his meadow nearly covered with water, which had been forced out of the pond by the slide.

At the present time, pieces of timber may be found among the rocks which came down in the slide. A few years ago Mr. Thomas Holbrook attempted to dig a well in the vicinity of the slide, and after he had dug to the depth of about 6 feet, he came across a huge hemlock log, and was forced to abandon the job.

The early settlers of Lemington had to endure many hardships and privations. They were obliged to carry their grain to Guildhall, 25 miles distant, to be ground. Their chief article of manufacture were salts, which they were obliged to carry to Lancaster, about 36 miles distant, to sell. The first inhabitants were forced to depend partly upon hunting and fishing for a living. Fortunately for them game was abundant. Moose were plenty, and salmon have been caught in the Connecticut that would weigh 20 pounds.

The first framed house was built by Mills De Forest, in 1790, on the site where the house owned and occupied by Abdiel Blodgett now stands. The first saw-mill was built by Mills De Forest in 1795. The first grist-mill, in 1810, by the same person. There are 4 school districts in town with the same number of school-houses; about 60 pupils; average * is hereby requested to prepare their to the editor of this work in time pendix.—Ed.

attendance, 5 months. The population of Lemington is 189, and the grand-list is about $600.

The names of the men who have gone from this town to help suppress the rebellion of 1861 are Joseph Watson, Manlius Holbrook, Carlos Willy and Alfred Harris.

Biographical Sketches.

Mills De Forest came to this town, from Huntington, Ct., about 1781, and was chosen town clerk at the first town meeting in 1796, and held the office for many years afterwards. He was also chosen representative several times, and died in 1844, aged 79 years.

LEWIS SMERRAGE

came to Lemington, from Connecticut, in 1787, remained in town two or three years, and then enlisted in the British service, where he remained for nearly two years. He at length became weary of a soldier's life, and, in company with a fellow soldier, resolved to escape if possible. They were at this time stationed at Quebec, and a favorable opportunity soon presenting itself, they passed the British lines undiscovered, crossed the St. Lawrence in a boat and fled to the woods. After a great deal of suffering and a variety of hair-breadth escapes, Smerrage arrived in safety at Lemington, where he resided until his death, which took place Feb. 16, 1856, aged 86 years.

JOHN HUGH

came to this town in 1786, from Maidstone. He lived in Lemington several years, and then moved to Canaan, where he remained until his death. His brother, Samuel Hugh, came to this town in 1800. In 1814 Samuel Hugh, in company with several others, went in pursuit of some men who were driving cattle from Vermont to the British. Hugh's party overtook the men just as they reached the boundary line between Vermont and Canada, and ordered them to desist and let the cattle go back, which they refused to do, whereupon some of Hugh's party fired on them and killed a man by the name of Morrill and wounded one or two others. The rest of them retreated and Hugh's party drove the cattle back. About two months after the events above narrated occurred, a party of Canadians (among them the brother of the man that was shot) came out secretly from Canada and surrounded the dwelling-house of Hugh about midnight. At a given signal the windows of the house were broken in, and the party rushed into the house and made Hugh a prisoner, and carried him to Canada, where he was confined about a year, when he was tried for murder and acquitted on the ground that Morrill was engaged in unlawful business,—1862.

LUNENBURGH.

BY HON. JONAH BROOKS.

Situated in the southeasterly part of Essex Co., Lat. 44° 28′, Long. 50° 15′, bounded N. W. by Victory, N. E. by Guildhall, S. E. by Connecticut river, S. W. by Concord, and opposite Dalton and Lancaster, N. H. Chartered July 5, 1763, by Benning Wentworth, governor of the New Hampshire colony, to David Page, Gustavus Swan, Jona. Sanderson, Charles Mann, Ephraim Stockwell, Charles Baker, Eben'r Hartshorn, Wm. Wood, Ivory Holland, Stephen Fransworth, William Kimpland, John Page, William Bigalow, David Towle, Philip Goodridge, John Darling, John Pierce, Abner Newton, Seth Oaks, Levi Sylvester, Caleb Wood, Walter Fairfield, Timothy Whitney, Johnathan Moulton, Samuel Gates, Zebediah Rodgers, Samuel Rodgers, Timothy Rodgers, James Wheeler, Simon Houghton, Henry Merchant, James Shephard, Joab Miles, Dennis Sacklin, Henry Sartwell, Benj. Chandler, Oliver Robinson, David Twitchel, Joel Grout, Joseph Wilson, Nath'l Wilder, Samuel Sleeper, Geo. Juffrey, James Shephard, Samuel Martin, John Goffe, Esq., John Sweat, John Clark, Nath'l Green, Stephen Boynton, Thomas Lord, John Blunt, Jona. Grout, Cyrus Whitcomb, David Sanderson, John Richardson, John Curtis, Israel Jenison, Ezek. Howe, Jos. Kelly, David West, Hugh Giles, Hon. Nath'l Barrett, Esq., Theo. Atkinson, Jr., Esq., Wm. Temple, Esq., John Nelson, Esq., Capt. Jona. Carlton, Joseph Blanchard, Esq., Richard Jennis, Esq., divided into 74 shares, the grantor securing 500 acres for his right. The first settlement made in this town was in the N. E. part (and is now in Guildhall) in 1764, by David Page, Timothy Nash, George Wheeler. The first settlers suffered severe privations for a number of years. They brought their grain and provision from Northfield, Mass., in canoes, a distance of more than 150 miles; and, during the Revolutionary war, they were in continual alarm, and frequently annoyed by the Indians and tories, who killed their cattle, plundered their houses, and carried a number of the inhabitants into captivity.

Digitized by Google

It is difficult to determine when the first settlement was made in the present limits of the town, but probably as early as 1768 by Uriah Cross, Thos. Gustin and Ebenezer Rice, who made their log huts near the bank of Connecticut river, where game and fish were most easily obtained. Moose and deer were plenty, and salmon, at the head of the 15 miles falls, were caught with but little trouble in the night with torch and spear; some weighing 40 pounds have been taken by the first settlers.

The land in this township lies in swells, running back from the Connecticut river to the west, where it rises in a range of hills near Victory line. The most noted is Mount Tug, probably deriving its name from the difficulty of going over it. The timber on the high lands is generally hard wood; in the low, mostly hemlock and spruce. On the intervals and plains on the Connecticut river the timber originally was white pine. The first settlers on these broad and productive meadows, in clearing their lands, would haul these huge trees to the bank and roll them into the river, congratulating themselves that they had so easy a way of getting rid of them, never dreaming that such timber as they were floating down stream would be worth from 30 to 40 dollars a thousand, and that one tree would sell for more than they gave for their lot of land.

Connecticut river waters the southeasterly part of the town. Its other waters are Neal's pond, about one mile from the center of the town, a beautiful sheet of water a mile long and half a mile wide. Neal's brook, Catbow brook and Mink brook are considerable mill streams, and all of them have mills located on them. The land is generally good and productive, though in some parts of the town there are more stones than is convenient for farming purposes, but through the perseverance and industry of the farmers are made productive. The first settlers endured all the hardships and perils incident to pioneers in the wilderness, but they were men and women of indomitable wills that could not be discouraged, and an energy and industry that was sure to overcome all obstacles, and they taught their children "to follow in their footsteps," and the town is now occupied by enterprizing farmers who are yearly improving their farms.

From the Town Records:

"Whereas the inhabitants of Lunenburg, in the County of Orange and State of Vermont being destitute of any form of government to act as a town, we, the inhabitants of said Lunenburg, do think proper to form a warrant by the major part of said town, dated the 5th of September, 1781, to meet at the Dwelling House of Mr. Reuben Howe, in Lunenburg, on the 11th of September, instant, at two clock P. M., to act on the following articles, viz:

1ly, to chose a moderator to govern said meeting.

2d, to chose a town clerk, selectman and constable.

3d, to chose a town treasury and committee of inspection.

4th, to chose a representative for this present year.

5th, to chose a Justice of the peace and to act on any other matter thought necessary at said meeting—

Lunenburg the 5th September, 1781.—Ebenezer Rice, David Hopkinson, Eliezer Rosebrook, Simon Howe, Thomas Gustin, Reuben Howe, Uriah Cross."

"Pursuant to the above warrant the freemen of said Lunenburg met and chose Ebenezer Rice, moderator; David Hopkinson, Jr., town clerk; Eliezer Rosebrook, Ebenezer Rice and Simon Howe, selectmen, Thomas Gustin, constable; George White, Simeon Howe and Uriah Cross, committee of inspection; Reuben Howe, representative; and Ebenezer Rice, justice of the peace. Dec. 18, 1781,—Eleazer Rosebrook, moderator,—Voted to pay their rates this year, and chose David Hopkinson, Jr., Reuben Howe and Ebenezer Rice for listers; and voted to send a petition to the General Assembly, desiring them to establish the bounds of Lunenburg and Guildhall, according to Capt Neal's survey. Lunenburg, 18 December, 1781, per me,

DAVID HOPKINSON, Town Clerk.

NOTE. Neal's survey is the present boundary between Lunenburg and Guildhall."

"March 19th, 1782, voted to raise eleven pounds, to be paid in wheat, at six shillings per bushel, to hire preaching."

A destructive fire occurred in the village on July 13, 1849, commencing about noon in a barn of Geo. W. Gates. There had been no rain for a number of weeks, and fires were raging in the woods in all directions, and only a spark seemed to be necessary to ignite any thing combustible. In a few minutes Mr. Gates' buildings, including barns, sheds and dwelling-house, were in flames, which communicated to the Congregational meeting-house, town-house, tavern and out buildings owned by Silsby & Brooks, and occupied by Wm. Morse, and two barns and shed owned by Edmund Powers. The Methodist chapel, the store of N. W. French, a number of dwelling-houses and other buildings were on fire at different times; but by the exertions of the men and women of the place, those before mentioned were the only ones totally destroyed. The loss was estimated at from $10,000 to $15,000. Amount of insurance $2,000 on G. W. Gates' buildings, and $100 to N. W. French—damage to store and goods. The meeting and town-houses were nearly new and were rebuilt the following year. A cottage has since been built on the site of the mansion of Mr. Gates; but the tavern, to the discomfort and vexation of travelers and the frequent mortification of some of the good citizens of the town, has never been rebuilt.

This town, like all others, has its tales of heroism, and the following is one of them: During the war of 1812 and '13 the only direct public road from Caledonia County to Canada line passed through this town, crossed into Lancaster, and up the Connecticut through Coos County. The "young republic" was then terribly agitated by war and politics; and, as at the present, there were those who favored, and those who bitterly opposed the policy of the administration and the war. The latter party sought every opportunity to smuggle cattle and goods into Canada to supply the British army. A certain Mr. C., of great notoriety for being the "grandson of Judas,"—and who possessed the virtues of the old parent—purchased 40 head of cattle in Caledonia County, and had driven them to within a mile of the "Line" when custom-house officer B——, with a posse of men, suddenly deprived him of them and headed them towards Caledonia again. He arrived here at night and put up at the only tavern, kept by Judge Gates, and the cattle were turned into a "back lot" and 20 men placed to watch them. At midnight up drove Mr. C., with 40 men with him, for the cattle. The loyal landlady, fearing there would be trouble with her guest, immediately dressed him in her "gown and bonnet," and throwing a shawl over her own head they walked through the crowd who were after him to Dr. W's., where he was secreted. They soon left searching for him, and scoured the farm in the darkness for the cattle; meanwhile those that were stationed to watch sallied through the town for help. Lieutenant W. was stationed at Concord as a recruiting officer, who had at the time 20 recruits, and a man was despatched for them. They arrived in sight at daylight, and saw so many men and heard so much noise that they loaded their guns and rode to the rescue. The owner had found his cattle and got them headed towards Lancaster, and our townsmen had completely blockaded the road. The officer now came forward and took command. Clubs were called into use in pelting the cattle, to drive them over each other. After pelting, "jawing" and yelling a while the cattle broke over the fence and ran for the woods. Some settled their politics by "wrestling," and the one that could "throw" was right, others by jawing, and a little Frenchman took his opponent, a man of 180 pounds, astride his neck, run with him several rods, rolled him the "longest way" down a bank, and left his politics head down and heels up beside a stone wall. The owner finding that it was of no use, threatened vengeance and retired. The officer took the cattle and the government sustained him.

50 years ago, in the N. E. part of the town, a road led through a thick wooded and swampy piece of land for about a mile and a half on the west bank of the winding Connecticut. A young man was passing over this road on horseback, and when about half way through the woods, a very large, ferocious looking grey wolf bounded into the road beside the horse, which frightened the horse, and very much surprised the rider. The horse was at once put to his best speed, and the wolf bounded in pursuit, and soon came up beside the horse and made a spring at the rider, and caught hold of his overcoat, and tore a piece out. The wolf continued the pursuit through the woods and the young man rode up to the first house, very much frightened, but otherwise not injured, his overcoat not faring quite so well, as that showed some rents.

The wolf chase was soon known through this section of the country, and as usual in such cases, there was a variety of opinions, and a great deal said about it, and while this talk and these different opinions were freely given, and said, the mail carrier arrived at the same woods on his old horse (the mail in those days was carried on horseback once a week), when the wolf made a dash at him as though he was determined to have the carrier or the mail, but through good fortune or the speed of the horse they both came out

Digitized by Google

safe, It finally was considered unsafe for any one to pass over the road after dark, as very many were chased by the wolf, and more or less frightened, but none seriously injured. At length the old hunters in town concluded to make hot work for the wolf, and arranged that they would, two of them, go every night through the woods well armed until they had got his hide and the bounty for his head, or he had left the town. The first night Jacob Emerson and Jedediah Howe were selected to parole through the woods. They took their long hunting guns, well loaded with ball and buckshot, and passed up over the road, and back with the greatest caution, but had seen nothing of the wolf; and as it had got to be well along in the night, they began to think they had spent the night in the cold for nothing, when they heard a noise in the bushes on the bank of the river. One of them brought his gun to his shoulder (the moon was obscured by a cloud), he could see some animal on four legs, and of course it must be the wolf,—he fired, and the wolf stood its ground. When the other brought his gun to his shoulder ready to fire, the moon shone out bright, and the smoke had cleared up, when the one who had fired got a better view and cried out, "hold on, the wolf has got horns." They had shot a cow (that belonged to a poor man who lived near the river) that had gone to the river to drink. They had to butcher the cow, and buy another to replace it. But the wolf never was heard or seen again in this region, undoubtedly believing it was best for his hide to go to parts where there were less persevering hunters; and whenever either of these old hunters, after this exploit, told their great hunting stories to their less valiant neighbors, they were sure to be inquired of in relation to hunting horned wolves.

This town has, for several years past, taken a deep interest in the subject of common school education. Mr. Burnham, when state superintendent, held (as he said) "one of his most successful Institutes" here, having nearly 80 teachers present. Our worthy Secretary, Mr. Adams; has held two Institutes here, and he says of them in his last report: "Essex County stands second to none in the state, for the cordial, and general encouragement which she has always shown to the Institutes." Teachers' associations and conventions for public discussion, are a prominent characteristic of the people.

Statistics of the past school year:

No. of scholars in town,	400
No. of teachers employed through the year,	15
Amount paid for teachers' wages,	470
No. of weeks school,	170
No. of school districts in town,	9

We generally employ female teachers; only two male teachers are employed this year. We have some excellent good school-houses; and some "excellent poor ones.'

PHYSICIANS,

who have resided in the town of Lunenburgh: Dr. Nath'l Gott, who came into town at a very early date, was town clerk in 1784, and had previously been employed as surgeon in the Revolutionary army, at the hospital in Cambridge, Mass.; Dr. T. Wilson, Daniel Egery, Theron Webb, Thomas Wright, T. Lane, Albert Winch, —— Bullock, Seneca Sargent, C. W. Caulkins, M. S. Leach, T. T. Cushman, J. A. Raymond, George Vincent, Marcus Ide.

ATTORNEYS,

who have resided in this town: Levi Barnard, Reuben Grout, Turner Stevenson, Wm. Heywood, Titus Snell, John Dean, ——— Dickiman, Reuben C. Benton.

LUNENBURGH'S ROLL OF HONOR.

Capt. John S. Clark, Lieut. George F. French, Marshall W. Wright, Miron C. Newton, Otis C. Mooney, Levi H. Parker, William E. Chase, Charles H. Chancey, Warren E. Vance, Charles Presby, Chauncy M. Snow, John C. Phillips, Eben Pond, Martin J. Pond, Solon Simands, Ezra S. Pierce, Milo Sanders, Rosson O. Sanders, George H. Downer, George Drowne, Aaron Drowne, Charles Drowne, John Olcott, George. W. Hill, William H. Jewell, James S. Hartwell, Sylvester Hartwell, George Adams, Wesley H. Day, Charles Cheney. Nelson Cheney, Thomas Mc Quade, Charles H. Cole, Artimus Pierce, Brainard T. Olcott, John F. Carleton, Alanson K. Ramsdell, Daniel Ball, Selden Blakeslee, Eldin J. Hartshorn, Holomon Damon, Joseph T. Gleason, Merrick Phelps, Mitchell Bowker, Alden Balch, Arthur H. Dean, Frederick F. Dewey, Jr., Barzilla Snow, Alonzo D. Parker, Levi A. Ball, Sheldon L. King, Benjamin W. Isham. Frederick Phelps, George Chauncy, Henry Ball. Lewis Thomas.

The above list include all that enlisted to the expiration of the nine months men time. The town has answered all calls, and has credit at this time.

Digitized by Google

METHODIST CHURCH.

BY REV. M. BULLARD.

The first Methodist class was formed in Lunenburgh, in 1800, but it does not appear on the minutes of the conference until 1802. It was then included in the New England conference, New Hampshire district, and the class formed was united as a charge with Lancaster, N. H. The first preacher was Thomas Branch, stationed at Lancaster, and it remained connected with Lancaster until 1832. There was no minister during this time stationed at Lunenburgh, but there was occasional preaching in the school-houses and groves in town. During this time John Broadhead, Joseph Crawford, E. R. Sabin, Elijah Hadding, Martin Bates, Solomon Sias, and David Kilburn, led the work in this vicinity, and their names will ever be cherished as pillars to the church in this section. Those men with many others under their charge were active, zealous men, and labored hard to pull down the works of evil, and establish good will and holiness in the place thereof, yet not always with success. They labored much on their own expense, and boldly faced all opposition, and though never shipwrecked like Paul, were once or twice some of them put into Connecticut river by a mob. They being on the side of justice and right, in the end prevailed over all obstacles, and established many societies and churches, which have since cast an influence for good throughout the land. In 1832 New Hampshire and Vermont were set off into a conference by themselves, under the name of the New Hampshire Conference.

Lunenburgh was in Plymouth district and became fully established as a church, with Amasa H. Houghton, minister in charge. In 1833, N. O. Way was appointed to Lunenburgh, and as he had a family it was necessary that he should have a place to live. No house could be obtained for him in the village, and there seemed to be a feeling among some against his coming into the town; but at length a place about two miles from the village was obtained for him and he there moved his family and commenced his labors upon this charge. But the inconvenience was such that the Methodist society became aroused, and a house for a parsonage was purchased for $300. Willard King was one of the most active members, and mainly through his energy in circulating the subscription paper, this result was brought about. The return of members for this year was 111. In 1834 and '35, G. F. Wells was minister in charge, and returns 90 members. In 1836, E. Kellogg, minister, 103 members; in 1837, E. G. Page, minister, 92 members; in 1838, C. Olin, minister, 98 members; in 1839, L. Hill, minister, 109 members.

Previous to this time, the meetings of the Methodists had been held in school-houses, barns, and even in the open field, but now opposition became so great that it was almost impossible to get permission to use a barn or a school-house for their meetings, and especially was this true in the vicinity of the village, as there seemed to be a feeling or desire among many to crush them down to the dust. Many times opposition is the key to success, and it in this cases semed to arouse the energies of the church and set them to obtaining means for building a chapel. Again we find Willard King, together with Levi Bowker, Wm. Morse, and Geo. W. Gates foremost in the enterprise. Mr. K. again canvassed the town for subscriptions, and though not succeeding as well as they might wish, they decided to build a large and commodious church. They shrunk not from the burden and responsibility; and although it rested heavily upon them, they bore it with Christian fortitude, and now have a convenient house for the worship of God. There was also a subscription started for a bell, and to their great joy succeeded, and the bell was bought and placed in the belfry of their chapel. From this time they kept up their church and meetings, and have had a fair share of the influence and prosperity of the town. Like all churches, they have had trials and opposers; yet, as in all cases, opposition is an incentive to action, and they have been found equal to the emergencies, and have exercised a great and good influence over the community. From this time the preachers in charge have been as follows:

In 1840, E. Petingill, 74 members—in 1841, 94 members; in 1842, Leonard Austin, 126 members; in 1843, Gary B. Houston, 156 members,—this year the parsonage first bought was exchanged for one about a half mile north of the village, which they now own; 150 dollars was paid by the society for the exchange. In 1844, Gary B. Houston, 196 members—in this year the conference district was divided, the dividing-line being the Connecticut River, and this town was put in Danville district of the Vermont conference. In 1845, D. S. Dexter, 135 members—in 1846, 150 members: in 1847, J. Whitney, 125 members—in 1848, 114 members; in 1849, Jas. S. Spinney, 105 members—in 1850, 103 members; in 1851, Joseph Enright, 102 members; in 1852, Samuel H. Colburn, 102 members—in 1853, 107 members; in 1854, Abner Howard, 122 members; in 1855, Wm. B. Howard, 122 members—in 1856, 107 members; in 1857, Edwin W. Parker, 113 members—in 1858, to March 1st, when he went as missionary to India, and from that date to the end of the conference year, D, C. Babcock, 125 members; in 1859, C. D. Ingraham, 129 members—in 1860, 173 members; in 1861, M. Bullard, 194 members—in 1862, 152 members.

Digitized by Google

M. E. SABBATH SCHOOL.

In 1839, Rev. Lewis Hill, then laboring here, founded a sabbath school, obtaining a few books for a library, and quite a large number of scholars. Geo. W. Gates was chosen superintendent; after he had served several years the preacher in charge served as superintendent until 1857, when Sylvester Dustin was chosen; and in 1858, James Bowker; in 1859, Daniel Snow; in 1860, H. A. Cutting; in 1861, Daniel Snow; in 1862, L. B. Farnham.

The school has been unusually prosperous, and they now have a large library and an interesting school. The greatest number of attendants was in 1860, when they numbered 126 regular scholars.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

BY REV. A. J. WALKER.

For several years after the settlement of this township, very few Baptists resided within its limits. No particular influence was exerted by the denomination until 1805. In this year, Mr. Enoch Thomas, with his family, moved from Middleborough, Mass., settled in the south part of the town. Mr. Thomas, his wife, and two children were members of the Baptist church in that place, and were well established in the doctrines of their church. They had learned to meditate as well as read; and did not find, either in the language and acts of Jesus Christ, or the writings of his word, permission to unite their influence with those who, in their judgment, neglected to observe any of the commands or ordinances given by the "GREAT HEAD" of the church. Living somewhat remote from any meeting, and impressed with the duty, they commenced a meeting in their own house. Missionaries of the same order, employed by the Home Missionary Society, often came along and preached to those who met, the word of life; and a few other persons, who were members of Baptist churches, moved into town, and the interest increased from year to year, until in 1810 the matter of organizing a Baptist church became a subject of remark and prayer. About this time Rev. Barnabas Perkins came out and commenced laboring with them. Elder Perkins still held his charge as pastor of the church in Danville and made it his home there; but labored as a missionary of the Danville Association in part with this people, and a number were converted. Letters dated Feb. 9th, 1811, were issued inviting brethren from the Baptist churches in Littleton and Lancaster, N. H., and Danville, Vt., to visit them on the 6th day of March ensuing, to consult with them about organizing a church. Rev. B. Perkins and Rev. A. Fisher, from Danville, Rev. S. Churchill, Dea. S. Douglass, B. White, from Littleton, S. Springer, L. Stockwell, from Lancaster, met the brethren and sisters in Enoch Thomas' house. Rev. B. Perkins, moderator, Rev. S. Churchill, clerk, were chosen;—and after the usual preliminaries and forms, the moderator giving the right-hand of fellowship to them as a sister church, the charge to the church given by Rev. S. Churchill, and the benediction by Rev. S. Churchill, in the morning. In the P. M. the services were continued, and an appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. B. Perkins, from Matt. v. 14: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid."

The church at the time of its organization consisted of nine members; viz. Enoch Thomas, Jonathan Thomas, Barzilla Snow, Abel Johnson, Chester Smith, Mary Thomas, Betsy Snow, Roby Johnson, and Caty Smith. Jonah Edson, and his wife Elizabeth Edson, very soon united by letter, and 8 more joined in 1812. Of these, one, Mr. Clark Chickering, was subsequently ordained and became the first settled pastor of the church. He was ordained January 7th, 1818. Ministers and delegates came to the council from Bethlehem, Pealing, St. Johnsbury, Waterford, Craftsbury, Coventry and Danville. Rev. Silas Davidson preached the ordination sermon; Rev.

Nathaniel Bolls made the ordaining prayer; Rev. John Saunders gave the right-hand of fellowship; Rev. Daniel Mason gave the charge; Dea. Abial Fisher made the closing prayer. Silas Davidson, moderator; David Mason, clerk.

Among the names of ministers which appear on the church records, are Tripp, Houghton, Perkins, Mason, Nelson, Ball, Fisher, Mitchell, Davidson, Kingsbury, Chamberlain, Clark, Butler, Evans, Bedell, and Huntley. Several of these, as well as others who only labored with this people for a short time, have already laid off the "earthly tabernacle" and their spirits await the resurrection of the body—in the paradise of God. More than 30 of the members of the church, who have died in faith, have had their bodies borne to the grave in this town. Others have been buried elsewhere. The principal revivals which have been enjoyed have occurred during the labors of Perkins, Alden, and Chamberlain. Perkins enjoyed revival influences at commencement of his labors, and 8 were added. Alden labored a full year with no revival influence, but 20 were added as the result of his labors. Chamberlain was a good pastor, did much out of the pulpit; and during his labors, as much revival influence was enjoyed as under any pastor with whom the church has yet been blessed. Elder Davidson was a nursing father to the church. Rev. E. Evans was pastor of the church 9 years,—he labored hard and had many trials. The church enjoyed revival influences from time to time during his pastorate, and quite a number were connected with the church. He is much beloved by the church, and has proved himself a faithful minister. The church has often been without a preacher, but have never failed to have regular worship on the Lord's day. The first deacons were Enoch Thomas and Barzilla Snow,—their present deacons are Enoch Thomas (son of the former deacon) and George Gleason. The church have built two meeting-houses, have paid larger sums for the support of the gospel at home and abroad, than other churches in this vicinity of similar means. The whole number of members who have united with the church is 180. The present number of members is 60. The present pastor is A. J. Walker. The discipline of the church has been well maintained, and the church has prospered pecuniarily,—is well united, and the congregation and sabbath school are larger than for some years past. There was a jubilee sermon preached by H. J. Campbell, of Lancaster, last year, the 50th year of its history.

SAMUEL GATES

was one of the first settlers of Lunenburgh. He was the second son of Silas and Lavina Gates, whose family consisted of nine children, four of whom were boys severally named Silas, Samuel, William and John. Samuel was born at Marlborough, Mass., Aug. 16, 1790, where he spent his youthful days amid the mutterings of that terrible storm which so soon burst upon the colonies—thus deeply imbuing his whole being with that patriotic ardor, which characterized his after-life. Although he was but a lad of 15 years of age, when the war of Revolution broke out, he at once offered himself as a volunteer, thereby manifesting his patriotism and hatred of oppression. His first term of service was for two months, in Colonel Ward's regiment, under Capt. Daniel Barnes. On the expiration of his term of enlistment in 1776, he re-enlisted in the same company for one year, during which he was present at the evacuation of Boston by the British, on the 17th of March—was then ordered to New York, and witnessed the battle on Long Island, his regiment not participating in the engagement. On the 28th of October, Mr. Gates was one of the valiant band that so signally repulsed the British at White Plains. In 1777, his term of enlistment having expired, he for the third time offered his services to his bleeding country, and entered his old company—still under Capt. Barnes—Col. Bedell commanding the regiment. Soon after the regiment was ordered from its old headquarters at Worcester, Mass., to Saratoga to aid in arresting the progress of the British under Gen. Burgoyne. Here on the plains of Stillwater our hero again found himself and comrades opposed to the enemies of their country, and participated in that bloody fight which sent the vaunting redcoats back to their own borders.

During the winter of 1777 and '78 he with his regiment were quartered at Valley Forge, where he endured, in common with his fellow patriots, those terrible sufferings from hunger and cold which no pen can ever describe, yet must ever be memorable in the history of our country. After the battle of Monmouth, in which he took part, he went with his companions to Rhode Island, where the brigade to which his regiment was attached was ordered —and at the expiration of his term of service, was honorably discharged. It is quite remarkable, that in all the hard fought battles in which he was engaged he never received a wound.

Digitized by Google

In 1781 Mr. Gates married Lucretia Williams of his native town, and in 1783, seeking for himself and family a home, he moved to Lunenburgh, Vt.—then with few exceptions an unbroken wilderness—where, cutting the first tree on a lot of 100 acres (50 of which he paid $25 for, the remainder being granted him for settling), he reared a log house and located his little family. Four others (three of whom settled in town) came with him to his forest home. Previous to this there were but three families residing in Lunenburgh. For several years many of the necessary articles of life were brought from Portland, a distance of over 100 miles, on foot or on horseback. Mr. Gates' first visit to Portland was in June, 1788, when with two horses he made his way over Cherry Mountain and through the Notch, carrying with him a few beaver skins and one silver dollar to exchange for codfish, salt, molasses, and other necessary articles, which were placed in bags and strapped on the horses' backs, and thus conveyed to his home in the wilderness. All the grain used by the early settlers was carried to Lancaster, N. H., to be ground, a distance of 7 miles; and it was a common task to carry a grist to and from the mill in a day upon their backs, or to take it up the river in a canoe to Guildhall, a distance of some 18 miles by the river. In 1792 Mr. Gates built the first frame house erected in town, on his lot about half a mile east of the village, where it now stands a relic of the past, having outlasted many buildings of later days, and far outlived the aged builder and his partner who made it their home for so many years. The first session of the county court and its sittings for a long time, as well as most of the meetings on the Sabbath, were held in this time-honored house; and many of the noted men of those olden times spent days and nights within its walls and partook of the good cheer always so freely tendered by its liberal occupants. And although it has weathered the blasts of over 70 winters, no marriage ceremony has ever been witnessed within its walls, and but twice has death found its mark among its inmates—the life-companion of the aged soldier, who died in 1853, at the age of 91, and, lastly, the old veteran himself a year later at the advanced age of 94. He died honored and lamented by all his acquaintance, for to know him was to love and respect him. His years were spent not unprofitably for his fellowmen. During his life he was honored with many responsible trusts in civil life—was the first representative of the town in the state legislature, and served several years as judge in the county court beside many minor yet important services for which, as well as for his patient endurance of the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life, he deserves the grateful remembrance of those who are now reaping the benefits of his self-denying labors. Mr. Gates had three children, all of them settled in their native town. Samuel, the oldest, and the only one of the children now living, was born in 1783, and is now an old man of fourscore years. Honored and loved by all, kind, benevolent and honest in all his dealings, as well as earnest and faithful in the discharge of every Christian duty, he has borne well his part in the drama of life. As deacon of the Congregational church he has done much for its advancement and support. Brought up amid the rough wear and tear common to new settlements, he can tell many a tale of privation, danger, and hardy endurance which the young men of this day know nothing of by experience. His wife still lives to cheer his declining years, and the aged couple reside within sight of their old homestead. Of their children, only one remains in her native town, Catharine, wife of Nathaniel W. French, in whose family the venerable parents find a comfortable home.

William, the second son of the Revolutionary hero, was a man of wide influence. Possessed of talents and great energy, he early became a man of distinction in his county and held many important offices. He died in 1842, at the age of 56, deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends.

Catharine, the only daughter and youngest child of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1788, married Dr. Theron Webb, the resident physician of the place, and lived and died in her native town.

Such is a short history of the life and character of one of the early inhabitants of Lunenburgh and of his descendants. Enjoying as we do at this day the beauties, pleasures and comforts of our quiet Vermont homes, we are too apt to forget the hard, self-denying labors of those who have made it what it is—our own glorious New England.

SKETCH OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH AND SOCIETY.

BY REV. WILLIAM SEWALL.

The first religious associated movement in Lunenburgh was made by the Congregationalists as early as 1800. At that time, the first meeting-house was built. It was not dedicated until 1802. In December of that year the first Congregational society was formed, and among its earliest votes we find these: "That the members of this society are desirous of settling a minister," and "That the Rev. John Willard shall be the person on whom our minds shall meet." The society conferred with Mr. Willard, and an arrangement mutually satisfactory was made for his settlement. It may not be uninteresting, as it certainly will be a matter of curiosity, to insert here some of the items in the contract made with Mr. Willard by the people at that time.

The first is merely with regard to the right of land which should be his, as the first settled minister in the town:

"Second, To raise by subscription a sum sufficient to defray the expenses of sending three sleighs and three spans of horses and suitable persons to drive the same for the purpose of assisting in removing his family and effects from Connecticut (Stafford), to this town."

"Fifth. He shall receive for his first year's salary one hundred and sixty-six dollars to be assessed on the grand list of 1803, and then to rise in proportion as the list of ratable property of those who are liable to pay his salary rises, for the term of six years or until it amounts to two hundred and sixty-six dollars. And if it should not rise to the said sum of two hundred and sixty-six dollars in that time, and this society should not be willing to establish his salary at the said sum, then and in that case, this society agree that the said Mr. Willard shall not be considered (unless he chooses) any longer our gospel minister. Two-thirds of the above mentioned sums to be paid in good merchantable wheat, at the current prices annually;" (the rest in money.)

The first Congregational church was organized at nearly the same time with the society. Rev. Joseph Willard of Lancaster, N. H., and his brother, Rev. John Willard, above mentioned, organized the church 27th of Dec. 1802. The church immediately united with the society in extending a call to Mr. Willard, and he was installed 31st of March, 1803. The clerical members of the council were Joseph Willard of Lancaster, N. H., Nathaniel Lambert of Newbury, Vt., Sylvester Dana of Orford, N. H., and David Goodall of Littleton, N. H. The names of the lay members are not recorded. There is no mention made in the order of exercises of any address to the people. The other parts are the same as we have them now.

At its organization the church numbered 16—half males. During Mr. Willard's ministry of 19 years, 144 united with the church, 53 of which were males. Two distinct revivals of religion marked this period in the history of the church. The first was in 1810. Perez Chapin, then a young man studying theology with Rev. Caleb Birge of Guildhall, one day supplied Mr. Willard's pulpit. He preached what was called "a hard doctrinal sermon." "This," says Mr. Julius A. Willard, son of Rev. John Willard, in a recent letter, recalling the incidents of his father's ministry, "stirred up the latent gall of many hearts, setting them to thinking, till they sought peace to their souls in sweet submission to the Divine will." As the immediate result of this revival we find an addition to the church of 33 members in 1810; 14 more were added in 1811. During the winter of 1819–20 Rev. Daniel Hemenway assisted Mr. Willard a few weeks A revival followed, and we find an addition of 42 persons in 1820.

The following sketch of Mr. Willard's life was obtained through the kindness of Rev. P. H. White of Coventry. It is from the American Quarterly Register for May, 1841:

REV. JOHN WILLARD

was the son of Rev. John Willard, D. D., of Stafford, Ct., was born in 1759. His mother was Lydia, eldest daughter of Gen. Dwight of Brookfield, Mass. He was great great grandson of Rev. Samuel Willard, vice-president of Harvard College, and nephew of Rev. Joseph L. Willard, D. D., who was afterward president of the same college. He was graduated at Yale in 1782, ordained at Meriden, Ct., June, 1786, and dismissed May, 1802. He settled at Lunenburgh March 31, 1802. In 1810 his labors were blessed by a gracious visitation of the Divine Spirit, a very general revival of religion prevailed, and about 70 were added to the church. [Note.—This number must, we think, include those added 10 years afterward, and it does not appear from the records that more than 33 united with the church at this time. As was said above, 42 united in 1820. W. S.] There were several other partial revivals during his connection with the church, which was dissolved in February, 1822. His salary being inadequate to his support, he performed several missionary tours through the northern settlements of Vermont and New Hampshire, under the direction of the Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont Missionary Societies. His mind naturally inclined to the study of medicine, and during his excursions among the more scattered of the people he had frequent applications to administer to the sick and infirm. His attention was thus necessarily directed to the subject, and an increasing weakness at the stomach induced him finally to enter regularly into the practice of medicine. He did not wholly relinquish preaching for several years afterwards, but such was the state of his health, that it was deemed necessary for him to do so sometime before his pastoral relation was dissolved. He died in June, 1826."

Digitized by Google

His son thus briefly speaks of him as a preacher: "My good father was not a 'Boanerges;' his manner was always mild and kind, and his preaching partook of like qualities. He was soundly orthodox."

He is still remembered by many with reverence, affection and gratitude as the pioneer in the work of evangelization in this town.

REV. ANSON HUBBARD

succeeded Mr. Willard in the ministry here. He was settled 16th July, 1823. He remained with this people only two years, being dismissed 6th July. 1825. The record shows that five persons were added to the church during his ministry. After a year and a half of only occasional preaching, Rev. Jeremiah Glines was invited by the church and society to become their minister. He accepted the invitation, and was ordained and installed 10th January, 1827. During his ministry the church received an addition to its membership of 96—males 40. The largest addition at any one time during this period was in 1831, when 31 were received into church fellowship. In 1829 were added 16, and 20 in 1832.

Mr. Glines was dismissed Feb. 1848, after a ministry of a little more than 21 years. He has since been at Newark, and for a few years has labored with renewed devotion to his Master's work in the towns of Granby and Victory. During Mr. Glines' ministry, about the year 1842, with consent of all the proprietors but three, the first meeting-house was taken down. It was sold at public auction. The objecting pew-holders formally and publicly forbade the auctioneer to proceed; but it was nevertheless sold under the hammer and torn down to make way for a new, more convenient and more comfortable structure. The second house was built and finished in the same year, and dedicated 14th December.

REV. JOSIAH M. STEARNS

was installed June 1849, and only one week after his settlement the meeting-house, with other buildings, was destroyed by fire. It was a sad day and one which will long be remembered in this town as the day of "the fire."

But the people said, "let us rise and build;" and "they had a mind to work;" and in a few months a new house was raised on the same spot. It was dedicated January, 1851. It still stands, the ornament of our village. It was modeled somewhat after the North Church meeting-house at St. Johnsbury. The Messrs. Fairbanks of that place, with their ever ready and cheerful liberality in many a good work, generously assisted in the erection of this house.

During Mr. Stearns' short but most devoted ministry, 25 united with the church. He was dismissed on account of ill health the 3d of February, 1852. He was an indefatigable and earnest worker. Beside his parochial duties he taught school a considerable part of the time. A very interesting revival occurred while he was here, in which he was permitted to reap even a present reward of his labors. He preached afterward a short time in Brentwood, N. H., where he died.

After Mr. Stearns' dismission, the pulpit was supplied by different ministers. Rev. A. O. Hubbard, now deceased, well known in Vermont as a biblical scholar, preached several months. Also Rev. I. Esty, now of Amherst, Mass., was stated supply for more than a year. Since June, 1855, the writer, then recently from the Seminary at Bangor (class of 1854), has ministered to this people, having been ordained to the gospel ministry as an evangelist at Cambridge, Mass., 2d May, 1855. During this period 55 have united with the church. Of this number 32 were received in 1858, as the fruits of the well-remembered and extensive revival with which the churches were graciously visited at that time. The whole number of names enrolled on the church records is 348—males 132.

Digitized by Google

The church was a beneficiary of the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, until within three years. It is now self-sustaining, although by no means pecuniarily strong.

MY FATHER AND HIS OLD MEETING-HOUSE.

BY ELIZA D. W. PARSON,

Daughter of Rev. John Willard, first settled minister of Lunenburgh.

Backward receding thought, with pensive, humid eye,
Counts o'er the buds that strewed the paths of days gone by,
And doating memory's tears, their faded tints renew,
As withered roses wake beeprint with evening dews.

Oh! childhood hath its dreams of loveliness and light,
And youth its golden hopes of undefined delight;
But aye, amid those groups, baptized with fancy's fire
That thronged my gay, young soul, thine image shone, my sire.

I love to thread the maze of long-remembered things,
And touch those filial notes that thrilled my heart's soft strings;
A child upon thy knees, I list thy lullaby,
And watch the tender smile that lights thy lip and eye.

Onward, in riper years, I wander by thy side,
Where fragrant wild flowers gleam, and silver waters glide,
The chanting of soft winds or carrols of bright birds
Are not so sweet to me as my bland father's words.

Now in the forest cot I see the joining hands,
Entwining blessings rich, with hallowed nuptial bands;
Or, poiseless kneeling down, beside the couch of death,
Thy whispered prayers ascend with life's last gasping breath.

I seek thy mouldering home, now level with green earth,
And stand upon that stone that formed thy humble hearth;
The walls around me rise, thy table and arm chair,
Thy books of solemn lore, thy chastened looks, thy prayer.

But most I love to haunt, this lonely ancient pile,
That makes the scoffer jest, and breeds his idiot smile,
For here sweet phantoms float before my spirit's eye,
With shapes, and hues, and tones like dear reality.

Within that rude old desk, with swinging canopy,
I see thee stretch thy hand and raise thy suppliant eye,
Heaven's melting masses move—the angel-dove descends,
And with thine earnest voice its purest treasure blends.

'Twas not for thee to rend fond nature's precious ties,
Or chill with savage fear her dearest sympathies;
Oh! no, my sainted sire, a holier task was thine—
To pour o'er broken hearts unpurchased oil and wine.

I view a glittering font—within a crystal tide—
And infant faces gleam, that limped wave beside;
As on their snowy brows thou fling'st the radiant drops,
Thy dewy eyelids show thy tender fears and hopes.

Again these visions change—I see a table spread,
And thou the serving-one, dispensing wine and bread
Like Him of Sinai's cliffs, who wore the glow divine,—
With peace, with love, with joy, thy kindled features shine.

Once more in sable garbs, I see a mourning crowd
Surround the coffined dead, with sore affliction bowed,
And thou with flooded eyes, to soothe that stormy grief,
Dost glean rich healing balm from off the sacred leaf.

What fills the picture scene? 'Tis yonder circling throng,
Where youth and beauty chant the ancient holy song,—
Pleased if their pastor's glance their rustic strains approve,
That wake his listening soul to thanks, to praise, to love.

From out these shattered panes thy resting place I view,
Hoary with snowy trees, or bright with rain and dew;
In that deserted aisle they placed thy lifeless clay,
Through these discolored doors they bore thy bier away.

Father! thy work is done—to thee this house is nought,
Bright is thy dwelling-place, 'mid temples spirit-wrought;
It is for me to mourn the ruin sad and drear,
That hangs on every scene thy presence rendered dear.

Adieu! thou time-worn dome, thou venerable bond,
That tiest me to the past with links of feeling strong;
Thou too must pass away—to-morrow's sunset beam
Will o'er thy prostrate walls and naked basement stream.

Thy lethean doom decreed, thou monument of all,
A pastor's faithful love, or parent's worth must fall!
Be still, my throbbing heart,—within thy crimson cell
There are more memories grand than pyramids could tell!

MAIDSTONE.

BY HON. MOODY RICH.

Maidstone was chartered by Gov. Wentworth, of New Hampshire, under George III., Oct. 12, 1761; bounded N. by Brunswick, S. by Guildhall, E. by Connecticut river, W. by Granby and Ferdinand; containing, as chartered, 25,000 acres.

The proprietors under the N. H. grants immediately proceeded to organize their proprietary body, after the granting of said charter, and the first meeting was held at the house of Elisha Mills, in Stratford, Ct., on the 2nd Tuesday of November, 1761; and at a meeting of the proprietors at the same place as above, held Aug. 17, 1762, it was decided to get the township of Maidstone surveyed and laid out—and William Emmes Thomas French and John Yates were appointed the committee, and to receive for their services 7s 6d per day while on that service, they bearing the expenses of themselves and horses; but all other charges necessary to prosecute said affair to be borne by the proprietors—and £66 were raised by vote of the proprietors to defray the expense of the survey. Under this vote the township was first located.

Digitized by Google

This comprises all that was done towards the promotion of the settlement of this town, so far as I have been able to ascertain, before the difficulty arose under the conflicting grants from New Hampshire and New York. This difficulty, however, was never carried to actual hostilities in these eastern townships as it was in the western—as there never were any claimants or settlers under the New York grants in these northeastern townships.

The following minutes, from the proprietors' records, comprises the whole history of this conflict of grants as far as it relates to this town particularly:

In 1764 the king of Great Britain annexed the townships west of Connecticut river, which had prior to that time been supposed to belong to the province of New Hampshire, and had been granted to proprietors by the governor of that province.

The grantees of Maidstone appointed Capt. John Brooks their agent, to meet with other agents in New York, to make application to his excellency the governor of New York, for new grants of said township, under the seal of New York. At a proprietors' meeting, November 10, 1766, the question was raised whether they would agree to pursue the plan laid by the agents who convened at New York on the 13th day of the preceding October, with respect to the townships patented by the governor of New Hampshire on the west side of Connecticut river, in order to obtain of the king's majesty a confirmation of said grants?—which passed in the affirmative, and Agur Tomlinson, Esq. was chosen agent, to meet with other agents at the house of Friend Benj. Ferris, at the Oblong, on the 26th day of November, then inst. And at an adjourned meeting, held the 2nd day of the next December, the proprietors heard the report of their agent from the Oblong, and it was agreed to pay for each whole right or share 4s. New York currency, towards defraying the charges of carrying a petition home to Great Britain, to His Majesty King George for a confirmation of their rights.

The last proprietors' meeting, which was held in Connecticut, was April 1, 1779, at Ripton, from the record of which we take the following:

"Whereas we have appointed Mr. Nehemiah De Forest our agent to go up to the governor of Vermont, with a petition, in the name of said proprietors, for his sanction, protection and direction in laying out and settling said township.

N. B. We received an answer from the governor of Vermont by our agent, Mr. De Forest, to this purpose: That the grants of the several townships given by Gov. Wentworth, or the N. H. grants, were held sacred and that their assembly would soon proceed to take proper steps that the same should be surveyed and located."

The further particulars of this controversy it is unnecessary to state here, as they have been written in every complete history of New Hampshire, New York, or Vermont.

The grantees of Maidstone were all Connecticut men, and none of them ever became settlers of the town, which proved a serious obstacle to its early settlement, as all who desired to purchase lands were obliged to go to Connecticut or New York for that purpose. This difficulty was removed by proprietary meetings, held by proxy in the town after the year 1779—by the allotment of the lands in 1786, and by the appointment of agents of the original proprietors resident in the vicinity.

Another great hindrance to the settlement of the country was the long distance which provisions and other necessaries of life had to be transported through the wilderness. At the time the first settlements were made here the nearest place where provisions could be procured, grain ground, or a horse shod, was at Haverhill, N. H., 50 miles down the river; and if the freight could not be brought on horseback, the journey must be made on the river, as the best road was a bridle path marked by spotted trees.

I have often heard the early settlers say, "They must have starved, during the long winters, if it had not been for the wild game they caught."

At present we value the beautiful Connecticut river—the name of which is derived from two Indian words that signify "long river"—for the richness of the soil of its interval lands lying upon each side through its whole course, from Lake Connecticut to its mouth; but in those days its adjacent forests afforded a more immediate resource to the settlers in the wild animals that were found there—many of which have now nearly disappeared from this vicinity—as the moose, deer, bear, beaver and otter. Wild game and ducks were then also abundant, and the river furnished supplies of fish that would gratify the pampered appetite of an epicure—as salmon, shad and trout.

Digitized by Google

The proprietors were zealous in their endeavors to promote the settlement of their lands. From the record of their meeting held March 18, 1779, I take the following:

"Whereas Mr. Abner Osgood is building a grist-mill in said township, which we suppose will be of great advantage to the settlers, and to encourage him in so good an undertaking,—Voted, that we will give him, in case he effects said work, one whole dividing right or share equal to one full right or share of each proprietor, and that he have liberty to lay out one hundred acres of said right at the place where he builds the grist-mill, to be in a square piece, half on one side of the stream and half on the other where he builds said mill; provided, he completes said mill and continues to keep it in good repair, and will hold the same by and under the proprietors."

Mr. Osgood did complete his mill; but it proved to be in the town of Guildhall, as the line between that town and Maidstone was subsequently established. This mill was upon the small stream known as the Mill brook, and on the farm now owned by John H Boyce, on what is called the north road in Guildhall. This was the first mill ever built in this part of the country, and for the want of sufficient water power was not a very successful affair.

In order to consult some effectual method to secure the title and speedy settlement of the township, and to encourage the same, the proprietors, at a meeting Feb. 26, 1772, voted that each settler who should, as soon as may be the ensuing summer, proceed to begin a settlement and make an improvement, and annually continue the same, shall be allowed a reward of 100 acres of land, proportioned in intervals and upland, in the same manner as other proprietors; and they also appointed Joseph Holbrook and Arthur Wooster a committee to locate the corner boundaries of the township upon the river; and it was also voted to give them $10 each, besides a reasonable reward for their services, as an encouragement to their going up to the Great Coos the ensuing summer with a design to accomplish this work. And in the May following they were directed to take the advice of Col. Bailey, and if he thought proper and necessary, in order to obtain a new grant, they were empowered and directed to survey the whole township.

This committee never accomplished the business for which they were appointed. Mr. Holbrook fell in disgrace, was a source of much vexation to the proprietors, who, after years of forbearance, Voted, never thereafter to trouble him with their money or any place of trust.*

In December, 1774, the proprietors allowed to Arthur and Thomas Wooster each 100 acres of land, as a reward for beginning a settlement in Maidstone in 1772, agreeable to the before-mentioned vote.

Micah Amy, John Sawyer, J. Sawyer, Jr., Deliverance Sawyer, Benj. Sawyer, Mr. Merrill, Enoch Hall, Benj. Whitcomb, John French, and Jeremy Merrill, who had settled in said township and begun improvements, were each allowed 100 acres, to be proportioned in intervals and uplands together; provided, they paid their proportion of taxes, and consented to hold the same under the proprietors and for them, and that they continue their respective settlements and improvements from year to year at least 5 years. As above, we have the names of twelve settlers in town commencing in 1772, and prior to 1774, besides the Col. Bailey whom the said committee is directed to take the advice of, is supposed to be Ward Bailey, who was one of the first settlers. There were others, of a still earlier date, of whose names we have no record. One, Mr. Mardeen, lived near the small brook still bearing his name, which runs across the highway between Mr. Beattie's and Dr. Dewey's, probably as early as 1770. He might have been the first mechanic in town, as he was basket maker. A son of his, born about 1770, weighing two and a half pounds at birth, attained at full maturity to the very respectable weight of two hundred and some odd pounds—perhaps was the first child born in town.

Mr. Jeremy Merrill, above named, lived in town but few years, on the farm now owned by E. McDade, and at last met a sudden death: He went to a neighbor's to borrow a fan for separating chaff from grain; elevating the fan over his head, he started for home—on the way a limb from a tree fell on the fan, killing him instantly. He was probably one of the first buried in the lower public burying ground in this town. Many may remember, some 25 or 30 years ago, seeing human bones washed out by heavy rains from the east side of the burying ground near the river. It is supposed they were his.

*See account in Judd's Record, in County Chapter.—Ed.

Messrs. David Gaskill, Abraham Gile, Benjamin Byron, John Hugh, E. Torrey, Jos. Wooster, Reuben Hawkins and some others came into this town about the year 1780 and '81.

The Indians in this part of the country were of the St. Francis tribe in Canada. This country was called by them "Coos," which signifies "The Pines." They had a trail from the territory of that tribe in Canada, to the Penobscot river in Maine. After crossing the Memphremagog, they would take the Clyde river, which would lead them to Island Pond, then cross to the Nulhegan river and down that to the Connecticut, thence to the upper Ammonoosuc, and up this river to some point in the present town of Milan, N. H., where they crossed to the Androscoggin, thence down the last named river. On this trail they passed through the settled portion of Maidstone, and were a source of great annoyance to the inhabitants. During the Revolutionary war the Indians received $5 bounty for each captive alive, or scalp that was taken by them.

The Tories were leagued with the Indians in opposition to the Revolutionists, and as the latter could get no assistance from govment, they were obliged to rely entirely upon their own resources for self-defence against this internal enemy.

The inhabitants of both sides of the Connecticut river, in this vicinity, united together for the purpose of self-protection, and chose a committee of safety and built forts for the protection of the women and children. There were three forts built—two in Northumberland, one at the mouth of Ammonoosuc river, opposite Jacob Rich's home farm; one on the Marshall farm, now owned by Charles H. Woods; and one in Stratford, nearly opposite Mr. Joseph Merrill's, in the north part of the town. Whenever the alarm was given that the "Indians or tories were coming," the women and children would flee to the [illegible]ncident, worthy remembrance, as showing somewhat of the trials and hardships to which young mothers were subject in those days of unremitting fear and anxiety, is as follows: The young wife of Caleb Marshall, on whose farm one of those forts was built, after seeing the most valuable of her household goods buried in the earth, mounted her horse, with a child of about two years and an infant of three weeks old, and went on unattended through the wilderness and sparsely settled towns a portion of the way, to her own and her husband's parents in Hampstead, N. H., a distance of 160 miles, where she arrived in safety. The infant of three weeks, in after years, became the good and faithful wife of the writer of this sketch—blessed be her memory. She departed this life March 26, 1858.

Ward Bailey was chosen Captain to take command of these forts and the forces raised to guard them. The young and able-bodied men were sent as scouts to the woods, to prevent surprise from the enemy, and those who were not able to go to the woods on this duty were left in the immediate charge of the forts. Capt. Bailey was living in Maidstone at this time. His house was a few rods north from Col. Joseph Rich's present residence. He was very active in opposition to the tories and Indians, which rendered him particularly obnoxious to them. A party of these savages and tories came from Canada for the purpose of capturing Capt. Bailey, Mr. Hugh and other of the inhabitants of Maidstone. They went first to the house of Thomas Wooster, in the north part of the town, and took Wooster, his hired man, John Smith, and James Luther, who was at the house of Mr. Wooster visiting the girl who subsequently became his wife, little thinking of the grievous calamity about to befall him. They then proceeded to Mr. Hugh's, who was saved as narrated in the biographic sketch of Mr. Hugh. Finding that Bailey and his neighbors were armed and prepared to defend themselves, they took what prisoners they had secured to Canada; were pursued by some of the settlers who hoped to rescue the captives, but were unsuccessful and returned home. On their long, tedious march through the wilderness their sufferings were intense, particularly from hunger. When the Indians stopped to eat their scanty meal, Luther would sit down before them and watch with a desiring eye; they would now and then throw him a bit, saying, "you all one dog, take that."

Mr. Luther was afterward redeemed from his captivity, and married the girl from whom he was thus unexpectedly taken, and lived with her in the town of Canaan to a good old age. Mr. Wooster made the tories believe he was also a tory, and was released. The hired man succeeded in effecting his escape from them by running away.

[In connection with the Indian history is also the following interesting account received from Miss B. T. Rich, daughter of the writer of this record for Maidstone, since the receipt of her father's papers.—Ed.]

"We had a visit yesterday from an aged lady who told me of a Mrs. Chapman, whose husband was at work in the field and attacked by a party of Indians and his head split open, falling down half one side and half the other, in sight of his wife in the house, who took her three children and fled to the woods, in hearing of the house. One of the children was a very crying babe, which she put to the breast, every moment expecting it would cry and discover her place of concealment.

While thus hid under the trees and thick foliage, she could hear the Indians come to the house and imitate, as well as they could, her husband's voice—saying, "Come, Molly, the Indians gone; come back, Molly, come." As she did not come, they went away, and she with her children were saved. No tongue could tell her sufferings as they passed near her several times in the search, and she expecting to see her children murdered every moment. She had to cross the river to a neighbor's, to make known her sorrow, which she did by wading through, carrying one child, then returning for another, until all were over safely.

My informant does not remember whether Mr. Chapman lived in Brunswick or in Maidstone, at the time; if in B., perhaps you have the story in their history.* She had the narrative from Mrs. Chapman's own lips years ago, and many years after the tragedy happened, which the poor woman even then told with streaming eyes and choking grief. It shows what people suffered here in those perilous days.

This lady also told me that John French, father of Major Hains French, kept for a long time secreted under a hay stack, his wife carrying him food after dark, as the savages were determined to take him, dead or alive.

They went in the night to the house of Hezekiah Fuller, who, hearing them coming, slipped down behind the bed. They asked his wife where her sannup was, she said he was gone, they then took her large linen apron and filled it with sugar and left the house, much to the relief of its frightened inmates."

During the excitement on account of the tories and their allies a young man, by the name of Ozias Caswell, drawing a heavy load of hay from a meadow, his oxen refused to draw the load up the steep bank, and Caswell was exceedingly vexed at his ill luck; finally he took the oxen from the load and set it on fire, giving an alarm that the "Indians burned his hay," which caused all the inhabitants to flee to the forts with much confusion. No Indians being found, Caswell was charged with having raised a false alarm, and, after a long time, acknowledged his guilt and was severely punished for the offence.

It well becomes those who sit securely by their hearthstones with their children gathered about them, fearing no stealthy attack from an insidious foe, to thankfully acknowledge that "their lines have fallen in pleasant places;" and also to cherish, with tenderest feelings of veneration and respect, the memory of ancestors who, amidst perils and privations, prepared the way for all they now enjoy.

About the close of the Revolutionary war John Rich and Hezekiah Fuller (came previous, as I am informed), and soon after Jas. Lucas, Wm. Williams and others moved into town with their families.

In 1786 Eben W. Judd surveyed and lotted the lands of the town, and the unsettled line between Maidstone and Guildhall was established by his survey. He at first met with much opposition from the settlers, who were jealous of their rights and fearful they should be disturbed in their lots; but the matter was finally amicably arranged, and the survey accepted by the unanimous vote of the town.

The first public school in town was taught by Mrs. —— Amy, in 1786, in a log-house just east of the present residence of J. W. Webb. The scholars came from the three towns of Maidstone, Guildhall and Northumberland, N. H.

In this year Ward Bailey built a grist-mill and saw-mill, at Guildhall Falls, which was a real blessing to this portion of the country. Up to this time there had been no framed houses erected, for the want of necessary material.

* As we have not the story in Brunswick history, we conclude Mr. Chapman probably resided in Maidstone at this time—Ed.

Digitized by Google

In March, 1788, the town was organized. James Lucas was moderator of the first town meeting, and Hains French, first town clerk. In 1786 Messrs. John Rich, John Hugh and David Gaskill were appointed a committee to alter the highway through the town, where they thought most advantageous to the public. The road was probably laid out sometime previous.

Dr. Enoch Cheney and family came here about this time and built a house for himself on the little rise of ground a few rods north of J. W. Webb's; the highway now passes over the site of his dwelling. He remaind here a few years, and said the country was so healthy he could not support his family; therefore, sold his property and left town, hoping to find a location where his professional services would be in better demand.

From 1786 to 1800 Messrs. Isaac Stevens, Moses Hall, Holloway Taylor, John Taylor Gibb, Jonathan Patterson, Isaac Smith, and Joseph Merrill, moved into town with their families. Isaac Stevens kept the first public house, and Isaac Smith the second store in town, where Dr. Dewey now lives—Abraham Gile's being the first store in town. Mr. Gile, possessing more artifice than honesty, sold a quantity of land lying on the unknown river to Boston merchants, receiving his pay therefor in goods for his store; the land and river, probably still remain unknown. This store was a short distance above Mr. Beattie's, in what has been known some years past as the "old French House," the store-room being afterwards occupied by Hains French, Esq., as an office.

Joseph Merrill, named above, is still living, and is the oldest man in town (1862), is about 87, and retains a remarkable memory for one of his age.

About 1796 the organization of the County of Essex was under consideration and Jas. Lucas and Isaac Stevens were chosen delegates to meet with delegates from other towns, to cousult the most prudent measures for the organization of the county. The town also voted to raise money to defray the expense of erecting a court-house and jail in the town of Maidstone, for the use of the county; provided, the legislature of the state would establish the shire of the county in Maidstone.

In 1803 Dr. Tabor located himself in town. His residence was near the river, less than one-half mile above Guildhall Falls. One day, being absent from home, he returned and found his wife missing. Not finding her at the neighbors, a general search was made, and she was at length found lifeless on the bottom of the river. A jury of inquest was summoned and a verdict returned of "suicide from the effects of home-sickness and discouragement." Dr. Tabor and wife had been but a short time married. This was the last physician who ever located in this town intending to make a permanent residence and practice his profession exclusively.

The present number of school districts in town are 7, and average time of schooling in a year 5 months, except private schools in families; number of scholars, 65. We have no high school established here, but the fact that every farm through the town on the river has supported children of its owner at some of the high schools of the country shows that the people are not entirely indifferent to education and its objects.

Maidstone has had of United States officers: Rich Stevens, Deputy Marshall Dist. of Vt. Moody Rich, Deputy Collector of Customs; William Rich, Deputy Collector of Customs.

STATE OFFICERS.

GOVERNOR'S COUNCIL.

Hains French, 2 years, 1809 and 1810.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

	No. of elections.	Last period of service.
John Rich,	1	1791
Hains French,	1	1793
Moody Rich,	2	1843
Jesse Hugh	1	1822
Daniel Rich	1	1828
Joseph Gleason,	1	1836
Charles Stevens,	1	1850

COUNCIL OF CENSORS.

John Dewey,	1	1848

COUNTY OFFICERS.

JUDGES OF PROBATE.

James Lucas,	3	1798
Joseph Gleason,	3	1839
Moody Rich,	2	1844

ASSISTANT JUDGES.

Moody Rich,	5	1827
Jesse Hugh,	1	1816

SHERIFFS.

Rich Stevens,	5	1823
D. H. Beattie,	3	1857

CLERK OF COUNTY COURT.

Hains French,	12	1813

SENATORS.

Moody Rich,	1	1841
John Dewey,	1	1857
Thomas G. Beattie,	2	1861

Moody Rich, County Treasurer for many years—do not know precisely how many.

REPRESENTATIVES.

	No. of elections.	First period of service.	Last period of service.
Abraham Gild,	1	1781
John Rich,	5	1785	1791
David Gaskill,	1	1789
Hains French,	9	1793	1807
James Lucas,	2	1795	1798
Jacob Rich,	1	1799
Joseph Wooster,	1	1800
Isaac Stevens,	1	1801
Jesse Hugh,	7	1806	1828
Moody Rich	15	1809	1848
Rich Stevens,	1	1815
S. G. Hinman,	1	1816
Daniel Rich,	5	1820	1834
Joseph Gleason,	2	1832	1833
G. A. Hall,	2	1835	1836
Joseph Rich,	2	1837	1838
S. D. Merrill,	2	1840	1841
Leonard Walker,	2	1842	1843
James Follansby,	2	1844	1845
Charles Stevens,	3	1847	1855
D. C. Kimball,	2	1850	1851
P. R. Follansby,	4	1852	1859
T. G. Beattie,	3	1854	1857
J. W. Webb,	2	1860	1861

COUNTY COMMISSIONER.

P. R. Follansby,	2 elections.	1859 was born in Germany, near the river Rhine, in 1729. Hoping to find a government more in accordance with his ideas of political and religious liberty, he emigrated to America when a young man; married in or near Boston, Mass., by Rev. Samuel Merrill, in 1753, to Catharine Sophia Whiteman, who also came from the same country with her parents when 14 years of age. They were equally rich in energy, perseverance and self-reliance, and commenced life with a mutual agreement to lay by a certain sum daily for future need. After a few years of pecuniary prosperity in Ashburnham, Mass., they removed to Haverhill, N. H. Mr. Rich purchased the fine farm a few rods north of the court house, now owned by Ex-Governor Page. While living in Haverhill he was employed by government to furnish supplies to the continental army. His oldest son John was also in the service of his country under Col. Timothy Bedle. In March, 1784, he moved to Maidstone. As there were no roads, the journey was made on the Connecticut river through many perils to himself and family, as well as the stock which he drove. Here he bought a large tract of land on the river, supposed then to be in Guildhall, of the Sawyers, who had built three log houses and made some improvements on the same. The beautiful intervals known as the Rich meadows were then covered with a heavy growth of rock maple, elm and butternut.

JOHN RICH

After some length of time another claimant came for the land, and as there was no alternative, it was again paid for. Of this tract of land he made four farms, one each for three sons, John, Henry and Jacob, reserving the homestead for his youngest son Moody, who has lived on the same 78 years, and is now at the advanced age of 82, the only person in town who was an inhabitant of the same when it was organized. The three sons above named lived and died leaving families on the farms purchased by their father.

Mr. Rich was an energetic, enterprising man for the times, zealously engaged in whatever would promote the welfare of the town, not willing to entrust its interests committed to him in other hands, as one anecdote will show. He spoke with the brogue of his native land, and when in the legislature at one time he had an unusual amount of business to lay before the house: A young lawyer proposed to do the necessary talking on the occasion, saying, "Some may not readily understand you," Mr. R. replies, "Do you understand me?" "O yes, perfectly well sir." "Then that is enough for you, I will do my own talking." He was strongly democratic in principle, regarded the right of suffrage as a sacred inheritance, and enjoined its observance upon all freemen as a duty on which depended the freedom of the country—believing that through neglect of this the liberty of Germany was lost, and consequently the tyranny he had witnessed in his fatherland. He was moreover a warm friend of religion, and the observance of the Sabbath—always attending religious meetings when possible, and frequently hiring ministers for occasional services and paying them from his own purse. He was honest and upright in all business transactions; in his domestic relations kind and pleasant tempered. He died Sept. 31, 1813, aged 84 years and 6 months.

Mrs. Catharine Sophia Rich was remarkable for industry, economy and liberality, as well as an accumulating faculty that filled her house with an abundance from which she dispensed with bountiful hand to those in need, none such going empty-handed from her door. She died April 14, 1818, aged 82 years.

THE HUGH FAMILY.

Among the earliest settlers of Maidstone was John Hugh, who was born in Musselborough, Scotland, in the year 1737. He was only 8 years of age when the celebrated battle of Preston Pans was fought in the same town, and well remembered his father's returning home after the battle was over.

While in the company of four other boys of his own age along the banks of the Frith of Forth enjoying a holiday at the age of 16, he with the others were enticed to go on board a small vessel lying not far distant. After they were on board they soon learned that they were captives to a press-gang then in the employ of and sanctioned by the British government. They were soon placed on board of a man of war, and neither ever saw their home, kindred or country again.

At this period the English were at war with the French, and the vessel was bound for the Colonies in America. After a stormy passage they made the port of Boston. By an understanding between the boys they affected to be well pleased with their new life and duties. They were furnished with soldiers' clothes and rations. After remaining on board for a sufficient time to quiet suspicion—one night when the sentinel was drowsy, they let themselves down the vessel's side by ropes and made their escape by swimming to the shore. Being entirely ignorant of the country and its inhabitants, they traveled by night through the new sparsely settled region and lay still during the day. But at length, pressed for food, they called at a farmer's house by the name of Harriman, in Plaistow, N. H. Here they were received with kindness, and acting under advice, they all changed their clothing and separated in order to evade being recaptured.

The subject of this narrative, from this time to the commencement of the Revolutionary War, made his home with his benefactor, and subsequently married Anna Harriman, his daughter. He was in the War of the Revolution, and fought at the battles of Bunker Hill, Bennington and Ticonderoga. From Plaistow he removed to Haverhill, N. H., where he purchased a farm, and was the seventh family in that town. From here he removed to Newbury, Vt., and bought a farm on the great Ox Bow. This place he sold subsequently and took the whole pay in Continental money, which proved to be entirely worthless. From here he moved to Derryfield, now Manchester, N. H., and from there afterward to Maidstone, Vt., in March, 1781. He purchased the place on which he lived and died, of Mr. Lindsey the year before—the same being now owned by D. H. and T. G. Beattie. At the time Mr. Hugh moved to Maidstone the whole country was almost an unbroken wilderness. There were no roads of any kind, and the settlers had to make the tedious circuit of the river on the ice. The snow was very deep, and the weather intensely cold. The family suffered extreme hardships in getting through. After a clearing was made sufficiently large a small log house was built, then came the scarcity of provisions, the terror of the Indians and all the other privations, fears and hardships incident to the settlement of a new country in those days.

By this time some of the sons had grown up, and owing to their skill with the gun, and their experience in border-life, they gave great offence to the Indians. The settlers never went into the woods to hunt for cattle, nor into the fields to work, but what they had fire-arms always at hand. In addition to the hatred the Indians bore to John Hugh and sons, they had a pecuniary motive in taking them prisoners, dead or alive, for a bounty was paid the Indians by the British government for all prisoners taken alive into Canada, and $5 for each scalp.

About this time a party of British Indians came in from Canada by the way of Connecticut river. They took several prisoners as they came along, and amongst them was James Luther. With a view of securing John Hugh and some of his sons, the party encamped just back of Mr. Beattie's orchard in the woods at that time, intending to make the attack the next morning at the break of day. As it happened by accident that morning, Mr. Hugh and his eldest son, John, got up very early intending to go over a line of sable traps which they had set, running directly west from the river some 5 miles. Thinking that their guns might want cleaning they washed them out, and in order to dry them put in a charge of powder and fired them off. At this the Indians took alarm, supposing they were discovered and that a large force had collected to give them battle. Owing to this slight circumstance the Hughs saved themselves from captivity, and perhaps their lives.

ANNA HUGH was a noble woman, and bore the heat and burden of those early days of toil and self-denial with a true woman's fortitude. As an evidence of her kind heart, it is related that shortly after they came into the settlement, three captive men who had escaped from the Indians somewhere in Canada, made their way alone and without food back and struck Connecticut river on John Hugh's farm. They were almost famished, having lived several days without food except the twigs and bark of trees. Mrs. Hugh immediately made a soup, and for hours fed them with a spoon in order to allay their hunger without periling their lives by a hearty meal. Two of these men were very large, and the other a small one. It was often said afterwards by the small man that, on the last day, the looks of his two large companions told him that unless they had food soon he would be the one first to be killed, in order to preserve the others.

John Hugh was a plain, sober, industrious man, and died respected by his friends and neighbors, Sept. 27, 1814. His wife died the year before, and both lie side by side in the little burying-ground in the town.

It might perhaps be proper to add that he raised a large family of sons and daughters, namely, John, Jesse, James, Joab, Samuel, Anna, Sally and Dorcas, and most of them lived to an advanced age—all having passed away except Dorcas. The three last named sons, from 1810 to 1817, believing that "Westward the star of empire wends its way," moved to the Genesee valley, N. Y. Here they and their descendants went into the forest, as their father did before them, and helped change it into one of the finest wheat growing sections in the world. Not long afterwards they engaged with others in the great enterprises of the day which, when completed, have made New York in truth the Empire State. These enterprises were her canals and turnpikes, and later her steamboats and railroads.

Like many other Westernisms, without any reason therefor, the name of "Hughes" was substituted for "Hugh," the true family Scotch name. Many of the descendants of these sons and daughters have moved still farther west and are now found in many of the northwestern States. Two of the sons of Joab—John M. Hugh, Esq., and Hon. Arthur Hugh—are among the most prominent public men of Cleveland, Ohio. But the eldest son, John, adhering to the associations and local attachments of his boyhood, never left the woods and ranges where he had enjoyed the sports of hunting. Few men were more fond of a moose or deer hunt than he, and none ever enjoyed more the pleasures of camp life. The woods of the northern portions of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, were all familiar to him—as the pastures, fields and meadow-lands are to the thrifty farmer. His mind was well stored with hunting lore, Indian traditions and revolutionary incidents. The following was one of those early reminiscences: When a small boy, his father was a near neighbor of Gen. Stark. The General being absent in the war and help scarce, by permission of his father he went and worked for Mrs. Stark in the hay-field in company with herself, a son of about the same age as himself, the girls and two hired men. A few days before the battle of Bennington, while thus engaged a courier arrived in great haste and delivered to Mrs. Stark a letter from her husband,—and with the rake leaning on her shoulder she read it aloud, which was to the following effect:

"Dear Molly: In less than one week the British forces here will be ours. Send every man from the farm that will come, and let the haying go to hell." This was characteristic of the General.

Few men had such a general store of knowledge as John Hugh the younger. It was culled from every source of knowledge. His memory was remarkable, and often people would come from a distance to gather from his great store-house of information facts and incidents in connection with the early settlement of the country. He lived in the town of Canaan and died there at an advanced age some ten years since.

SAMUEL HUGH,

the youngest son of John Hugh, lived at a time when there was occasionally a school of a few weeks in the winter season. This however was limited to a few of what are now called elementary studies, such as spelling, reading and writing, with the ground rules of arithmetic—geography in those days being rather too classical. Previous to the war of 1812 he was appointed Deputy Collector of the State of Vermont, and continued so until he was forcibly taken from his own house in Canaan by a band of ruffians from Canada and carried a prisoner out of the United States. The circumstances connected with this outrage was as follows. There were parties from Canada engaged in smuggling through property, chiefly cattle, from the States, and it is to be regretted that many of our citizens were then as now found who were anxious to give "aid and comfort to the enemy." It was a duty of the officers of customs to put a stop to this contraband business, and they did so, but not without the loss of several lives.

Digitized by Google

Hearing that a large drove of cattle was being started through by the smugglers, Samuel Hugh gathered together a number of men and pursued them. Among the number were Ephraim Mahurin, Eleazer Slocum, Wm. McAllister, —— Cogswell, and several others—all armed. The party did not succeed in overtaking the drove of cattle until they got over the line and had been delivered to the purchasers, who were also in force expecting a conflict. Samuel Hugh was a powerful man, over 6 feet high and weighed over 200 pounds. Two men by the name of Morrill also powerful men attacked him at once, and having knocked one of them down, the other was in the very act of snapping a loaded gun at Hugh's breast before he could use his own weapon again, when some one from the American party more expert fired his rifle and Morrill fell dead. As several guns were discharged at the same time, it was never known to whom Hugh was indebted for his life.

In the melee another of the Canadian party was wounded. His name was also Morrill and a brother to the one who was killed. There was also a third man by the same name, and was a nephew of the others. It was he who made the attack on Hugh as before mentioned. He had previously discharged his gun at him loaded with ball and buck-shot. The charge passed through Mr. Hugh's clothing, but did no injury to his person. But about 4 weeks after the affair, in the dead of night, Samuel Hugh's house was surrounded by an armed party from Canada, together with their friends and sympathizers in the States, amounting to nearly 100 persons. He had just moved into a new house. The first intimation of their presence was the breaking in of almost every window. The family, consisting of Mrs. H. and a number of small children, were thrown into great alarm and distress, and clung around their natural protector. Seeing guns leveled at him from every direction, one of which was snapped at him but missed fire, he managed to free his person from his wife and children to prevent their being shot, for he had no doubt they came to murder him. This was unquestionably the object of some of them, but they were prevented by the more considerate and less guilty portion of the party.

Immediately all the stock and whatever property they could lay their hands on was taken and hurried off. Mr. Hugh himself was placed on a horse with his feet tied under the horse, and armed men walked on each side to guard him. This was in extreme cold weather in November, 1814. The news spread like wild fire, and soon as a large party could be collected—which was not until the next day at noon—to rescue Mr. H., they started in full pursuit. But before they got through the woods they found that they were too far behind to overtake the enemy, and returned.

Mr. H. was first taken to Stanstead. Here he sent across the line to David Hopkinson his brother-in-law who then resided in Derby. On Mr. Hopkinson's appearance he was arrested himself on some pretext and kept closely guarded by keepers three days, and could render no assistance. From Stanstead Mr. Hugh was carried to Montreal, thrown into prison and heavily loaded with irons. Here Morrill Magoon—afterward notorious for his counterfeiting and other crimes for which he was executed—was his keeper. During his stay here, Magoon intimated to him that for a certain sum he would secure his escape. This sum was subsequently raised and sent on, but before it came it was decided that Mr. H. could not be tried at Montreal, but that he must be sent to Three Rivers. At the last named place he was tried, and on their failing to prove the homicide he was convicted by the Court of some minor offence and sentenced to be branded and imprisoned for three months. This conviction was to show the petty spleen the courts of Great Britain had against our government.

Again Mr. H. was loaded with chains and confined in a dark, loathsome cell. His sufferings from vermin and filth, with fare that Christians would have hardly offered their lowest brutes, soon reduced Mr. H. to a mere skeleton compared with what he was before entering a British prison. In addition to this, all manner of abuse and indignities were heaped upon him. Soon after peace was declared his friends got up petitions which were forwarded to the Governor of Vermont, and he procured what official papers were necessary and authorized Seth Cushman, of Guildhall, to go to Canada and present them to the Governor-General of that province. This had the effect to set Mr. H. at liberty, who returned to his family, having been imprisoned upwards of one year.

The legislature of Vermont granted to his wife, Patty Hugh, $1000. Such are some of the stirring events that characterized the lives of the patriots on the frontiers, who periled their lives and their property in behalf of the liberty of their country.

Samuel Hugh died about eight years ago, as he had lived, an honored and patriotic man, respected and remembered by all who knew him.

BENJAMIN BYRON

moved from Bridgewater, Mass., into the town of Maidstone about the year 1780, with his wife and four youngest children, leaving two daughters married and settled in Bridgewater, where they remained. He settled first on the farm now owned and occupied by Jacob Rich, but soon obtained a lease of a public lot in the north part of the town, where he remained during life. He was a blacksmith, and having built a log house and a little shop, he supported his family mostly by working at his trade. He was a smart active man, and somewhat eccentric,—like some others of his time, not having the advantage of an education, but had a fund of originality and ready wit as a substitute. Many anecdotes are told of him to the present time. The following is one: In time of war, he was bearer of dispatches to a distance, through long woods in great haste. Having traveled till he was weary and well nigh exhausted, he came to a settlement. Entering a house he found a company about sitting down to a table bountifully spread. Hunger, and the importance of his message, would not allow delay, therefore he immediately sat down and commenced helping himself. Some one suggested to him the propriety of waiting, as the minister would ask a blessing. He kept on eating, but replied, "Say what you are a mind to, you wont turn my stomach."

His wife was Rachel Bailey, sister to Ward Bailey, who settled in Maidstone about the same time. She was a woman of good native talents and possessed of perseverance and good calculation, which were very necessary in order to encounter the difficulties and dangers to which the early settlers were subject. Many times were these traits called into exercise that her family might be comfortable. Their youngest child,

GEORGE WASHINGTON BYRON,

the principal subject of this sketch, was born in Bridgewater, Mass., July 7, 1776. He was not a healthy child and had but few privileges; was active both in mind and body; and in his earlier years evinced those marked traits of character which he manifested through life. He must know "the reason why," to become convinced and see wherein would be the advantage, in order to be influenced. He often related an anecdote of his early years: When he was about five years old, there was an alarm given that the Indians were coming, as they often did to take prisoners to Canada. His mother must take her children and run to the fort. Washington (as he was always called) had seen friendly Indians, and was not afraid of them. He could not see the advantage of going to the fort, but he knew the worth of the meat and vegetables that were on the fire boiling, and refused to leave till after dinner. His mother, knowing that unless the child went willingly he would not run very fast, asked him what she should give him to induce him to go. He told her if she would give him the large pin that she used to pin her shawl, he would go. Such things, so common now, were then almost unknown, and he desired it. She did so, and they went to the fort. But the alarm proved false, and they returned the next day, and much to his satisfaction found their dinner hanging on the crane as they had left it. At another time when a lad, he with his brother Benjamin were in the field, when they saw a rabbit. His brother, who was a pious youth, commenced running and crying, "Lord, help! Lord, help! when he, thinking that the noise would do more to frighten the animal than secure aid, said quickly, "Say nothing Ben.; say nothing,— two are enough to catch a rabbit." This was not so much from irreligion, as a habit he always had of relying on his own exertions and using proper means for whatever he wished to accomplish. His chance for education was very limited, as he had to go about three miles to school, but he acquired a passable knowledge of the common branches. But this life, free from restraint, was giving his body a vigor and health that rendered him able in after years to endure many hardships necessary for him to encounter; and he was acquiring a knowledge of nature with a habit of reasoning which, combined with good judgment, was very useful. When little more than 16 it became necessary for him to take the management of business, as his father had not a good business faculty. He learned the trade of his father, and commenced life in earnest. Being ingenious, he worked at all kinds of business, and whatever he wished to do he found a way of doing. He bought land adjoining his lot, with a view of improving his farm,—thinking a farmer's life the best. He built a convenient house and other buildings, and gave his parents a comfortable home, as they lived to an advanced age. His affection for his mother was a marked trait of his character, and it continued unabated while he lived. He received no aid pecuniarily, as his father's property would not pay the debts; therefore it was sometimes necessary to turn short corners. He was prompt to pay. At one time a man to whom he was owing money, came to him as he was ploughing in the spring with the first yoke of oxen he ever owned, and wished to buy them—not so much to get the debt, but cattle were scarce. He said he thought a moment of his need of them as he did not know where he could get more,—but it would pay the debt, and he immediately unhitched them, though, he added, tears would come to his eyes as he did so. But he accumulated a good property, and having earned it himself knew how to make good use of it. He did not aspire to office, but his good judgment was often very efficient in many of the business transactions of the town. He also took a lively interest in schools, that others might receive the benefit of what he felt so much in need. He was very industrious, seldom ever being idle an hour, which accounted for the great amount of labor which he performed. He lived to be threescore and ten, yet was never old. He retained all his faculties nearly perfect (especially a remarkable memory), and his last day's work was, he said, as great as he ever did. It was probably the cause of the acute rheumatism with a lung fever that so suddenly terminated his life. He died April 17, 1846. He was married about 1806, to Mary, daughter of Antipas Marshall, of Northumberland, N. H. She died 1824, leaving 8 children to mourn the loss of an excellent mother, and a husband who never forgot her worth. He was married again to Nancy, daughter of Caleb Marshall, of Northumberland, a second cousin to his first wife. She still lives on the same farm, keeping it in the original name. She had 4 children, making 14 in all. Twelve of the children lived to be men and women grown; seven are now living. The children possessed the same ingenuity of their father, but he, thinking his boys better be farmers, tried to keep them from the shop. This perhaps made them desire to be there more, for when he was going from home he would take the precaution to fasten the windows and doors to keep them out; but as soon as he was out of sight, they would climb upon the roof and get in at the chamber windows, and work till about time for him to come, taking care to put every tool just where they found it. But he soon suspected them, and concluded they might as well follow the bent of their inclination; and not one of them was ever a farmer.

Digitized by Google

We would notice particularly one of the youngest daughters, Eliza Augusta, born June 1, 1828. She was a person of very delicate health, but of great energy and perseverance. When a child she could not endure what most children can, yet it was very hard for her to refrain from engaging in what her active, aspiring mind prompted. She would insist on attending school when she was not able to do so. She entered into all the amusements for young people with an eagerness natural to a lively disposition, and in whatever she engaged rendered herself very agreeable. She had an impression from a child that she should die young, and was often desirous of becoming familiar with sickness and death, when occurring among her friends. She always entertained an idea that she would sometime be a Christian, but it was not till she was eighteen that she manifested that bright and shining example which always marked her after-years. Then her character matured rapidly, and she engaged in everything good and worthy with an avidity which indicated a short life. The Sabbath School became her delight, the Bible her constant companion, and the house of God was to her truly a sanctuary. Still she gave much time to all the literature of the day which is entertaining or beneficial. Her journal was to her as a dear friend. The Missionary cause was, to use her own words, her "darling theme,"—and she would without doubt have devoted herself to its work, but she still felt that her life would be short; and it soon became evident to her friends that she was fast ripening for the grave. She was a cheerful Christian, and she performed many duties faithfully. Yet she claimed no merit of her own, but often said, "My salvation is through amazing grace." Consumption claimed her as its victim. She felt admonished to set her house in order, and she did so. Not one of the numerous friends who visited her in her sickness but received a word of Christian counsel. She arranged her affairs to her entire satisfaction, and in affixing her signature to some last business documents it was with as much alacrity as one would pen a note to a friend, and gave directions for her funeral with as much cheerfulness as one would prepare for a festival, choosing as a text, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." On a beautiful Sabbath, Aug. 8, 1859, her freed spirit entered its everlasting rest—not as one who dies prematurely, but as one who has performed a life-long work and is ready to depart.

DAVID GASKILL

and family moved to Maidstone about the year 1780. He bought a lot of meadow-land on the Connecticut, and in a few years, by industry and economy, they cleared their land from a wilderness to a well cultivated farm, and placed themselves in comfortable circumstances in life. In the year 1788 Mr. G. was elected justice of the peace, and held the office as long as he lived, by annual election. He performed more service as magistrate than all others in town. Towards the close of his life he united with the Methodist church.

Mr. G. was a singular man in many of his ways: When upon his death-bed, Col. Rich Stevens called to see him; when inquired of about his health, he replied that he was growing worse, and could not live long, and requested Mr. Stevens to attend his funeral and, after he was lowered in the grave, to ask in a loud voice—"David Gaskill, is it all well with thee?" and if it was not all well, he would answer. Mr. S. accordingly attended the funeral, and after the mourners had retired, knelt by the grave and fulfilled the last request of his neighbor,—receiving no answer, he went away with the assurance that it was all well with David Gaskill. He was an honest, upright man, and died about the year 1826.

MAJOR JAMES LUCAS,

who was one of the early settlers, contributed much to the settlement and advancement of this town. He was born in Rochester, N. H., March 14, 1752, and moved to the town in the spring of 1785. He entered the army of the Revolution at the age of 24 years, as a paymaster of a regiment in the New Hampshire line, and acted as lieutenant of infantry at the battle of Bennington, under Stark, and was raised to the rank of Major near the close of the war. He held many offices of trust. For many years after the organization of the town, he represented it in the state legislature; was judge of probate for the district of Orange previous to the organization of the county of Essex, and judge of the county court. He resided on the farm now occupied by Jacob Rich, near the mouth of the Ammonoosuc river from the New Hampshire side, and his house was a great resort as a place of traffic for the Indians of the Penobscot and St. Francis tribes, in their hunting excursions through and upon the waters of the Quebec, Androscoggin, Ammonoosuc, Connecticut, and Nulhegan rivers to the waters of the St. Francis, in Canada, when at one time the following incident occurred: Lucas had living with him a youngster by the name of John Jordan who was hoeing corn in the absence of Lucas, opposite the mouth of the Ammonoosuc river which emptied into the Connecticut from the New Hampshire side, where the Indians had an encampment; and the young Indians, while the old ones were gone, came down on the beach with a gun, and pointing at John across the river, would flash powder at him in the pan and perform many insulting antics, till he could bear with them no longer, when he went to the house and asked Mrs. Lucas for the "old Queen's arm" and some duck shot, as there were some ducks in the river, and it was given to him without suspicion, and he returned to his work. Soon the young Indians came down and commenced their former antics until John's patience was exhausted and he blazed away at them and wounded three of their number—one badly. He soon after returned to the house, where he was asked if he had killed any ducks? John answered—no, but he had wounded some; soon he became silent and moody,—when asked by Mrs. Lucas if he was unwell he told what he had done, and she became much alarmed in the absence of her husband as it was coming night. She set herself immediately about secreting John in an empty cask in the cellar. Soon Major Lucas came and learned the difficulty, and the Indians came home about the same time on the other side. Lucas and his wife crossed over to the Indians immediately, and assisted with lights in finding the one badly wounded, who had drawn himself into the tall brakes, and would not answer when called to for fear it was John. However, they all got well, and the old ones became pacified after a time and John made his way, with help, to Eaton, Canada.

Major Lucas died of cancer, at Northumberland, N. H., where he had previously removed in 1835, aged 83 years.

COL. RICH STEVENS

was born in Haverhill, N. H., the son of Isaac and Elizabeth Stevens, the latter a most excellent woman whose praise is in the hearts of all who knew her; was the daughter of John and Catharine Sophia Rich. They moved to Maidstone about the year 1790, when Rich was two years old, and afterward to Stratford, N. H., leaving him on the homestead when he married Fanny, daughter of Jacob Schoff. With industrious habits, and a valuable farm well stocked, they were well situated in life. He was a pleasant, obliging neighbor, and much respected. In 1817 he built the first brick house in the county, on his farm.

Col. Stevens was U. S. deputy marshal some years; also high sheriff of the county of Essex 5 years, and held other offices of trust in town. He learned the art of surveying—for many years was the surveyor principally relied on in this section of the country, and was well versed in the mysteries of the lines in the timbered lands, "up the Hegan." In the year 1829 he surveyed and lotted the 3d division lots in Maidstone.

One morning in the month of March, 1851, he started to cross the Connecticut river on the ice, intending to return at evening. He went safely across in the morning, but during the day it rained and the river rose; at evening he was known to have started to return home across the ice, and was never seen afterward. He left a wife and two sons living.

ISAAC M'LELLAN,

desiring rest from the cares of mercantile business, moved from Portland, Me., to Maidstone in 1807, where he resided some years engaged in the pursuits of agriculture on the valuable farm previously purchased by Gen. William Hull, now owned by Dr. J. Dewey. He then removed to Boston, Mass., and again entered the mercantile profession,—resided there until his death, which took place a few years since. He won the esteem of all by his many excellent traits of character, and his memory has ever been warmly cherished by those in town who shared his acquaintance and friend-ship. His wife, a most estimable woman, was the daughter of Gen. Hull.

HENRY BLAKE M'LELLAN.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM MISS R. T. RICH.*

"Henry Blake M'Lellan, son of Isaac and Eliza M'Lellan, was born at Maidstone about 1810, I think, and died young—not over 22. He received a collegiate education, and was graduated at Andover, Mass.; spent two or three years abroad in travel, and study with Dr. Chalmers, of Edinburg, Scotland, preparatory to entering the ministerial profession. He was much beloved wherever known, for his kind and gentlemanly deportment, intellectual abilities and devoted piety. His death, which occurred soon after his return home, was greatly lamented by a large circle who had anticipated for him a life of great usefulness and eminence in the church. His remains rest at Mount Auburn."

[A biography of his life (12 mo. some 300 or more pages) was published soon after his death, which has been in possession of the writer, but was unfortunately loaned to the county historian, and in his library at the

* Daughter of the historian of Maidstone.

Digitized by Google

time that it was lately destroyed by fire.* The work is not now extant, and it is not known where another copy can be found,—otherwise, of this talented and once promising young man a full and complete biography might be herein given.—Ed.]

MAJ. HAINS FRENCH.

The father of the subject of this article was one of the early settlers of Maidstone. He emigrated to the town from Walpole, N. H., shortly before the Revolutionary war. He had a large family. The oldest son was John, named after his father. He was a captain in the continental army and well acquainted with Washington.

Hains, the second son, was born about the year 1760, and at the early age of 15 became a waiter of Major Whitcomb in the Revolutionary war, and subsequently enlisted. He went with the army of Gen. Montgomery down Lake Champlain and was at the siege of Quebec in December, 1775. At the departure of the American troops, he was unable to accompany them on account of having the small pox, and fell into the hands of the British as a prisoner of war. Here he suffered great hardships from ill treatment and neglect. At length he was sent around by water to New York,—there being an exchange of prisoners,—and after an absence of two years came back to Maidstone. When he knocked at the door and went into his father's house, not even his own mother knew him, he was so much emaciated. In 1784 he was married to Irene Learnard, whose father then resided in Columbia, N. H., and settled down to farming for a few years. From this marriage there were 5 children, his wife dying in 1799. In 1804 he was married again to Sally Hugh, by whom there were 4 children—Eusebia, Hains, Volney and Sarah.

Having no early advantages of an education, Hains French neglected no opportunity to acquire the rudiments of a common school education, even after his marriage. It is a well authenticated fact that his first wife, among other things, taught him to write. Having an investigating mind, however, he read much of the general literature of the day, such as was then published. He was extremely fond of the study of ancient and modern history and spent much of his leisure time in perusing the best authors to be had. He also took a lively interest in the subject of the different forms of government, and was well versed in the diplomatic tactics of foreign courts. He was an ardent republican and a great friend of the Jeffersonian school of politicians.

Soon after the organization of the county of Essex, Mr. French was elected as a member of the council of the state and was either elected to that body or the house of representatives for 12 years. He was also county clerk for nearly the same length of time, and held several other offices of trust in the county and in his own town. He was once appointed Judge of the county, but declined to serve.

Being clerk of the court, it naturally led him to the investigation of the principles of law, and from that to a small practice, in which it is said he was very successful. One of his early efforts, it may not be out of place to remark here, was not only characteristic

*The only library of any importance that we found in Essex County was that of Hiram A. Cutting. It was considerably antiquarian, and though the loss was only about one-third, it was one not only to the owner and the county, but to the State. With the library destroyed was also an observatory and valuable Indian cabinet. We learn by a letter from the gentleman since the above was in print: "I lost about 500 volumes, some of which were rare and works not extant, of considerable value; and my own pecuniary loss was about $6000, but the ladies in the place got up a subscription and gave me one of Lillie's patent combination-lock safes; and the gentlemen drew up a paper subscribing about $1000, to be presented to me on condition that I would stay here and rebuild—which I have done, and it is mostly paid. My self-recording anemometer, that records by clock-work the direction of the wind for every hour of the day and night—also one of Robinson's anemometers, which records its velocity, were lost by the conflagration, but new ones are put on the top of my new building, as heretofore. I have again built on the same ground—two story, with an observatory on the top. I also saved from the conflagration my valuable microscope." The microscope alluded to is a French instrument, and has the highest magnifying power of any instrument we have ever examined. It magnifies the object 15,000 times above the size seen by the naked eye. By a former letter, written immediately after the fire had occurred, we regretted to learn amid the loss in the observatory was included the fine old telescope through which, while at L., we had looked at the moon and stars by night, or the White Mountains by day. Their outline and summits, over the river eastward in New Hampshire, are seen well from here with the naked eye,—the day being clear, a grand look-off-to with the telescope. The telescope was the largest in the state, that of the Vermont University at Burlington being excepted, and one of a prize-set of astronomical and meteorological instruments from Paris. Mr. Cutting has recorded meteorological observations for some over 20 years. He had also at this time a collection of fine pictures. Speaking of the latter, in his letter just received, he observes: "I have still 80 or 90 fine pictures—near a dozen of them oil-paintings—which are rare in this section." It is not our wont to individualize among contributors to our pages, editorial flattery being intolerable—and as unto a historian or contributor we do not here. His pages we leave to their own merits; yet as we have never found a better friend to our magazine—a historian or gentleman who has labored more to promote its circulation in his section, or at home and abroad, or never one who has been more ready to proffer any practical assistance, according to his means, it is but just this one other—to the long-laboring historian—pleasant fact be recorded.—Ed.

Digitized by Google

of the liberality of the man in religious matters, but a chronological event in the history of the separation of church and state in that quarter of New England:

It appears that at that early period the tithing system, as known in England before then and subsequently, was in full force in all or most all of the New England states. A man had neglected to pay the minister-rates, and his only cow was seized to satisfy them. Mr. French was called upon to defend, and he entered upon the subject with as much zeal as if the man was to have been burnt at the stake unless he abjured heretical doctrines. Able counsel was procured to sustain the church party, and elaborate arguments made at the trial. But the doctrine was ignored that men were obliged by law to sustain a church whose doctrines perhaps were repudiated by his own conscience. Both he and every liberal minded man considered it a most signal triumph.

Mr. French was proverbially a social man, and the soul of a gathering among the early settlers for an evening before the old-fashioned fireplace filled with a blazing fire. To have a good practical joke or pun, a song and a story, were the best kind of an entertainment—believing in the old couplet:

"That a little fun now and then
Is relish'd by the best of men."

The war of 1812 found Mr. French engaged upon his small farm in Maidstone, in poor health, following his usual pursuits. In the legislature that fall he became acquainted with James Fisk, then a sitting member, who was afterward elected to Congress. Mr. Fisk the following winter procured his appointment as Maj. of the 31st Regt. U. S. infantry in the division commanded by Gen. Wade Hampton. Notwithstanding his feebleness from a severe illness of which he had just recovered, and the advice of friends, Maj. French immediately accepted his commission and proceeded to Burlington with his regiment. No arguments could overcome the loyalty and the observance of what he viewed a duty he owed to his country. With him, nearly the same time, enlisted his three sons, Homer, John and Ovid, the last being only 17 years of age. Homer was killed at the battle of Chippewa, while storming a battery, [illegible] 17, 1814, and the other two served [illegible] war.

During the summer, Maj. French was engaged in drilling and disciplining his regiment at Burlington, but still in poor health. In the early part of the fall of the same year, an attack had been planned upon Montreal by the uniting of Hampton's and Gen. Wilkinson's armies together, the latter proceeding down the St. Lawrence. From Burlington our forces were ordered to move on to Plattsburg, and then by the way of Chateaugay River down to the St. Lawrence, to form this junction. As the army advanced the weather became cold and rainy, and the roads almost impassable. When they arrived at a little village in the northern part of the state of New York, called Chateaugay Four Corners, Maj. French's health became so poor he was obliged to stop. At this spot he lingered along a few days and expired about the middle of November of the same year, only regretting that his life and health could not be prolonged until his country had subdued her enemies.

The subject of this memoir was literally a self-made man of more than ordinary natural endowments—patriotic in his devotion to his country, strictly honest and honorable in his deal, faithful in all offices of public trust, and died lamented. He was a brave officer, and sacrificed his life for his country. His last word was a prayer for a prolongation of his life to battle her cause. But "The car of victory, the plume, the wreath,

Defend not from the bolt of fate the brave;
No note the clarion of renown can breathe
To alarm the long night of the grave,
Or check the headlong haste of time's o'erwhelming wave."

HON. VOLNEY FRENCH

was born in Maidstone, and is the youngest son of Major Hains French. His early advantages for an education were very limited, being only those derived from a common school two or three months in the year, at the distance of nearly two miles from his home. But storms and bad roads had no terrors for him. He is remembered here as a close student, more intent on mastering the tasks of the school-room than joining in the usual sports of the scholars, with the exception of a favorite amusement—that of skating—of which he was always fond whenever tempted by the smooth crystal surface of the Connecticut. From Maidstone he pursued his academic studies at Concord, Vt., and Lancaster and Meriden, N. H., and thence he entered the University of Vermont. His health and means failing, he left Burlington and entered the law office of Messrs. Gay & Buchan, at Rochester, N. Y. Here he stopped three years and finished his profession. During all this time he was entirely dependent upon his own exertions for the means of subsistence. Frequently, it is said, his exchequer was so low that he was obliged to live in a garret on crackers and cheese.

In 1840 he joined the army of emigrants that were moving on to settle the West. He has ever been regarded as an upright lawyer and a successful practitioner. Among other offices which he has held he has been twice elected judge of his own county. By strict integrity and close application to business, he acquired in a few years a competency; but having more taste for literary pursuits than the legal profession, some years since he closed his books and his office door. In the fall of 1854 he left for the old world, and spent two years in traveling through some of the most interesting portions of Europe, Asia and Africa.

From one of his published letters, written at Thebes, in Upper Egypt, the following extract is made to show the extent of his travels and researches:

"There is one thing," he says, "that I have aimed at—variety of matter, for there is so much material I had only to choose my subject. I described to the reader a winter passage over the ocean,—the commercial city of Southampton, and then Paris with all its splendors, its gayeties, its dissipation, its churches and works of art. I then took him through the valley of the Rhone, calling at Nice and Genoa, to the eternal city, Rome—the home of the Cæsars—and pointed out to him her palaces, her churches, and all the places within her of great historic interest. Leaving thesepulchers of the great dead here and the catacombs of the poor persecuted Christians, I took him to Naples and showed him the buried cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum; ascended Vesuvius, descended to Avernus and passed over the shadowy Styx. With the sun we went northward, not forgetting to call at beautiful Florence and take a ride in the gondolas of Venice, along the canals bordered by her marble palaces. Striking over the German plains by battle-fields and castles—famous in legend and song—we arrived at the Baltic, took a hasty peep at Stockholm, and the lovely Malaar lake, and thence passed over to Norway—the New England of Europe—and saw her cool and limpid streams, her ever-green hills, lakes and mountains. But night here had become day, and we hastened towards Switzerland. Here, if the reader caught half the inspiration which I felt, he must have been pleased with the cataract, the glacier, the avalanche and the crevices, down into which the chamois, bred in the mountain-tops, looked with dread. Psiasng into Italy once more, we glided over two of the most beautiful sheets of water the eye can rest on—lakes Maggiore and Como; recrossed the Alps into the Tyrol, heard the chime bells of Salsburg, that once each day recalled the memory of Mozart, and halted for a week in Munich. Thence we went through the whole valley of the Danube, passed over the Black Sea and found ourselves in the land of the Orient. From thence to ancient Alexandria, by Athens and Smyrna; and from thence, passing by ruined temples and cities, up the Nile to this place, a point upwards of a thousand miles from the sea. Thus roaming through parts of the four continents within forty degrees of latitude and one hundred and ten of longitude, learning the history of the countries passed, and the manners and customs of the people, visiting the palaces of the great, and the huts of the poor, the tombs of kings and emperors and the pit prepared for the pilgrim."

From here Mr. F. visited Syria and Palestine, and thence again through the Mediterranean and Italy to Belgium and Holland, and afterwards spent four months in traveling through Great Britain. At Jerusalem, the Dead Sea, and Jordan, he spent some weeks. While at the former place he visited the Holy Sepulcher. Of what he saw in it he says:

"The main object of attraction in the whole building, and around which there is always a great crowd, is what is called the sepulcher itself. This is a small but beautiful temple-like building, standing in the center of the church. The marble material of which it is built has a rosy hue, and was brought from the Dead Sea. Led by a priest, we entered the holy of holies. We were here shown the stone (according to tradition) on which the angel sat; also the stone that was laid against the door of the sepulcher. Stooping, we were again conducted to another inner room, flooded with lights from lamps of gold which are continually burning, containing the sarcophagus into which the body of Christ was placed after the crucifixion. From here we next descended to the vault hewed out of the solid rock, where was shown the sepulchered vault of Joseph of Arimathea. From here we were taken into various parts of the church, both above and below, and were shown the place where the Saviour was confined previous to his crucifixion—the stone on which he sat while being crowned—the place where his garments were parted—the pillar on which he sat during his flagellation—the fissure in the rocks that were rent in twain—the room in which Mary, his mother, sat during the crucifixion; and, lastly, the place where the Empress Helena found, among a pile of rubbish, the true cross. The latter place was in a subterranean vault, many feet under the church, but brilliantly lighted with lamps. The crowds of processions moving solemnly along in various directions, with different orders of priests, the chanting of music, accompanied by the deep tones of the organ, the flitting past of spectral shadows of pale men and women, whose constant vigils make them appear to belong more to the dead than living, the low and sepulchral voices of the half-famished beggars that ask for alms,—all taken together invest the place with a reverential awe that cannot be easily effaced from the memory. But those who excited my sympathy and pity the most, were the poor worn out pilgrims who had come from foreign lands to see the spot where their Redeemer died, breathing on their lips from their hearts—

Digitized by Google

'Blest land of Judea! thrice hallowed of song,
Where the holiest of memories pilgrim-like throng;
In the shade of the palms, by the shores of the sea,
On the hills of thy beauty, my heart is with thee.'

These poor creatures, with wasted limbs, blanched cheeks and sunken eyes, would be there early and late upon their bended knees; and, from their earnest looks and anxious countenances, I have not the least reason to doubt the sincerity and earnestness of their devotions."

As has been before said, Mr. F. still resides in Wisconsin, enjoying his "otium cum dignitate" with that ease and independence only known to cultivated minds.

DR. JOHN DEWEY.

BY WM. HEYWOOD, ESQ., OF LANCASTER, N. H.*

Dr. John Dewey, for many years a resident of Guildhall, and before his death for many years a resident of Maidstone, was one of the remarkable men of Essex County. He was born at Hanover, N. H., Dec. 5, 1794. He received his education in the common schools and academy of his native town, and was educated in his profession mainly under the tuition of Dr Nathan Smith. Dr. Smith was a professor in the medical college, and a man of great learning and skill in his profession. Dr. Dewey received his medical degree from Dartmouth College, and commenced the practice of his profession when very young, in Eaton, in Canada. He remained there till he was attacked with a disease in his eyes, which for a time threatened him with blindness. After recovering from this infliction, he established himself for a time at New Chester, now Hill, N. H., thence he removed to Lancaster, N. H., and about 1822 he established himself at Guildhall. For nearly twenty years he was the leading physician in this section. Here he became a practitioner of large experience and great skill and judgment. No man was more relied upon in cases of difficulty and danger. It was, I think, in the year 1824, that a terrible disease in the form of dysentery visited this section of country, and the mortality was very great. During this sickness, which continued for nearly two months, Dr. Dewey was constantly upon the ride and in attendance upon the sick, and for weeks did not take off his clothes to lie down for a night's sleep. And it was universally considered that he treated the disease with success and skill.

He gave up his profession as a business about 1840, upon becoming involved in business of other kinds that required his whole time. He was married to Mary P., daughter of Capt. Thos. Carlisle, of Lancaster, N. H., in February, 1832. In 1841 he moved to a beautiful farm in Maidstone, where from his door he could overlook 200 acres of good interval, part of his possessions; and here ten years later, when unthought-of things come to pass, he could see for miles on the opposite side of the Connecticut River the cars of the Grand Trunk Railroad as they passed to and fro from the chief city of Maine to the chief city of Canada. Here he and his accomplished wife kept a most hospitable home; and many have been the times that acquaintances far and near have assembled there to enjoy such entertainment as no one else could dispense,—for the Doctor, besides his liberality, had the manners of an accomplished gentleman; and he was also a man of fine proportions and presence. The stranger also from city or country who might chance to stop in the neighborhood was sure to be invited to partake of their hospitalities. And there was no ostentation in this, but such generosity was a characteristic. And the poor never went hungry from his door,—many have been the bagsfull and the basketsfull and the back-loads with which the destitute of his neighborhood have been loaded from his stores.

Dr. Dewey was a man of extraordinary perseverance and great energy of character. In politics he was a whig, and later a republican, and it never was with half assent that he supported and advocated the measures of his party. I find for certain that for 12 years he was a member of the Legislature of Vermont, and as I have not full access to means of information, I am not sure but that he was longer. His first election was to the House in 1826, and his last to the Senate in 1851. He was also for several years judge of the county court, a member of the council of censors, and for several years he received appointments from the Legislature, such as director of the state prison, &c. The Doctor was able in debate, and many of his speeches would be a credit to any debater and worthy of any legislative body. But of these nothing remains but in the memory of hearers, as in those days—and it is mostly so now—none of the debates of that body were reported. In the course of his business he accumulated in his hands a large amount of lands, consisting of many thousand acres in Essex county and in the adjoining county of Coos in N. H. To pay the taxes annually on so large an amount of unproductive property absorbed quite an income. To most persons it seemed that he misjudged in his expectation that these would some day become very valuable. But the event has proved the correctness of his judgment. In the latter part of his business-life he had met with many losses. But the increase of the value of timber has made these wild lands valuable, and these were left to his family, and make an ample estate.

* A native of Essex Co.

Digitized by

Dr. Dewey entered into the support of the government with zeal to put down the rebellion, and lent every aid in his power to that end.

In a summer evening he rode to the house of a neighbor, where in course of a talk upon political affairs he became excited, not from opposition (for in political opinion they did not differ), and on his way home he was attacked by a paralysis of the brain, and when he arrived home he was insensible, and was carried into the house and died the next morning, which was July 11, 1862.

No man in all the community could be more widely missed. It is always remarked how soon the community adjust themselves to the loss of any individual, no matter how great a space he may have occupied in the business and affairs of his section of country. But to the family and near friends of such a man the void does not close, and every day those that depended upon him feel that no one else can perform for them what he was accustomed to do, nor make whole the circle broken by his being taken away.

MAIDSTONE LAKE.

This beautiful sheet of water is situated near the western boundary of the town. It is three miles in length and one in width. Its waters are clear, deep and silvery, containing a species of trout called lunge. In 1853 a dam was made at the outlet, and the waters raised 6 feet, affording the most desirable water-power. At the same time a saw-mill wes erected by Mr. Norris, which has manufactured large quantities of lumber, and is now in operation.

This lake is surrounded entirely by a forest of pine, spruce and hemlock. On the eastern side of the lake, near the base of a hill, is a cave which is occasionally visited by explorers of nature's wonders, some of whom have traversed its subterranean passage to the distance of 200 feet.

This portion of the town, of about five thousand acres, is very well adapted to cultivation and improvement; is covered with pine, spruce and hemlock, interspersed with birch, cedar, and rock-maple, and is watered by Paul stream, which has its rise in Granby and Ferdinand; running east and receiving the waters of the lake, finds its way through the corner of Brunswick, and empties into Connecticut river. This stream embraces superior mill-privileges, and undoubtedly is not surpassed in northern Vermont.

In 1854 a large saw-mill was erected on this stream, in Maidstone, which annually manufactures 2,000,000 feet of lumber, which goes over the Grand Trunk railway to Portland market. Both the above mills are owned by the firm of Brown and Follansby.

There are two smaller saw-mills in town; one on the mill brook, built the past season on the site of an old one useless from age, by Z. K. Washburn; the other, on a small brook on the farm of James Follansby, and is now owned by J. Follansby & Joseph Rich. The first saw-mill in town was built on this brook by Moody Rich, in 1828.

This town is particularly rich in interval land, having more acres, it is said, than any other town in Vermont, on Connecticut river, and is almost exclusively an agricultural town.

Digitized by Google

The village of Guildhall being near the line between that town and Maidstone, accommodates one as well as the other with mechanics' stores, post-office, church, &c., &c.

REMINISCENCE OF MAIDSTONE.

Historic little Maidstone, birth place of heroes (see Biography), located picturesquely up toward the highlands, or upon the upper banks of the fair Connecticut, is, for loveliness of landscape, unsurpassed in all Switzerland-like New England. Beautiful Maidstone! we had not looked to find another such picture-spot as Chimney Point, where resides Judge Strong, our historian, who opens the series of the Addison County towns in this volume. We came one mild, sweet day in autumn to the home of the honorable historian of Maidstone—happy dweller upon the Connecticut, upon his farm, four bows in the great river infolding, and he the only man in the town who was living when it was organized. Here we lingered several days,—here, and in the delightful family of the intellectual, social, venerable Dr. Dewey and his no less superior and excellent wife. The venerable Doctor resided a mile or two higher or further up the river bank than our venerable Maidstone historian—one or two miles further up, the ground gradually rising as you go up. The Doctor dwelling in patriarchal simplicity, almost, in his low wood-brown farmhouse, and he the largest landholder in Essex county. He has since died.* The Doctor was well known at Montpelier, the state capitol. We had been specially recommended to him for a friend to our historical enterprise in his county before we entered Essex, and we had met him at Guildhall, and he had invited us to his home and hospitality before we reached Maidstone. He was the finest spirit we met in all that tour. He had a fine, thoughtful countenance, and his hair was very white. Yes, he had as handsome white hair and beard as we ever saw. It was long and heavy, rather, and snowy. His face was venerable—intelligent, highly, somewhat enthusiastic—had been touched with a forecast. It was the first year of the great national struggle, or Southern rebellion, and his quick, sympathetic spirit had already familiarized—recognised and seen what was coming—or looked at least into the thick of those days coming on so ripe with battles and assassinations and treason. Yet his face beamed very serenely through the clouding, and his voice—the voice is always very much like the face—was genial and inspiring. There he lived. The one-story, weather-colored house sitting upon a little elevation upon your left as you came up toward, and to which a narrow path wound familiarly up, rather pleased at first, as making no effort to divert from the beauty of the eastern landscape developing upon the river bank upon the right all the way as you came up, bursting upon you or unfolding in new picturesqueness and loveliness here, though culminating rather at a point a little lower down. One of those bows, already alluded to,* in the Connecticut, five bows which from the summit of Byron mountain in this town, are said to distinctly write out or trace in the meadows of Maidstone the text of freedom and creed of Vermont—Union. We would stay forever! Such was the feeling—impression—effect—such the attraction—earth, air, river, meadows in the sun, mountains over beyond, those famous white giants of New Hampshire, just far enough distanced in landscape, seen at their best advantage here, if we except one view from Lunenburgh—and that but for its fuller and more majestic sweep and a little bolder rise in the mountain outlines. Fair Maidstone—but it wants the pen of a Harriet Beecher Stowe, the same as which in her "Pearl of Orr's Island" she traced the Maine coast—mosses and evergreens. We might have been a poet had we have been born here, and the history of Maidstone yet have remained unwritten; or had we lived in classic days, those same days when the same muse presided over poetry and history. But as it is and was, we went into the little low-roofed house on the swell of the bank on our left, up that inviting, simple, narrow path, and within the lowly door, to be sort of imparadised in those little comforts, aye, luxuries, that may sometimes be found to line the so simple looking farm-house or cottage, outwardly. The cozy, open fireplace was so inviting, the turkey roasted so deliciously, the cranberries so fresh, and then the low chamber-room where you slept had such little, soft carpeted stairs winding soon and quietly up thereto, and so bright paperings therein, wall and curtains, such cheerful red quilts and rugs

* See page 1042.

* See County Chapter—Scenery of the Connecticut, by H. A. Cutting.

and cushions, &c., &c. You found the house so like a bird's nest—brown without but feather-lined within; you visited so good below, and slept so good above, you concluded these people in Essex about the happiest people in the world.—Editor.

[More names who were inhabitants in Maidstone, Vt., in the year 1786: Caleb Amy, John Rich, James Lucas, Enoch Hall, Jeremy Merrell, John Hugh, John French, —— Tory, Hains French, Benjamin Byrum, Joseph Wooster, Reuben Hawkins, Abraham Gile.]

MAIDSTONE VOLUNTEERS.

Names.	Co.	Regt.	When enlisted.
John J. Rich,	I	3	April, 1861.
Horace H. Rich,	I	3	April, 1861.
Jos. W. Taylor,*	I	3	April, 1861.
Jos. Hinman,*	I	3	November, 1861.
Moody B. Rich,	I	3	November, 1861.
Wm. J. S. Dewey,	I	3	September, 1862.
Charles Ford,*	I	3	September, 1862.
Albee Elliott,*	I	3	September, 1862.
Geo. England,*	I	3	September, 1862.
Fred England,*	I	3	September, 1862.
Wm. W. Walker,	I	3	September, 1862.
L. C. Luther,			January, 1864.
Pat. Gleason,			January, 1864.
Wm. W. Walker,*			January, 1864.
Jos. H. Watson,	I	3	March, 1864.
John J. Rich*	I	3	March, 1864.
E. B. Smith,*	I	3	March, 1864.
Geo. A. Ford,	I	3	March, 1864.
Charles Keeney,			September, 1864.
J. M. Lund,			September, 1864.
And'w J. Pottle,	K	8	September, 1864.
John Shallon,	I	3

VICTORY.

BY GEO. A. APPLETON.

Victory, a town situated in the south-western portion of Essex Co., is in lat. 44° 32′, lon. 5° 5′; bounded N. W. by Burke and Kirby, N. E. by Granby and East Haven, S. E. by Lunenburg and Concord, and S. W. by Concord and Kirby.

It was designed originally to contain 23.040 acres, and a tract of land lying between Victory and Concord—known as Bradley's Vale—by an act of the Legislature of 1856 being divided and a portion annexed to Victory, it now contains about 2500 acres more than its original territory.

It was granted Nov. 6, 1780, and chartered Sept. 6, 1781, to Capt. Ebenezer Fisk and 64 associates, reserving 5 rights of 300 acres, viz. the college right, grammar school right, minister's right, church right and common school right.

*Names with star attached, died in the service.

The surface is diversified, but though literally surrounded by ranges of mountains it is not comparatively very uneven, a large portion of the town being included in the valley of the Moose river. But as the distance increases from the river, the land becomes more elevated, until it forms a portion of Burke mountain on the west, an elevation of some 3,000 feet; Mount Tug and Miles' mountain on the E. and S. E., and Kirby mountain on the S. W.

There is also an elevation on the north, on the line between Victory and Granby called Round Top There is but one mountain, proper, wholly within the limits of the town —Umpire mountain, an elevation of about 2000 feet.

STREAMS.

The Moose river rises in East Haven, and runs in nearly a southerly direction through the town, affording several excellent mill privileges. Here was once the hunting-ground of the Indian, and, in later years the game with which their forests abounded, was pursued and taken by the white man. So numerous were the moose which once roamed over these hills and through this valley, that the river was called "Moose river." There are also several other streams which empty into this river, as Alder brook, Umpire or Bog brook on the west, Granby stream on the east, which are sufficiently large for manufacturing purposes.

The timber along the banks of the Moose river, and its tributaries is mostly evergreen, consisting of pine tamarack, hemlock, spruce, fir, and cedar: together with a small quantity of elm, maple and birch. As the land becomes elevated there is a much larger proportion of the timber hard wood, consisting of birch, beech and sugar maple; and in some sections, especially in the west part of the town, there is a very large proportion of the latter, affording excellent sugar orchards, from which considerable quantities of sugar are manufactured.

The soil is generally fertile, and will compare favorably with adjoining towns. It is well adapted to the growing of potatoes, and most kinds of English grains.

In some parts of the town there is an abundance of granite, while other portions are comparatively free from stone of any kind, and there is but a very small proportion of the town which can properly be considered waste land; or but little, which, if properly cultivated, would not richly repay the labor of the husbandman. It is well watered by a great number of freely-flowing, never-failing springs—as good as can anywhere be found.

Digitized by Google

Two miles and a half from the southern boundary of the town, at the junction of the Bog brook with the Moose river, is a tract of land known as the Bog. It consists of some 3,000 acres of low marshy land, which is usually flowed once a year, and frequently oftener. Near the mouth of the brook there is what is supposed to be a beaver meadow. Including some small additions which have been made within a few years, there are 50 or 60 acres which have been used, for years, as a mow-field. It is said that it was once so soft that a man by stepping upon it could shake half an acre. It is now, however, so much hardened that carting can be done over the most of it with safety.

"At a meeting of the original proprietors held at Guildhall, Oct. 6, 1798, it was voted to accept the survey of the township of Victory, which had been made that season by Jonas Baker, Esq., under the direction of David Hopkinson, Esq.,—and also to allow the account of David Hopkinson, Esq., for making the survey, and other incidental charges, £150 3s. 11d; his other account, £87. 11s. 11d. for opening the road through said township. Hezekiah May, Esq., was appointed an agent to the General Assembly of the state of Vermont,—at their session which was to meet at Vergennes during that same month,—for the purpose of preparing a petition to that Honorable House, for a tax of three cents per acre on all the lands in the township of Victory (public rights excepted), for the purpose of making a good wagon road through said township towards St. Johnsbury and Danville."

This was the same road which had been partially opened by David Hopkinson, Esq., the summer previous, 1798, about 14 years before there were any inhabitants in town, and is the first road we have any account of. This, however, was so badly located, and so imperfectly made, that it never became a traveled road. Some portions of it can be easily traced at the present day.

About the year 1812 James Elliot commenced on the lot now occupied by Mr. John Shorer, being on the road from Guildhall to Burke, and on the line between Victory and Granby. He remained there some three or four years and left. The first child born in town was Curtis Elliot, named in honor of Gen. Daniel Curtis, of Windsor, Vt., and who was one of the original proprietors.

The first permanent inhabitant of the town was John Shorer, who moved from Sanbornton, N. H., to Granby in 1815, and in 1822 moved to Victory. He was followed that same year by Reuben Sterner, and in the fall of 1825 by Mr. Asa Wells, originally from Connecticut, and by Isaac R. Houston. Thus was commenced the settlement which is now known as North Victory.

The settlement of West Vitcory was commenced in the year 1827, by Timothy Minor, who moved his family, consisting of a wife and three children, from Lyndon, on the 17th day of January. Previous to this, however, two men, with their families—Clark Ranney and Eben Clark—moved from Westminster, Vt., to what was then called the Vale, but which now belongs to Victory.

In the fall of 1829 Mr. James Towle and Mr. Archibald Starks moved from St. Johnsbury, and in the spring of 1830 they were followed by Mr. Jonathan Hill, who moved from the same place. The first child born in West Victory was Fanny M. Minor, April 17, 1827, and who is now living in Lawrence, Mass.

The first death in West Victory, Enoch W. Sanborn—died August, 1842—a child about one year and half old. The first grown person, Mrs. Jeremiah Ingraham, died May 2, 1848, being more than 20 years after the settlement was commenced. First marriage, Jona. Lawrence and Angeline Towle, Oct. 2. 1852. The first school, consisting of 8 scholars, was taught by Hannah Bean, in the spring of 1832. The first saw-mill was built by Joseph Woods, about the year 1830, on Moose river, on the line between Victory and Bradley's Vale. Soon after other families moved into that part of the town, and formed the neighborhood now known as South Victory.

There are now in operation three saw-mills, together with other machinery connected with them, and two others which are at present out of repair and not doing business.

The town once contained a large amount of pine lumber, there being some 3000 acres covered more or less thickly. On one lot 3536 pine trees have been counted, estimated,

Digitized by Google

25 years ago, at 1,500,000 feet. There was also an unlimited amount of spruce, hemlock and cedar; so that the lumber business, in some form, has been quite extensively carried on from the early settlement of the town to the present time.

Previous to 1841 most of the lumber cut was run down the Moose and Passumpsic rivers to the Connecticut, or manufactured at mills along those streams.

About that time Mr. Willard Read built a mill in the southern part of Bradley's Vale (now North Concord), where he commenced manufacturing lumber taken from this town. This mill was subsequently purchased by Mr. Dudley P. Hall, now of East Burke. Another large mill was built upon the opposite side of the river, where he was extensively engaged for 9 years in the manufacture of lumber that was taken from this town, amounting to about 7,000,000 feet; and other mills were soon after built upon the Moose river, which have been more or less extensively engaged in the manufacture of pine lumber, Probably not less than 20,000,000 of pine, spruce and hemlock have been cut within the last 30 years from lands in this town.

Large quantities of cedar have also been taken to adjoining towns for fencing, and along the line of the Passumsic railroad for ties. Mr. Nat S. Damon employed 20 hands one winter getting out cedar, a large portion of which was used for railroad purposes.

Victory has become somewhat celebrated also for its blueberry fields. Fires, which have been set designedly and by accident, have run extensively through those sections where the timber has been mostly cut off, and blueberry bushes have come in spontaneously and in such abundance that during the autumn months thousands resort to them for the purpose of gathering the fruit with which they are often so heavily loaded. For the last two years, however, there have been no blueberries of any amount in this section; but during the fall of 1859 and 1860 they were so plenty that a pailful could be picked in a very few minutes. From the time they commenced to ripen until they were gone, there was a "regular rush' to the blueberry fields. The road side, barns, and barnyards along the nearest available points were lined and filled with horses and carriages while the fields were inhabited by scores at a time from adjoining towns, and sometimes from a distance of 30 or 40 and even 50 miles, and the most of them would come out with their basket filled.

Previous to 1823 there was no road leading through the town which could be traveled by teams, and but one way of getting out in any direction, and that through Granby to Guildhall. There was a line of marked trees to Lunenburgh, and a foot path over which people sometimes walked; but it seemed very desirable that there should be a road which would admit of travel through the town to adjoining towns; and, consequently, in that year, a road was laid out near the line, between Granby and Victory, leading from Lunenburgh to Burke, and a portion of it worked. With this road the Guildhall road intersected, so that a direct road from Guildhall to Burke through Victory was also formed, and there has since been a road opened connected with this and leading to St. Johnsbury through Concord, a distance of 18 miles.

Victory did not become an organized town until 1841, the meeting for that purpose being called by Ansel Hannum, justice of the peace. Isaac R. Houston was chosen moderator; Loomis Wells, town clerk; Jonathan Hill, Ransom Hall, John Gates, Chauncey Hildreth, selectmen; Loomis Wells, town treasurer; Hubbard Gates, first constable; Abraham Sanborn, James Towle and Ansel Hannum, listers; Timothy Miner, Chauncey Hildreth and Moses C. Kimball, auditors; Levi P. Shores, Joseph Nickerson and Nathan Boles, fence viewers; I. R. Houston, John Shores, town grand jurors; Jonathan Lawrence, Nathan Boles, Elisha Gustin, highway surveyors; Joseph Hall, Chauncey Hildreth, county grand jurors; Levi P. Shores, Moses C. Kimball and Orin Hall, petit jurors.

Population in 1841, 140: in 1850, 168; in 1860, 212. Grand list in 1844, 252,15; in 1850, 379,90; in 1855, 522,77; in 1860, 535,27; in 1862, 521, 43. The first representative was Loomis Wells, who represented the town in 1841 and '42; Ransom Hall, in 1843 and '44; Harlan Keyes, in 1845; James Towl, in 1846 and '47; Jonathan Hill, in 1848; James Towl, in 1849 and '50; Wm. Stearns, in 1851 and '52; Cyrus Smith, in 1853; James B. Hill, in 1854 and '55; Charles Hall, in 1856; Willard H. Kneeland, in 1857 and '58; Warren Harrington, in 1859, and '60; Isaac R. Houston, in 1861, '63, '64 and '65; Geo. A. Appleton in 1866.

Digitized by Google

First P. O., established March 24, 1858. Natt S. Damon, P. M. The present P. M., Willard H. Kneeland, appointed July 11, 1859.

There are at present 4 school districts in town, in which schools are sustained two terms during the year. In two of them, new school-houses have been built recently.

There is but one religious society in town, and that Methodist (see history by Rev. J. Evans). There are, however, some Congregational people in North Victory who are connected with the church in Granby, and virtually belong to that town, so far as sabbath schools, and all religious purposes are concerned.—May, 1867.

As this town has been but partially settled, and that comparatively recently, there are but few incidents connected with its early history which would be of general interest. Unlike many other towns, most of the early settlers are now living here. Mr. John Shores now remains upon the farm where he first commenced nearly 40 years ago; Mr. Hill now lives on the farm upon which he first moved, and has just commenced his 80th year—being the oldest man in town. As was the case with many of the early settlers of our own and other states, they were obliged to endure the hardships and privations incident upon a first settlement, which would at the present time be thought almost incredible.

Two children have been lost in the woods since the settlement of the town. One, Geo. Minor, son of Timothy Minor, a boy about four years old, was lost April 14, 1827. He left the house soon after noon without hat, coat, or shoes, and intending to go to the sugar place, but lost his way and wandered about in the woods. Search was immediately made for him, but without success. It was renewed again the next morning as soon as people could see. About one hundred had collected from adjoining towns at sunrise, and by noon three hundred more.

They again commenced the search, assuring the mother that if he was found they would fire one gun; if dead, three; if ALIVE, would blow a bugle. Near four in the afternoon a party of some twenty was about giving up the search in a particular direction, saying that no child, or hardly a wild beast could go any further in consequence of the windfalls, when they heard the little fellow calling to them and saying, "I am coming." The signal-gun was fired and heard by that almost distracted mother. None but those who have been placed in similar circumstances, can imagine her feelings; for as she listened now, was it her darling boy which she was about to clasp once more in her arms, that was found alive, or had he been devoured by the wild beasts which then prowled so thickly through the forests, and had left his mangled corpse, or his tattered garment, or perhaps a hand, or a foot only was left? But soon the shrill notes of the bugle were distinctly heard, and the mother knew that her son which "was lost, is found." He is now in the army of the United States.

The other child, was a little girl about three years old, belonging to Mr. Moses Emerson. She was lost about noon in the summer of 1858, who after being out all night was found the next day a considerable distance in the woods, sleeping quietly where she had settled down from fatigue.

June, 1863.

DEA. ASA WELLS.

BY LOOMIS WELLS, OF GRANBY.

Asa Wells was born in Bolton, Tolland county, Ct., May 29, 1770. Being of a slender constitution, and a little deaf from childhood, he remained upon the home farm, while his father and older brothers served in the Revolutionary war.

Sept. 13, 1795, he married Martha Loomis by whom he had 8 children; four of them only survived him.

In 1807 he removed to Tolland, Mass., and in 1817 to Lunenburgh, Vt. The spring of 1825 he removed to Granby, and in the fall to Victory, upon the farm now occupied by his oldest daughter, Martha.

The roads were very poor and but little traveled, and a part of the boards for his log buildings had to be drawn from Burke, and the grain to be carried to Burke, Lunenburgh or Guildhall, and in the summer season generally on horseback. For several years all kinds of grain were carried out of town to be ground—wheat always.

To aggravate the hardships and privations of a new settlement, he was here in the decline of life, with impaired health, by the rascality of a nephew, who sold him for his farm in Massachusetts what purported to be 600 acres of good land, as he said, in the thriving town of Victory, Vt., only one hundred of which, as described, could be found in the town; besides, the covenant of the deed was defective, which led to a protracted and expensive law suit in Connecticut, in which he was beaten on technicalities, leaving him poor to struggle on through the last years of his life, on rather poor land. Yet he earnestly endeavored to promote the prosperity of the town, by encouraging settlers, improving roads, and particularly by endeavoring to improve the moral and religious condition of the settlement. My father was not a politician, and always stood aloof from office of every grade. I do not recollect ever seeing him read a political paper, but his Bible and a few choice religious books were the chosen and constant companions of his leisure moments.

Religion was his favorite theme; hence, as a private Christian, and in the society of friends, family and home, his distinguishing traits were exhibited. In early life he was of a serious and reflective turn, being, from feeble health, much in the company of a pious mother. When about 21 or 22 years of age, the sudden death of his next older and favorite brother, followed in three days by the death of his mother, and soon an attack of the same disease (dysentery), that nearly proved fatal,—while these nearly overwhelmed him with grief, he also became particularly anxious for his own salvation, avoiding, for several months, every thing like amusement and the society of his associates.

Soon after their marriage my parents, according to the then prevalent custom of the Congregational church in New England, united with the Congregational church of Bolton, by what was then termed "the half-way covenant;" that was, as I have been told, by assenting to the "articles of faith," promising to live as near as they were able to the rules of the Bible, going to "communion," and promising to have their children baptized. This, however, they soon felt to be the form without the substance, and, after a protracted mental struggle, accepted salvation on whole covenant terms, and both soon after made a public profession of their faith in Christ, and a family altar was set up through life.

Although frequently beset with temptations, doubts and fears, aggravated by nervous debility, which produced at times great activity and animation, but was often followed by dejection, yet hope would revive after melancholy, and he would press onward in the Christian race.

He commenced when quite young the practice of reading the Bible through by course once a year, and continued it as long as he lived; and, after his health failed so as to be unable to work regularly, he often read it through two or three times in a year. Hence he was a good Bible student, and able from Scripture to warn or reprove, encourage or console. He sung intuitively either part in church music, and from 8 years of age to his last sickness he sung in the choir, if needed; indeed, at any time, or on any occasion when it was appropriate, he was ready and willing to sing of "redeeming grace and dying love."

Although particularly industrious, he not only attended meeting on the Sabbath when able, but was present at the lecture and prayer meeting, and was ready to converse in private when opportunity presented.

Kind and affectionate in his family, and ardently desirous of doing all for them in his power, yet he looked upon them as "lent treasures," and when the Master called them home could say, "Thy will be done."

A cancerous humor had developed itself about him for more than 30 years; at last it became seated on his under lip, and no medical skill could remove it. For nearly four years he was being worn out by it, suffering intense pain, unrelieved by refreshing sleep; but while his earthly house was being dissolved day by day, his evidence of a blessed immortality beyond the grave grew brighter and stronger, and he had a word "in season" for all who called to see him. The morning he died he asked to be raised in bed and have his large Bible held before him, when he had it opened at St. John, 14th chapter, and appeared to read to himself. Conscious to the last, he took an affectionate leave of all present, then closed his eyes in death, Sept. 6, 1837, aged a little more than 67 years. Mother survived him nearly 22 years, much afflicted, having become a cripple. She died May 10, 1857, in the "full assurance of faith." Truly, "the memory of the just is blessed."

Digitized by Google

METHODISM IN VICTORY.

BY REV. J. EVANS.

The west part of this town, with a few families at the river, some two miles distant, have been connected with East St. Johnsbury, and also with Victory, for quarterly meeting purposes, since 1840, until the friends of religion and morals here came to the conclusion that they were able and ought to have a minister live with them, so as to be able to have regular and stated means of grace within their own borders. In view of this, I was engaged to preach to the people in Victory one Sabbath each month for the conference year of 1860.—Before the year closed, there was almost an unanimous call for me to accept the lands in the town of Victory chartered for the settlement of a minister, and ministers of the gospel in said township forever. I put them off for a while, on account of feelings of unworthiness and imbecilities; but, at the close of the year, I told them to do as they thought best (my home at the time was in Newbury, Vt.) I soon received a letter from one of the official members of the church, stating that the town had voted to settle me as their minister. According to the agreement entered into, I moved into the town of Victory, with my family, in the month of May, 1861.

I find some worthy members here, and some that are not so worthy. We however did not organize a church at once, but met with our good brethren in Kirby; at Kirby for our quarterly meetings, as heretofore, until the spring of 1862. In a quarterly meeting held in Kirby, in good faith and feeling—on motion, voted to separate Victory from Kirby, so that Victory might become a charge by itself. Andes T. Bullard, the presiding elder, was in the chair; John Goram, secretrry.

In the month of August, 1862, Br. Andes T. Bullard met with us at the dwelling-house of Mr. Willard A. Kneeland, the usual place of holding meetings at the river, and preached a good sermon from Ephesians v. 1; after the close of the sermon we met for a quarterly conference, agreeable to appointment. This was our first quarterly conference held in Victory. Our presiding elder (A. T. Bullard) was in the chair. Br. A. J. Shaw was duly elected secretary of the quarterly conference, and afterwards was elected recording steward. The official members of this quarterly conference consists of five stewards and four class-leaders and one local preacher. The church of Victory is divided into four classes: Class No. 1, 16, one in the army (on trial); No. 2, 10, one died in the army; No. 3, 13, four on trial; No. 4, 15, two on trial—making 46 in full connection, and 8 on trial. We have no meeting-house in this town, and hold our meetings in school-houses mostly. There are some four persons also in this part of the town that are Freewill Baptists and belong to Lyndon Center, some 10 miles from here. Also there are a few Congregational brethren at the north-east part of the town, who hold their church election with the Congregational church in Granby. Of those friends that belong to the Granby church I do not know just how many there are; I cannot, however, call to mind but six. Some of these, I feel assured, are worthy members of any church, and think they evidence genuine zeal for God.

There has been but a few meetings held in this town for the past few years but by the Methodists. The Freewill Baptists have had two evening lectures the year past. We cannot speak of great prosperity at this time. We have a regular class meeting once a week, and two prayer meetings, and they are generally well attended. But some of our brethren have gone to the war, and some of our brethren's sons have gone, and some have fallen there in hospital, and a general feeling of sadness is manifest in all our borders. And what is worse for the cause of God, this war excitement does not, as it should, drive us nearer to God and his throne. Yet a general feeling of submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well is apparent, and we hope this principle will ultimately prevail till the nations shall learn war no more, or the principles of treason shall cease to exist, and sin, the fruitful source of all kinds of rebellion, shall be slain by its true conqueror, Christ the Lord.

What Victory has done to put down the Rebellion.

Of the many thousands who have gone to our nation's rescue, Victory has furnished from her sparce population twenty-two men, fourteen of whom went for their own town, the remainder for other towns. These belonged to the different regiments of Vermont volunteers, as follows:

3d Reg't, Co. B.—Moody Evans. Co. D.—Albert H. Thomas, Lester Smith—died Jan. 17, 1863,—Henry W. Sterns—died Jan. 21, 1863,—Augustus B. Jones—died May 25, '64, of wounds,—Chas. A. Story, Robert Suitor.—Co. I.—Benj. W. Isham—died Dec. 15, 1862,—William Brooks. A. J. Shaw.

4th Reg't, Co. G.—Alonzo H. Bell—died Jan. 1, 1862,—Horace B. Houston, Wesley I. Houston—died May 17, 1862, 8th Reg't, Co. K.—Charles H. Farnham—died Sept. 4, 1862,—Melvin Wilson. H. M. Lund.

9th Reg't, Co. F.—Hollis M. Emerson, Moses Emerson, Fredom D. Prescott.

11th Reg't, Co. A.—Ira Lee, Orisan L. Farnham.

Vt. Artillery.—Abial Cheney.

Besides these one man procured a substitute, a non-resident, and two others paid commutation. Of this number, six have died from sickness, and one from wounds received in battle, and have thus been called to lay all, even life itself, upon the altar of our country, and thus become a portion of that costly oblation which she has so willingly offered.—They died, not on the field of battle made gory by the blood of thousands of thousands of their fallen comrades—not amid the roar of thundering cannon as their awful death-tones hushed, as it were, for a moment, the shrieks and groans of the dying, only to add new horror to the scene—not amid the acclamations of contending armies, as they rush to victory and glory, but they are none the less honored. They have done what they could to perpetuate those liberties and blessings, for which our fathers bled and died. They have done what they could to defend our homes, our friends, our sacred altars, and our government—the best upon which the sun ever shone—from tyranny and blood-stained oppression; from a power whose poisonous fangs were seeking to sever the very life-strings of its existence; and their graves are in southern climes—their precise locations doubtless soon to be lost by time's onward march; yet their memories will long be fondly cherished at home.—May, 1867.

NATURAL HISTORY OF ESSEX CO.

BY E. A. CUTTING.

Essex county lies east of Caledonia and Orleans, bordering for upwards of 65 miles upon the meandering folds of the Connecticut river. Its area is about 620 square miles, and a large share of the county is covered with a dense growth of forest trees—mostly spruce, yet pine and hemlock, together with the sugar maple, birch and beech, give an ever-varying appearance to the forests, and furnish lumber in abundance and variety. The larger portion of the inhabitants live near the streams, and the majority live in or near the Connecticut river valley. In Concord and Lunenburgh, however, the towns are generally settled, yet the part lying back from the river and off from the large brooks is little but a wilderness. For so small a section of country there is greater difference in climate than is general in this latitude. The direction of the wind and the lay of the land, doubtless are the main causes; yet difference in soil, and the amount of water in the vicinity, of course makes some difference in vegetation. The proximity of the highest portion of the White Mountain range, on which snow lies for at least nine months out of the year, gives a coolness to the atmosphere which must have its effect upon the climate. The valley of the Connecticut is frequently some two or three weeks earlier than some of the interior portions, yet as a general thing the frosts on the streams prevent the growth of anything that cannot be raised in among the hills of the interior townships. I have however seen the maple buds on the Connecticut bursting into leaves, when the snow in the dense forests of spruce and hemlock, in Granby, East Haven and Ferdinand, would lie in sufficient depth to make quite a freshet of the streams, and the buds of the maple in those localities could hardly be said to have swollen.

Of the geology of Essex little can be said. In our recent state survey very little was done in this county, and we find a sort of general description to suffice in that recently published work. In the southern portion of the county the prevailing rock is talcose slate, with granite bowlders. The slate is, however, very irregular in stratification, being intersected with dikes, much broken in surface and putting on many varieties of appearance. In the southern portion of Concord there is a dike of magnesian limestone, that is traceable in a straight line nearly three miles, varying from 2 to 6 feet wide. There is also in Concord, on the farm owned by Wm. Darling, quite a deposit of iron and copper pyrites, also some traces of iron ore. In the northern and middle part of the town, there are considerable deposits of limestone; yet not sufficiently pure for the manufacture of lime, and probably belong to this same talcose formation. On Miles' Mountain are several caves in this rock—some of them quite small, and some possessing considerable size. When I visited the locality, after examining several holes which I felt hardly willing to venture into—yet, by throwing in stones and sounding them, I presume they led to quite sizable cavities in the mountain. I at length descended into the one most commonly visited and found it a rough, unshapely room, varying from three to eight feet in height, and perhaps 20 to 30 feet in diameter; neither square, nor round, but possessing as many corners as would suit any admirer of angles. There were small stalactites hanging from the rock overhead—some of the longest about three inches—which by dint of perseverance I pounded off, so as to bring away some very fair specimens. There were two or three apertures leading out of this apartment which were hardly large enough to admit a man, yet I was told that some one had crawled into one of them for some distance and found it to increase in size, but I could learn nothing definite of its termination. I was told by my guide, however, that he had explored a much larger cave higher up the mountain, but as it was near night I could not visit it, and can give no definite description of it; but from the locality presume it is similar to the one described. There is also, in the northern part of Lunenburgh, a cave in the same formation, nearly like the one I have described, only perhaps not so large, and one much larger than either in Maidstone. The limestone in this section has been analyzed, and I give the analysis;—Silicia, 40.5; carbonate of lime and magnesia, 51.5; oxyd of iron and loss, 8.

Digitized by Google

The surface-stones in this county are most of them granite, and I think the western part of Lunenburgh contains as many of them as any section of cultivated land in the state. There are some stones occasionally met with that form subjects of speculation to geologists,—for instance, near Lunenburgh Corner is a surface-stone of Labrador feldspar that seems isolated hundreds of miles from its parent mass. The northern part of the county general formation is granite and syenite; there are not as many surface-stones as in the southern portion, yet the soil is no more productive. There is a deposit of copper pyrites about three miles from Island Pond, in Brighton. It now promises to be of value, and has been purchased with the intention of working it. (See Hist. Brighton). There are several mineral springs, but the only ones of any note are the springs on the bank of the Connecticut at Brunswick. At this place there are several in the immediate vicinity of each other, yet all possessing a slight difference in their waters. They are chalybeate and are considered very efficacious in curing cutaneous diseases, and are fast rising in popularity. The temperature of the water is about 45° and does not much vary in summer or winter, neither does it vary in wet or dry seasons, but remains uniform in quantity and quality throughout the year. There is probably no section better watered by springs than this county; the broken condition of its strata and the consideration that there is little mineral existing here that is soluble in water, renders the springs pure and cold, and many of them preserve nearly the same annual temperature. In digging wells, they find water at a depth of from 12 to 30 feet, and except in limestone localities it is pure. A Mr. Simonds, of Lunenburgh, thinking he would sink his well deeper than usual so as to have his water surely permanent, drilled through the talcose rock; but the water instead of coming in, run out, so that he had to stop it up and be content with the water above the bed-rock; there has however always been a good supply of water in his well.

METEOROLOGY.

As there has been few meteorological observations made in this section except by myself,—and those do not extend back quite fifteen years—it will be impossible to give a very perfect history of our climate during the first settlement of this section; yet it is not probable that there was any great difference from the 15 years last past. The winds in this county are modified by the mountains and valleys. In Concord the prevailing wind is from the north-west, in Lunenburgh from the west; and in the other towns on the Connecticut, the wind almost always blows up or down the river; and in those towns that lay back from the river it appears to be northerly or north-westerly. Perhaps it would be reasonably correct to say that the wind as above mentioned blew as much from those points as from all others. In relation to the temperature of the atmosphere the warmest localities in the summer are generally the coldest in the winter. These are of course the valleys which in the summer do not receive the breezes that strike the hills; and in the winter as our coldest nights are still, the cold atmosphere from its natural gravity settles into them, so it is the valleys that have the greatest extremes of temperature.

The following tables are reduced from observations made by me at Lunenburgh, lat. 44° 28′ north, and lon. 71° 41′ west, at an elevation of 1124 feet above tide water, and 324 feet above the level of the Connecticut river against this place. I think from my locality, that the observations obtained are nearly what would be an average for the county. This table contains the mean height of the thermometer for 16 years, together with the annual fall of water,—snow included,—allowing 10 inches of snow for one inch of water, which I have found to be on an average a very correct estimate:

YEARS.	JAN.	FEB.	MAR.	APRIL.	MAY.	JUNE.	JULY.	AUG.	SEPT.	OCT.	NOV.	DEC.	MEAN.	DEPTH RAIN IN INCHES.
1848	19.5	17.	30.4	41.3	50.	67.15	70.3	69.25	58.5	44.5	26.	20.4	43.68	41.
1849	10.7	14.5	30.	40.5	53.7	58.9	69.6	54.75	56.4	40.9	30.4	19.5	40.70	35.8
1850	10.	14.07	25.5	35.	55.	69.5	67.6	64.	58.3	50.	29.73	21.	41.64	40.
1851	20.5	14.22	31.75	39.16	57.	62.5	64.25	70.	51.5	40.	25.8	19.	42.14	33.5
1852	20.5	19.28	21.	32.	50.5	64.5	69.	65.5	58.	43.	30.	21.	41.19	39.
1853	22.	12.7	23.5	38.	54.	63.5	69.75	67.	56.5	43.5	28.7	23.75	41.87	41.75
1854	10.5	9.	22.34	34.16	52.3	67.1	70.4	64.5	57.25	45.75	32.3	15.25	40.07	36.6
1855	21.7	14.3	29.2	39.6	40.8	63.7	67.2	68.25	60.	43.75	30.	21.	42.22	38.25
1856	22.	18.5	20.4	35.5	51.3	67.4	68.5	64.	57.7	44.	28.9	20.	41.51	39.8
1857	14.2	20.	24.5	32.7	50.6	65.3	60.8	62.3	52.	42.5	31.	19.5	39.70	37.25
1858	8.3	23.1	24.7	34.6	50.	59.15	65.3	62.4	53.	42.5	33.4	21.5	39.91	38.5
1859	17.75	19.	25.5	33.	51.5	63.	64.5	67.	57.	39.5	34.	14.	40.48	35.3
1860	18.2	16.	28.5	38.	58.5	66.5	69.	66.	55.5	49.	39.	19.	43.60	38.9
1861	19.5	22.	27.	41.5	48.5	63.25	68.	66.	54.	45.	32.	21.	42.31	47.
1862	16.	19.5	26.5	39.	55.	63.	68.	62.	59.5	48.	30.	20.	42.20	45.8
1863	24.	19.	19.2	36.1	59.2	64.3	70.2	70.	56.	47.	26.7	18.4	42.50	46.
Means.	17.11	16.5	25.66	36.88	52.37	64.27	67.5	65.18	56.32	49.93	30.5	19.64	41.61	39.65

The following tables show the average height of the barometer, together with the maximum and minimum height of both barometer and thermometer, and the depth of rain and snow in inches and hundredths, for 1860, '61, '62, and '63. It will be noticed that 1861 was a very wet season, and the others rather dry, so we have a sample of near the extremes, and 1860 and 1861 together come near the average in many points, and will be a fair representation of our climate:

1860.	Average height Barometer.	Maximum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Maximum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Depth of Rain in inches and 10th of inch.	Depth of Snow in inches and 10th of inch.
JANUARY,	28.69	29.12	13	28.30	15	42	8	—27	3	2.	2.5
FEBRUARY,	28.71	29.26	3	28.07	10	48	22	—25	2	1.	11.5
MARCH,	28.53	29.07	18	28.07	24	56	31	18	22	1.	9.1
APRIL,	28.69	29.16	18	28.21	1	60	21	2	3	1.5	1.1
MAY,	28.72	29.06	12	28.42	30	85	13	26	21	1.5
JUNE,	28.62	29.12	25	28.26	8	90	14	45	12	1.1
JULY,	28.66	28.89	12	28.35	21	95	14	49	12	3.5
AUGUST.	28.72	28.97	16	28.40	31	91	7	50	29	9.1
SEPTEMBER,	28.79	29.12	4	28.33	25	78	7	27	28	4.5
OCTOBER,	28.87	29.20	26	28.45	11	72	31	30	27	2.25
NOVEMBER,	28.60	29.17	2	28.21	18	78	1	15	25	4.9	5.
DECEMBER,	28.65	29.20	28	27.91	1	37	21	22	15		35.
	28.69	29.11		28.25		69		15.7		32.35	65.2

Last frost in Spring, May 22nd and 23rd; first in Autumn, September 28th.

Digitized by Google

1861.	Average height Barometer.	Maximum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Maximum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Depth of Rain in inches and 10th of inch.	Depth of Snow in inches and 10th of inch.
JANUARY,	28.76	29.44	22	28.25	30	32	6	—34	13		32.
FEBRUARY,	28.60	29.21	9	28.30	21	50	12	—40	8	2.	16.
MARCH,	28.63	29.11	31	28.32	4	49	30	—20	18	2.	9.5
APRIL,	28.57	28.79	25	27.72	17	70	24	28	7	5.75	1.
MAY,	28.56	28.74	3	27.93	7	70	12	14	2	6.75
JUNE,	28.62	28.90	2	28.33	12	95	26	48	4	4.
JULY,	28.68	28.20	26	28.41	20	95	6	58	2	6.
AUGUST,	28.81	28.11	30	28.41	10	88	1	48	31	1.75
SEPTEMBER,	28.84	29.21	30	28.17	28	78	6	33	9	5.
OCTOBER,	28.66	29.30	1	28.36	5	65	3	28	25	4.5
NOVEMBER,	28.54	29.	20	28.27	16	58	1	8	19	1.5	8.
DECEMBER,	28.76	29.45	6	28.37	30	55	9	—18	29		17.
	28.58	28.95		28.24		67		13		39.25	83.5

Last frost in Spring, June 6th; first in Autumn, September 9th.

1862.	Average height Barometer.	Maximum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Maximum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Depth of Rain in inches and 10th of inch.	Depth of Snow in inches and 10th of inch.
JANUARY,	28.71	29.39	14	27.99	1	34	6	—14	4	.75	30.5
FEBRUARY,	28.38	29.21	17	27.77	24	35	24	—20	10		50.25
MARCH,	28.54	28.99	13	28.10	16	45	10	—5	20		32.25
APRIL,	28.85	29.20	15	28.40	23	78	18	15	11	1.5	9.
MAY,	28.72	29.07	21	28.40	6	88	17	26	6	1.75
JUNE,	28.70	29.5	30	28.45	19	90	27	33	15	1.6
JULY,	28.66	29.25	4	28.4	9	92	6	50	4	2.75
AUGUST,	28.78	29.15	17	28.5	28	93	4	43	24	6.
SEPTEMBER,	28.85	29.26	30	28.4	2	88	12	34	25	4.
OCTOBER,	28.79	29.2	1	28.34	27	83	3	25	21	4.
NOVEMBER,	28.76	29.58	16	28.35	9	70	2	10	24	6.25	5.
DECEMBER,	28.73	29.3	20	27.92	6	44	16	—20	20	2.	20.75
	28.69	29.34		28.25		70		14.75		30.6	147.75

1863.	Average height Barometer	Maximum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Barometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Maximum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Minimum height Thermometer.	Day on which it occurred.	Depth of Rain in inches and 10th of inch.	Depth of Snow in inches and 10th of inch.
JANUARY,	28.73	29.35	20	28.	29	46	15	—15	18	2.25	33.50
FEBRUARY,	28.84	29.25	22	28.	19	40	27	—10	11	1.	4.
MARCH,	28.76	29.40	21	28.25	31	44	29	—20	13	1.50	32.50
APRIL,	28.77	29.31	21	28.	2	64	30	10	3	1.75	10.50
MAY,	28.78	29.14	25	28.40	31	92	22	30	8	4.50
JUNE,	28.72	29.10	27	28.25	1	93	28	40	4	1.50
JULY,	28.81	29.15	19	28.65	26	92	2	60	21	8.75
AUGUST,	28.82	29.17	13	28.75	25	98	11	40	27	3.
SEPTEMBER,	28.92	29.42	23	28.80	18	91	16	30	28	3.
OCTOBER,	28.89	29.32	26	28.50	30	80	2	18	28	3.50
NOVEMBER,	28.76	29.15	1	28.40	18	65	17	9	30	2.25
DECEMBER,	28.88	29.48	6	28.35	14	48	14	—10	23	4.	11.50
Means,	28.80	29.27		28.35		71				37.	92.51

Digitized by Google

Another very important point—though until recently much neglected—is the amount of vapor in the atmosphere, or the amount of saturation. I give the result of four years observations, the pressure in fractions of an inch corresponding and the height of mercury in the barometer, and the relative humidity by letting 100 represent as much moisture as the air can contain, and the figures given so many parts of 100. I also add to those tables the number of days on which snow or rain fell, and the number of clear days—by clear I mean beautifully sunny—although very small patches of clouds may be seen, but not enough to obscure the sun:

1860.	Force or pressure of vapor in inches.	Relative humidity, or fraction of saturation.	Number of days on which snow or rain fell	Number of clear days.
JANUARY,	.110	77	8	7
FEBRUARY,	.104	69	12	7
MARCH,	.173	87	7	7
APRIL,	.196	78	6	14
MAY,	.320	58	7	20
JUNE,	.560	83	7	12
JULY,	.603	84	8	5
AUGUST,	.533	82	14	10
SEPTEMBER,	.396	83	8	11
OCTOBER,	.270	75	12	10
NOVEMBER,	.205	78	10	3
DECEMBER,	.093	68	11	3
	.297	77	110	109
1861.
JANUARY,	.091	77	11	5
FEBRUARY,	.129	74	8	4
MARCH,	.140	72	11	13
APRIL,	.203	78	10	15
MAY,	.213	70	10	7
JUNE,	.413	73	10	11
JULY,	.570	74	12	7
AUGUST,	.556	82	4	11
SEPTEMBER,	.490	91	4	14
OCTOBER,	.273	86	7	10
NOVEMBER,	.165	77	8	4
DECEMBER,	.110	61	4	12
	.278	76	99	113
1862.
JANUARY,	.132	61	12	9
FEBRUARY,	.102	71	12	10
MARCH,	.141	75	13	4
APRIL,	.184	64	10	7
MAY,	.420	72	6	16
JUNE,	.442	73	5	8
JULY,	.634	84	6	6
AUGUST,	.521	82	9	12
SEPTEMBER,	.424	82	8	17
OCTOBER,	.331	83	8	9
NOVEMBER,	.171	72	11	5
DECEMBER,	.093	52	10	11
	.299	73	110	114

1863.	Force or pressure of vapor in inches.	Relative humidity, or fraction of saturation.	Number of days on which snow or rain fell.	Number of clear days.
JANUARY,	.111	65	14	12
FEBRUARY,	.102	63	6	14
MARCH,	.095	56	13	12
APRIL,	.178	71	7	13
MAY,	.438	74	8	16
JUNE,	.488	79	4	16
JULY,	.684	88	11	7
AUGUST,	.629	84	6	15
SEPTEMBER,	.396	86	10	12
OCTOBER,	.315	83	8	14
NOVEMBER,	.185	77	9	7
DECEMBER,	.081	43	17	8
	.308	72	113	146

These tables express the state of our atmosphere much better than I can otherwise point it out, and would be in itself sufficient to show the general outline of our climate. In the following table I give the amount of snow that has fallen during ten successive winters—being from 1854 to 1864. This was measured after each storm, and though it was sometimes not as accurate as I could wish, on account of the winds making drifts of it, yet I consider it as a whole a near approximation to the truth. Of course at no one time was it all on the ground, yet by comparison with the other tables you can judge that at many times it has been deep; and those that have traveled our winter roads can testify that it was generally badly drifted.

Years.	Inches of Snow
1854 and 1855,	100
1855 and '56,	70
1856 and '57,	83
1857 and '58,	79
1858 and '59,	69
1859 and '60,	58
1860 and '61,	99
1861 and '62,	146
1862 and '63,	95
1863 and '64,	49½

REMARKABLE EVENTS.

I shall now give such remarkable changes and occurrences in the atmospheric phenomena as have sufficiently stamped their impress on the minds of the early settlers to be remembered, and from them may be gathered an idea of the great changes that are liable at any time to occur, and yet do occur but seldom:

Digitized by Google

Oct. 9th, 1804, brought with its dawn a great snow storm. The weather had been cloudy and extremely cold for the season for a number of days; and on the morn of this day it commenced snowing, and continued almost without intermission until full 20 inches of snow had fallen.

The year 1807 was remarkable for the great amount of snow and steady cold weather. There was on the last day of March a great snow storm accompanied with a very high wind—such a wind as is seldom known. It blocked the roads so that they were not passable for some days. On the first day of May the snow would average in the woods 4½ feet deep, and the weather cold and forbidding—yet warm days soon came and crops came forth with great rapidity, and it is seldom that a better harvest is gathered than in that year. In 1815 we also find a great amount of snow, and May 22d the snow fell 8 inches and was followed by cold nights and pleasant days; and it is said that there was then the greatest run of maple sap on record.

The year 1816 is perhaps noted throughout the county as the coldest year, and the northern portion of Vt. was not exempt. Although the thermometer was unknown here at that time, and no one can tell how cold it was, yet every one remembers that it was colder than any winter before or since experienced. On the 8th of June snow fell to the depth of 5 inches, and it froze so hard that all the leaves in the forest were killed, and vegetation was apparently ruined. This freeze was followed by great drouth—so much so that the crops did not recover from the freeze, and new-sown ones perished; and it seemed as though a famine was coming upon the land; but there was a small late harvest, yet many suffered very much, and corn was of almost fabulous value. In 1817—June 1st—the ground froze to the depth of one inch, and snow fell nearly an inch deep; vegetation however recovered and there was an average yield to the husbandman. The year 1819 was very remarkable for peculiar phenomena. It has been styled the dark year, from the great number of dark days during the year. The darkest day was Nov. 9th, and it was so dark that people had to light candles to eat dinner and also to do their accustomed work about house. During the afternoon stars were visible through the breaks in the clouds, and the ensuing evening was so dark, that it seemed as though the darkness could be felt,—there was no shade of light about it: and if darkness can be total, it might be said to have been total darkness. This was doubtless caused by thick dense clouds covering the heavens in many layers and of peculiar density. Some have attributed it to smoke, but that must be impossible, as stars could not then be seen; and if the testimony of creditable individuals is to be taken, during a breakage in the clouds in the afternoon stars were visible. Oct. 12th of this year there was a very great display of the aurora borealis. It was very brilliant in color and intensity of light, as fine print could be read by it, and it covered the whole heavens.

The year 1820 was a very forward spring, with a great growth of vegetation—consequently a bountiful harvest. In 1821 there were several hail-storms, which though limited in extent yet different storms damaged more or less almost every locality. At Concord, June 27th, the hail cut down vegetation generally, damaged windows, and on the whole was very severe. Crops however somewhat recovered from its effects. In 1824, May 25th, there was a very severe frost and freeze, but as there came on fine warm weather after it vegetation recovered, and it did little harm only to fruit trees.

1828 will be ever remembered as a warm year. Many ponds and rivers were not closed by ice during the ensuing winter, and in July and August there was probably as warm days as were ever here experienced, and they were continued and warm through the night as well as through the day. It was rather dry, but crops were generally good. The 25th of January, 1837, is remarkable for the greatest display of the aurora ever witnessed in this section. It commenced early in the evening and continued through the whole night with a brilliancy which has been unequaled by any other display. It overspread the heavens with almost every tint of color, and with a tremulous rapid motion changed continually. It appeared to arise from the north and pass over towards the south, as the general expression is, and only closed as the light of the coming day obscured it. In 1842 we have a series of storms such as perhaps this county has never experienced in other years. About the first of July commenced a great rain storm which swelled the streams to a height seldom known, and great damage to mills, roads, &c., was the consequence. There was also in this month a tornado in the town of Victory, which was a rare thing for this section. The wind came over a hill, or perhaps more properly a mountain, sweeping every impediment before it. At first its path was only a few rods wide, but it gradually increased in width and force. Its track was a forest, and it leveled and tore up all the trees for the distance of near two miles, and a few rods to half mile in breadth, it then came to a small river and upon its banks seemed to lose its fury. Many of the trees were carried along with the wind and left in piles near the river. The noise of this tornado was heard for miles around, and some supposed it an earthquake from its peculiar sound unlike the sound of a storm. There was also a great hail-storm in Lunenburgh this month that entirely ruined the crops upon which it fell, but was of limited extent. Capt. King was the greatest sufferer, as his farm was in the heaviest part of the storm. In 1843 there was a light hay crop, and in the spring of 1844 a very great scarcity of hay. The spring was very backward and snow deep. March 15th, there was one of our great winter storms of snow and wind which was very severe. April 6th, snow would average four feet deep and the spring was cold. There was also a great amount of sickness, mostly among women, and called erysipelas. It was very fatal. In 1856, June 30th, there was a great hail-storm, the greatest damage being in Concord, yet more or less rain and hail fell throughout the entire county, and the showers of rain and hail were continued until July 3d, when the weather became cooler and the hail ceased. In Concord the farm of Daniel Barker was in the hardest part of the storm, and his crops entirely ruined, his fruit trees killed and his buildings much damaged. Thousands of forest trees were also killed, and many so damaged and bruised that the marks of the storm may be seen on them as long as they stand, making lasting mementoes of the great size of the hail stones, and the terrific violence of the storm. Few were lucky enough to escape without damage from this series of hail-storms, yet to many the damage was slight. The hail fell in showers of a few minutes duration, and came at all hours of the day and night. Some of the largest hail-stones fell on the night of the 2d July, in Lunenburgh, about 2 o'clock A. M., but being unaccompanied by wind did little damage. The winter of 1861 and '62 were remarkable for the great depth of snow. It fell so deep that fences were entirely covered, so their situation could not in many cases be seen, and many buildings were broken down. March 18th, the snow lay from 5 to 6 feet on the ground, and the weather was cold for the season. The first of April the snow would average three feet deep, and the track on the roads was nearly as high as the tops of the fences, and traveling was very difficult. There was snow enough for sleighing until the 18th, when the roads in many places were bare. Ice was not out of the ponds until into May. The oldest inhabitants do not remember so much snow in one winter.

The winter of 1863 and '64 was very mild. There was a limited amount of snow, yet sleighing was very good all winter, The ice cleared out of the Connecticut on the 2d of April.

PONDS AND RIVERS.

For convenience of reference I will take the towns in alphabetical order in the description of their waters.

Averill, though wild and broken in scenery, and a forest, contains embedded in its valleys some of the most beautiful ponds in the county. Great Averill Pond, so called, is situated in the extreme north corner of the town, and a small part of the pond extends over into Norton. It is about 1½ miles long, and from three-fourths to one mile in width. Its waters are clear and cold. Little Averill Pond is about 1½ miles due south of the former, is nearly round—perhaps three-fourths of a mile in diameter. It is the main head of Averill stream which runs north through Great Averill Pond, thence north-west into Canada. Little Leach Pond is also in this town, but is hardly deserving of notice.

Bloomfield is watered by East Branch and Nulhegan rivers. Black Branch also runs through the western part. Their course is due south. A small stream called Mill Brook also flows from this town into the Connecticut; and Clough's Brook runs through its north-eastern corner. There are no ponds worthy of notice.

Brunswick contains three small ponds known as Cranberry Pond, North Pond and South Pond. The Nulhegan passes through the northern part into Bloomfield, where it runs nearly parallel with the state line to the Connecticut. This town also has the usual amount of small streams.

Digitized by Google

Brighton,—this town is more generally known under the name of Island Pond, as the village takes its name from a pond by that name situated near the center of the town. This pond is so called from its containing a beautiful island situated about half a mile from its north-eastern shore. This pond is about 2½ miles long by 1 or 1½ miles wide; in many places it has low sandy shores and is perhaps the most beautiful in scenery and location of any pond in the county. There are also three other small ponds in town, viz: Spectacle, Nulhegan and Mud Ponds. Nulhegan Pond is situated in the south-eastern part, from which the Nulhegan River flows. The small streams that form the Clyde are several of them wholly within this town.

Concord contains many brooks, and Moose River runs through the western part. There are also two ponds of note. Hall's Pond, which is near the Corners, is a beautiful sheet of water about one mile long by half a mile wide. Its shores are low and sandy, and it is fed mostly by springs, one of which is so large as to toss a boat about in a still day, although there is quite a depth of water. Its waters are uncommonly cold. Several tomahawks and arrow points have been found upon its shores, showing that it used to be a fishing ground for the aborigines. I have some specimens of them that equal any I ever saw for finish and quality. Hall's Brook rises in this pond and empties into the Connecticut. Miles' Pond, situated a little north of the center of the town, is about two miles long by three-fourths of a mile wide. It has generally abrupt shores and is probably very deep. Miles' Stream flows from this pond to the Connecticut. There are also several large sized brooks in this town.

Canaan contains a part of Big Leach Pond, but the larger portion of it is in Canada. Numerous brooks flow into the Connecticut, but no streams of large size.

East Haven is a mountainous township, but contains no sizable ponds. Moose River takes its rise in this town.

Ferdinand is little known in its interior. There are three or four reported ponds, but the largest as best known is New Discovered Pond, so called, near its south-western border. It is about one mile long by one-half mile broad. Great quantities of trout are taken from this pond, which make fishing excursions to this wilderness place quite frequent. The Nulhegan passes through the northern part. There is the usual number of small streams.

Granby contains three small ponds—Cow Mountain and Mud Pond, and a small nameless pond in the northern part. Several of the tributaries of Moose River rise in this town.

Guildhall is destitute of ponds; although numerous small brooks thread through the town there are none hardly large enough for mill streams.

Lunenburgh contains Neal's Pond which is situated about one mile north of the village, being about one mile long by half a mile wide. It is shallow and very rocky, and its shores low and in some places sandy. There are also several streams in town, some of which are large enough for mill streams.

Lemington contains no ponds, but the usual number of brooks, which flow through its valleys to the Connecticut,

Lewis is as yet a wilderness. It contains a sizable pond in its northern part, and several small streams, but little is known of them.

Norton contains the larger part of Norton Pond, but a portion of it lies in Warren's Gore. It is also joined by Middle Pond, and further south by Round Pond, both in Warren's Gore. A small stream rises in these ponds and runs north into Canada.

Victory is watered by Moose River and its branches, and contains no ponds of note.

It can be seen from the foregoing that Essex County is well watered, and can boast as great purity in its ponds and streams as any section of the state.

MOUNTAINS.

As regards the mountains of Essex, though numerous, they are not on the magnificent scale which many portions of our state exhibit; though ragged and steep, many times, they do not tower to a great height. Miles mountain, in Concord, is perhaps as high as any in the county, and measures but 2650 feet above tide water. The county, though generally hilly, does not possess the immense precipices or precipitous ravines of many sections of our state. It is true its strata is bent and broken so as to cause an infinite number of springs, most of which are pure and cold, yet little of the land is unfit for pastures of the best quality, as the soil is strong and productive. Island Pond is the most elevated village, and Lunenburgh Corners the next. I add a list of such places as the height above tide water has been taken with any degree of accuracy: Island Pond, 1250 feet; Lunenburgh Corners, 1144 feet; Concord Corners, 1095 feet; head of 15-mile falls, at Lunenburgh, 890 feet; Guildhall Falls, 893 feet; mouth of the Nulhegan, 962 feet.

ANIMALS.*

The following are the names of the quadrupeds of Essex county, given in the order of their description, which, though not minute, is composed of such mention of their habits or peculiarities as I have thought interesting:

Ruminating Animals.—Moose or elk, deer.

Carniverous Animals.—Black bear, fox, lynx, skunk, martin or sable, bat, wolf, raccoon, otter, mink, weasel, moles.

Gnawing Animals.—Beaver, hedgehog, squirrels, Norway rat, woodchuck, rabbit, muskrat, mouse.

MOOSE, OR ELK.

The elk, in this county called moose, from the Indian name "moosoa," is occasionally seen in our forests. Its head is large and long, having the muzzle and under lip covered with short hairs which are very projecting and flexible, and serve to direct to the mouth the shoots and twigs which are its food. The eyes are small and inexpressive; the ears are large and open; the neck is short and powerful, surmounted with a coarse mane; the body is stout; the legs disproportionally long, and his steps straggling and awkward. The horns are of an enormous size, sometimes weighing 60 pounds. Its general color is fawn-brown, and they shed their horns about the month of February in each year. The moose advances in a shuffling kind of trot, while his hoofs, striking against each other, make a noise which can be heard at some distance. In the winter it lives in the most densely wooded sections of highland, and in the summer frequents the swamps and low-land. Being timid, it is seldom seen. The last one killed was on the railroad in Brighton —being run upon by a train of cars in 1858 (see Hist. Brighton). The heft of the moose varies according to its age. It is supposed not to reach its growth in less than 15 years. Some have been killed, if reports are correct, weighing 1400 pounds. This animal is easily tamed, becomes docile and even affectionate towards its keeper; but possesses a wariness and distrust of strangers not easily overcome.

THE DEER.

This creature, if we regard the elegance of his form, the flexibility of his limbs, his branching horns and the lightness of his motions, is superior to any other animal in our forests. It is very timid and shy, and, possessing a keen sense of hearing and smelling, it is difficult to get within gun shot of them. In years past there has been several curious instances of their capture or death, among which are the following:

In 1843 Dr. Sargent, of Lunenburgh, while riding one night about one-half mile from the village, heard a noise at the side of the road, and getting out of his carriage to see what it was, he found a deer entangled between some rails in the fence, in trying to get through it, where he was held fast. The Doctor had no weapon but his lancet, and finally bled him to death with that.

In 1855 a youngster, while bathing in the Connecticut above Guildhall Falls, saw a young deer trying to swim away from some dogs. The young man finally caught him, and he was so tired that he conducted him home without difficulty, where he kept him for a time and then sold him to the manager of a menagerie. Several others have been killed in a singular manner, and the hunting of them is considered rare sport. They are fast decreasing in numbers.

THE BLACK BEAR.

This animal is still quite common in some localities, doing some damage; yet it has frequently to bear blame that should rest on dogs. Its color is a shining black; the hair long, but not curled, gives him a peculiar shaggy appearance. His feet are large and long and possessed of great strength. Unlike other animals of this section, it has the power to arise upon its hind feet and even to walk upon them alone, though clumsily. The bear is naturally timid, yet when thoroughly aroused will fight to the last. Of late, when a bear is seen, the people generally turn out

* In their classification, &c., I have followed Thompson, whose classification is a good one.

Digitized by Google

in large numbers, and frequently are successful in his capture. Numerous bear-hunts are within the memory of all. I will only mention one or two of them:

In 1815 a bear was caught in Concord, in a steel trap, and in trying to drive him to the house he pulled his foot out of the trap and jumped directly over one David Morse, knocking him down. Quick as thought Mrs. James Morse, of Concord, struck the bear on the head with the trap, killing him at one blow.

In 1843 there was a bear-hunt in Lunenburgh, and after the ring was nearly closed up the bear tried to escape by breaking through it, and Newell Howe, to stop him, caught hold of or jumped upon him, and the bear turned, catching Howe by the leg, inflicting a severe wound. Mr. H. would doubtless have fared hard, but help was at hand and the bear was soon killed.

THE WOLF.

The wolf—formerly numerous—is now very scarce, and perhaps at this time there are none within the limits of the county. In 1837 and 1838 wolves seem to have been very plenty, and hardly an owner of sheep or young cattle escaped their partial destruction by this hated enemy. The last year named, a hunter, by the name of French, killed and captured a great number, and since that time they have not been so notorious in their boldness, and have gradually disappeared.

FOX.

The color of this animal, in its most usual state, is a dull reddish fawn, of various degrees of intensity. In some it has a strong tendency to black, and, in fine, some are nearly jet-black, but they are rare, and supposed by many to be a different species, yet, I believe, have been seen in this county. The female, on whom devolves the entire care of the young, breeds in April. The young are frequently taken alive, but cannot well be tamed. I have tried to tame them, and though they recognize the hand that feeds and caresses, they will never show the affection of a dog or tolerate caresses from a stranger; and as they possess deep cunning and treachery, you will frequently, when least expecting it, be rewarded by a bite. A brown fox, when made captive, exhibits most impatience of restraint, tries every means to regain his freedom; and, if he does not succeed, becomes dejected and spiritless, and soon dies. The fox, when contented, lies down twisted in a curve with his tail coiled around his nose, and sleeps profoundly. Their senses are acute; they are sly and cautious, exceedingly cunning and patient, cleanly and retired. While young, they are full of vivacity and playfulness; when older, they are apt and cunning beyond comparison. Their liberty is dearer than life or limb, and they have been known to gnaw off a foot caught in a trap to escape, and to refuse food and die in captivity rather than submit to restraint.

RACCOON.

The raccoon possesses somewhat the looks of the fox, but the habits of the bear. Its color is a dusky grey, with a row of black and dirty-white alternate, but more strongly marked on the tail. It is said that it is extremely fond of sweetened liquor—more especially brandy—and will get so drunk that it cannot escape, and can be easily killed.

They are very fond of green corn, and frequently congregate in great numbers in a cornfield; and are also destructive to poultry, and sometimes destroy vegetables in gardens. They are frequently captured alive, and when young can be somewhat domesticated; but there is such an amount of treachery in their natures that they cannot be depended upon. They have one thing peculiar, and that is they will frequently dip their food in water while eating—sometimes between every mouthful. They also drink by lapping, or like a horse in swallows.

LYNX.

The Lynx is now very scarce, yet a few are usually caught every winter. I know little of its habits, only that it is very timid and is seldom seen unless caught in a trap.

OTTER.

This reddish, glossy-brown animal is much prized for its fur. Voracious, subtle, active and bold, it is notorious for its devastations among the fish, in our ponds and streams,—like them he is perfectly at home in the water, swimming at any depth with the utmost velocity. When it descrys its victim it never loses sight of him until he is devoured.

"Where rages not oppression? where, alas!
Is innocence secure? Rapine and spoil

Haunt even the lowest deeps,—seas have their sharks;
Rivers and ponds inclose the ravenous pike,—
He in his turn becomes a prey; on him
The amphibious otter feasts."

The last one I know of having been taken in the county, was caught at Maidstone lake on the first of Jan. 1863. Some fishermen set their hooks in about 12 feet of water for longe, and when they took them up found an otter had swallowed their baits and was fast caught by the hooks. He of course made a valuable prize. Otters have sometimes been tamed so as to catch fish and bring them out to their owners; and when so domesticated have sold in England for almost fabulous prices.

SKUNK.

The skunk is too well known to need any description, as it lives among us in reality—frequently selecting villages for its place of residence, and too often making itself prominent by its odor. They are destructive to eggs and younng fowls, yet render important service in gardens by freeing them from bugs and insects that are even more troublesome than himself, but less disagreeable.

MINK.

This little animal is quite common in this county. They live upon the banks of streams, and their food is frogs, small fishes, and fish spawns;—since their fur has become so valuable they have been sought after by almost every one, yet it has become so wary of the hunter that they do not render it extinct. It is so active in water that it will dive at the flash of a gun, which renders it almost impossible to shoot it in the water. It is easily tamed and fond of caresses, yet, like a cat, its good nature is not always to be depended upon. A good mink skin is now worth from four to five and one half dollars.

MARTIN, OR SABLE.

This animal is fast decreasing in numbers, yet some are still annually taken. Its food is the young of birds and mice and sometimes even hares and partridges. It will ascend trees in search of birds' nests or to escape when pursued It is a quick-motioned sprightly animal, not easily tamed, but capable of some docility.

WEASEL.

The weasel is brown or black in summer, and white in winter; he is a spry fellow, and you hardly see him before he is gone. They feed on young rats and mice, also eat eggs and sometimes kill fowls. They are easily tamed, full of fun and frolic, and anxious to examine everything that is new to them.

BATS.

This small creature—flying into houses by night, and a constant accompaniment of all pleasant summer evenings out doors—seldom seen by day, lies torpid through the winter suspended by one foot from some cavern or a cleft of rock, and seems to hold in its habits a stillness and ancient superstition which we can hardly divest ourselves of. In past ages they have seldom been mentioned unless in connection with some magic spell. In Macbeth the witches put in their boiling cauldron—

"Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake,
Egg of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog."

But it is for us to divest them of all superstition and believe them what they are—a winged mouse, in appearance at least. Their structure is peculiar,—their teeth are like those of a dog; their wings are so peculiar in shape and texture that they must be examined to be understood; and no one ever examines one without having a vivid impression of their appearance through life.

MOLES.

We here step upon a curiosity so small as to be almost spurned, yet so busy as to show themselves much in advance of their size. Their habits are partially unknown. The common mole constructs long and intricate galleries in the ground through which it traverses in search of food. and is seldom seen on the surface. Of all this family the star-nosed mole is the most peculiar. Its habits are supposed to be similar to the other, yet not so much is known of them. They are usually found upon meadow-land around old logs or fences and old houses. Their color is a little darker than the other kinds, and their fur is of the finest quality. Their nose is long and tapering, being ended by a wheel-shaped protuberance which has twenty points. The use of this appendage is unknown, but it is supposed to aid in some way its passage through the soil. They are seldom seen, as they venture forth only in the night.

Digitized by Google

THE RABBIT OR HARE.

This peculiar animal, varying in color from from a beautiful white in winter to its summer dress of reddish brown, is here very numerous in low swampy lands and second growth skirting-clearings, and was formerly so throughout the state. But as the country becomes more thickly settled, its numerous enemies, increased by men and dogs, prey to such an extent upon them that they fast diminish. They are destroyed in great numbers by eagles, hawks and owls, as well as by all the carnivorous beasts of the forest. When pursued by dogs, at first they seem to pay no great attention to it as they are so fleet as to easily keep out of their way; but after becoming wearied and doubling many times upon their tracks they will crawl into some hole in a stone wall or hollow log where they frequently become an easy prey. There are two species however, one being much more liable to take the apparent advantage of a hiding place than the other; though in many respects they are much alike. Their young are the most timid and defenceless of all quadrupeds; being at an early age compelled to take care of themselves, they are frequently met with in fields so young as to be easily caught. In fine, their principal defense is the mercy of their enemies. They subsist upon clover and succulent herbs in summer, and upon bark and buds in the winter. When pursued they will frequently leap 20 feet at a time, thus confusing the dog that is unused to them, and showing their great agility. They, although now quite plenty, are on the decrease.

SQUIRRELS.

This sprightly denizen of the forest is full of fun and frolic, and almost as quick in motion as a bird. They possess an agility in leaping and climbing which excels all other animals. Although the different kinds are similar in their food and many of their habits, yet their disposition widely differs. The gray squirrel, though the largest, is possessed of more timidity than others; they delight in the highest trees, and it is rather difficult to get a fair shot at them with a gun, as they are always on the opposite side. The red squirrel is the next in size, and possesses a [illegible] amount of daring, which we might call [illegible]k. I have taken many of them and [illegible] alive for the Zoological Gardens of J. A. Cutting, of Boston, and have therefore had a chance to study their character. There is a great variety of disposition among them, some being very pleasant and almost tame from the first, and others being the most revengeful and quarrelsome possible. At one time I put 12 in a cage together, and the next morning there was but one alive—they having fought until the most wily and revengeful had won the day. I found it would seldom do to put more than two together, and then they would often fight. They fought very much like dogs, and generally killed each other by a bite in the throat.

The striped squirrel or chipmunk, as he is generally called, is more often seen, and exists in greater numbers than all others. He is timid, spry, and will often dodge a stone or stick when one really believes it quite impossible. They burrow in the ground, and when they dig their burrows they carry off the dirt in their cheek-pouches, dropping it some distance from the hole—never allowing any in their immediate vicinity. These burrows are often intricate, and frequently connect with each other, and almost always have two or more openings. They lay up their store of nuts and seeds, and, retiring to their burrows in winter, are seldom seen from the 15th of November to the 1st of April.

The flying squirrel is frequently met with, yet is much more seldom seen than any other species. As its habits are nocturnal, it seldom leaves its nest in the day-time. Though called a flying squirrel, in reality it cannot fly, but has the power of spreading its body out in such a manner, as it were, to form a parachute, which enables them to sail along, having to gain their impulse from a leap. They will ascend high on one tree and then leaping from that will sail towards another tree at a considerable distance, which they will reach before striking the ground, although they generally alight low on the trunk—thus they ascend and perform the like feat again, usually being able to escape pursuit. I have frequently kept them in cages, and they soon become very tame—are mild in disposition, easily reared, yet timid with strangers. As they are approached, if afraid they will roll their tails over their faces, and seem to think they are hid from view. They are not so wild by nature and are more easily tamed than the other species. When tame they are very docile, and although not fond of being handled are willing to have their backs stroked carefully, and seem to enjoy being noticed. They sleep during the day, but when night comes they begin their frolics, which only end with daylight. I raised at one time four young, and found them very playful—turning somersaults by the half hour at a time so fast as to look like a wheel. They are not quarrelsome, but generally very kind and docile. They, like the gray and red squirrel, live in hollow trees, while the striped burrow in the ground.

RAT.

The muskrat, so called from their strong musky odor, are very plenty on our streams, sometimes doing serious injury to mill-dams. Like the beaver they are excellent swimmers, and build dwellings of mud; but they lay up no food for winter—living upon roots and grasses that grow on the edge of the stream.

NORWAY RAT.

This, which is the common rat in and about our buildings, was an original native of India, from whence it was brought to Europe, and from Norway it passed in lumber ships to England, and from thence to the United States at the commencement of the revolution, and gradually extended itself over the continent.

MOUSE.

The common mouse of the country, like the rat, did not exist here at the first settlement of the county, but was brought from Europe in vessels of merchandise. They are beautiful little creatures, yet regarded by every one with disgust. The jumping mouse may be met with in almost every grain field; they are very active, sometimes clearing five or six feet at a jump. In structure it resembles the kangaroo. They lie dormant during the winter, and are seldom out in the spring before the 1st of July.

The meadow-mouse is the common mouse of the fields, and lives in the winter on grass-roots, and is many times very destructive to the coming grass crop. They are not so active as the other kinds, neither are they so well proportioned in shape. They are occasionally nearly all destroyed by a cold, icy winter; and are never very troublesome, unless we have three or four mild winters in succession, with a great depth of snow and the ground not much frozen.

WOODCHUCK.

This animal is well known in all parts of the state, and in dry and sandy localities is often very plenty; and, from its great love of clover, beans, &c., is an annoyance to farmers—sometimes to full half the value of their bean and clover crop. Their holes are usually under a stump, log or stone, and frequently are extensive and contain six or eight members in a family. They are easily trapped, but it is difficult to fully overcome their depredations. During the winter they stop up their hole to exclude the cold air and remain like a bear in a sleeping or dormant state. They are easily domesticated, and as such are cleanly, playful and fond of attentions from those with whom they are acquainted, but wary of strangers.

BEAVER.

This intelligent animal is nearly extinct, yet the last one heard of was taken in Essex Co. a few years since. Their work is on all our streams, and so extensive that it shows they were once very numerous. Many of their dams still exist, showing their excellent construction. Their location is always the best possible. In some sections the remains of their habitations are still visible.

HEDGEHOG.

This peculiar creature is still quite plenty in this county. They are solitary and sluggish. Their principal defense being in the sharp spines or quills which grow among their hair in all parts of their body, but much more plentiful on their back. When attacked they will put their head between their legs and, rolled up in a ball, are a formidable foe to a dog or fox, and it requires heavy blows to dispatch them. They are easily tamed, and though not an agreeable pet, love to be petted. Some suppose they have the power to throw their quills, but such is not the case. They bristle them up, and when the points enter the lips of a dog or any other substance they are more easily disengaged from the hedgehog than from that substance, owing to the point being barbed with little indentures—all tending to prevent its extraction. Their food is entirely vegetable.

BIRDS.

BIRDS OF PREY.

Birds of this order have powerful claws and hooked bills. They pursue and destroy small quadrupeds and all other birds. Some in the following list are not very plenty, yet all are seen in this county: Bald eagle, golden eagle, fish hawk, large-footed hawk, broad-winged hawk, slate-colored hawk, goshawk, marsh hawk, coopers hawk, red-tailed hawk, pigeon hawk, screech owl, hawk owl, snowy owl, great-horned owl, short-eared owl, cinereous owl, barred owl, saw-whet, barn owl.

OMNIVOROUS BIRDS.

In this class their food is mostly insects and carrion, yet they will many of them eat grain and fruits when hard pressed by hunger. They have generally a robust, medium-sized bill—sharp on the edges—upper mandible more or less convex, and notched at the point; feet with four toes—three before and one behind; wings of medium length, quill-feathers terminating in a point. They live, for the most part, in companies or flocks, and are monogamous. The greater part of them build their nests on trees, but some of the species build upon the ground or upon rocks. Some of the following list are seldom seen, yet sometimes visit our county. Many of them are very numerous: Meadow lark, Baltimore oriole, red-winged blackbird, cow blackbird, bob-o-link, crow blackbird, rusty blackbird, common crow, raven, blue jay, Canada jay, chickadee, Hudson Bay titmouse, cedar bird.

INSECTIVOROUS BIRDS.

This class lives on insects alone in the summer, and on berries mostly in the winter. The bill is either short or of moderate length. It is straight, rounded or awl-shaped. The upper mandible is curved and notched towards the point, most commonly having at the base some stiff hairs directed forward. The feet have three toes before and one behind, all on the same level. The outer toe is partially united to the middle one. Their voices are generally melodious, yet some make but few sounds. They may be enumerated as follows: Butcher bird, kingbird, phoebee, wood pewee, summer warbler, spotted warbler, Nashville warbler, black-throated green warbler, small pewee, spotted flycatcher, yellow-throated vireo, white-eyed vireo, red-eyed vireo, solitary vireo, brown thrush, cat bird, robin, Wilson's thrush, New York thrush, golden-crowned thrush, hermit thrush, yellow-crowned warbler, yellow-red poll warbler, pine-creeping warbler, cerulean warbler, blackburn warbler, chestnut-sided warbler, black-throated warbler, Maryland yellow-throat warbler, worm-eating warbler, black and white creeper, ruby-crowned wren, fiery-crowned wren, house wren, winter wren, wood wren, blue-bird, brown lark.

GRANIVOROUS BIRDS.

The birds in this order live on seeds; have a strong, short, thick, and more or less conic bill which extends back upon the front part of the head. The ridge upon the upper mandible is usually somewhat flattened, and both portions of the bill are usually without the notches before described. The feet have three toes before and one behind. The birds spend the summer in pairs, but in autumn they assemble in large flocks and migrate southerly. The names are: Snow bunting, bay-winged bunting, Savannah bunting, song sparrow, snow-bird, pine linnet, ferruginous finch, white-throat finch, white-crown finch, arctic ground finch, tree sparrow, chipping sparrow, field sparrow, swamp sparrow, gold-finch, towhe ground finch, purple linnet, pine crossbeak, common croosbill, white-winged crossbill.

YOKED-TOED BIRDS.

This order, called "Zygodactyli," or yoked-toed, have always two toes in front and two behind, yet one of the back toes is many times reversible. The form of the bill is various, but in general more or less arched and hooked. Their names are as follows: Yellow-bill cuckoo, black-bill cuckoo, gold-wing woodpecker, red-headed woodpecker, hairy woodpecker, downy woodpecker, arctic three-toed woodpecker.

SLENDER-BILLED BIRDS.

This class of birds have a long, slender, somewhat arched and awl-shaped bill—generally wedge-shaped at the end. The feet have four toes—three before and one behind; the back toe always longer than the front ones; the nails are long and curved, and for that reason they can run on the side of trees, and act somewhat like woodpeckers, and from their resemblance are sometimes called so. There is another peculiarity about them: when caught they feign death (especially the humming bird) until a chance for their escape presents, when they are up and gone. The following are their names, though some are rare: White-breast nuthatch, brown creeper, red-bellied nuthatch, ruby-throat humming bird.

HALCYONS.

We have but one bird of this order, and that is the belted kingfisher. He has a sharp-pointed bill, short legs and small feet. The female and male are nearly the same in color, being black above and white beneath. They build their nests like bank-swallows.

SWALLOWS.

The birds belonging to this tribe have short bills, curved downwards slightly; long legs; three toes before and one behind, which is often reversible; nails hooked and wings long. They feed on insects which they catch on the wing. They all migrate to warmer countries during the winter, and never bury themselves, as some suppose, in the mud. What gave rise to that foolish idea I am at a loss to determine. Their names are as follows: Purple martin, barn swallow, cliff swallow, white-bellied swallow, bank swallow, chimney swallow, whip-poor-will, night-hawk.

PIGEON.

Of the pigeon tribe we have but one variety, and that is the passenger pigeon. Some years this bird is very plenty, and then again few will be seen. They generally keep in flocks, yet sometimes a few will seem to make a locality their home and raise their young in seclusion. They are fast diminishing in numbers.

GALLINACEOUS BIRDS.

This class of birds contribute more to man than any other. They have a short, convex bill, and the female is always less brilliant in plumage than the male. Their feet and legs are stout, and their wings small in proportion to their bodies. To this class our domestic fowls belong. Their names are: Quail, partridge, spruce partridge.

WADING BIRDS.

In this order the bill varies in form, but is usually long and frequently straight. The legs are long and generally destitute of feathers for quite a distance above the knees. Their toes are long and slender, and they are more or less nocturnal in their habits. They live along the shores of lakes, ponds and rivers, and feed upon fish, reptiles and insects. They may be enumerated as follows; Plover, crane, great blue heron, green heron, common snipe, coot, night-heron, solitary tattler, spotted tattler, woodcock.

WEB-FOOTED BIRDS.

This order consists wholly of water-birds. The toes of this species are more or less connected by a web, and they are seldom seen at a great distance from the water unless upon the wing. Their names are as follows: Gull, Canadian goose, wood duck, mallard, dusky duck, blue-winged teal, loon.

REPTILES.

Of this class of animal existence Essex County cannot boast. We have a usual supply of frogs and two or three kinds of harmless serpents, but they are few in number and small in size. These animals have cold red blood, with a dry skin, either naked or covered with scales, and in many species periodically renewed. The temperature of the body is usually the same as the medium in which they move, but they become torpid, and apparently without life, when the temperature is below freezing. We have one of the tortoise tribe, generally known as the painted tortoise, but they are not very abundant.

FISHES.

Fishes we have in abundance, yet we have not so large a variety as in some sections. The pickerel, longe, perch and brook trout are the most numerous, and, although somewhat decreasing in numbers, may yet be considered quite plenteous. We have almost all the varieties usual in the state, yet some are rare and seldom seen.

COUNTY ITEMS.

Major Whitcomb.

Miss Hemenway:—In accordance with your request and my promise, I have scribbled off the foregoing historical sketch of Major Whitcomb. It is substantially as he related it to me in watching with him in his last sickness, and may be relied upon as strictly true. I have not been able to learn his first name. If you deem it of great importance, I think Cummings Whitcomb, a relative of his, residing at Island Pond, Vt., could furnish you his name, &c. You of course will make use of just so much or little of it as you please.

Respectfully yours,

David Goodall.

St. Johnsbury East, Feb. 11, 1863.

Major Whitcomb was the most prominent pioneer trapper and hunter of Essex county, often spending months at a time in the wilderness, subsisting upon game, and falling in frequently with Indians and camping and hunting with them, always taking pains to conciliate them and secure their friendship. At one time he found an Indian in early winter alone, nearly starved, his gun-lock having broken, and took him to his camp and fed him and kept him there three weeks, and trapped with him and divided furs, and gave him food to last him home.

Whitcomb served under Putnam in the old French war, was in several fights, and taken prisoner by the Indians and carried to Quebec. He often wrestled, ran and shot at a mark with the Indians; but always managed to let them beat him, as it would have given great offence to beat them. After Ticonderoga was taken by Allen, Whitcomb hastened there and served as a scout. The commander of the fort received a circular from Gen. Washington, saying that he wished to retaliate upon the British officers for the wanton butcheries and massacres of women and children by the British Indians; and, to accomplish it, offered any American soldier who would go into Canada and waylay and shoot a British general, a major's commission and pay in the American army, and a captain's commission for a colonel, &c., &c. Whitcomb and two others volunteered to go and try. One man deserted before reaching the line. Whitcomb and his companion pursued their way to near Three Rivers, and ascertained that a brigade of British soldiers and some Indians were about to move towards the line in a few days, and the route they would go. Whitcomb selected a place of ambush, and made all ready. The night before the British were to move Whitcomb's companion, alarmed by their dangerous position, deserted and went over to the enemy and informed them of Whitcomb's plans and intentions. Whitcomb was greatly annoyed and vexed, but had no thought of losing his major's commission. He moved nearer to the British camp, fixing upon a new place for his ambuscade where a small river made a turn and came near the road—a deep, narrow ravine running back from the river some distance. His position was at the root of a large tree blown down, the top reaching into the ravine, and the root affording cover and port-holes to fire through. This was about 15 rods from the road on the right side, and the river on the left side, and commanded a good view of the road in the direction the enemy would come. The ground to the river was covered with a thick growth of small trees, and briers and alders in the ravine. About 2 o'clock P. M. the British column came in sight slowly passed. Several mounted officers passed, but none whose grade seemed high enough. Then came in sight an officer mounted upon a splendid white steed, richly dressed, with a broad red silk sash around his waist, and a long white plume in his hat, with several staff officers near by and Indian scouts in the road. Whitcomb thought he would do, and when he came within 50 rods took deliberate aim and fired. He saw the officer throw his hands up and reel back, and quickly hid under the root. The Indians in the road near by saw the smoke of his gun and dashed into the woods after him, and supposing he would run back did not stop to look for him there, but hurried on and crossed the log within 20 feet of him. As soon as they had passed, Whitcomb crawled rapidly along side of the log into the ravine, and down that under the bridge into the river and up it in the water under the thick alders, occasionally coming upon the land for a rod or two, and crossing over and back. He had got about half a mile when he heard the blood hounds boo on his track; but all his arrangements had been made to baffle and elude them, and he succeeded in delaying them so much that he gained upon them until dark, when he took a smaller stream, running out of his direct route, and waded in that a mile, then left it and traveled all night and the next day without stopping, keeping in the woods.

The officer shot was General Gordon, and he died in half an hour. At the time Whitcomb shot him all his provision consisted of about half a pint of parched corn, and that was all the food he had for four days. On the fifth day he crossed the line into Vermont, nearly starved and his shoes entirely worn out. In all this time he had not kindled a fire or dared to shoot game, lest the smoke and report of his gun should indicate his whereabouts to the pursuing Indians; but necessity, which knows no law, compelled him to act. He did not dare go to any house, fearing tories; but finding a yoke of oxen feeding in a pasture, he shot one through the head and quickly cut out as much steak as he needed, and skin enough for a pair of moccasins and run into a deep swamp, kindled a fire, half roasted some steak and eat it upon the run, again fearing the smoke would betray him. The next morning he had gone about a mile only when he came upon an Indian camp, where several had stopped over night, the fire not being out. He turned and traveled east half a day and then turned south and hurried on until he arrived at Royalton, Vt., where he went into a house and asked for food and rest.

The British had offered a thousand crowns for his head, and two thousand crowns for him delivered at any British post alive, and the Indians pursued and hunted for him along the lake to the very walls of Ticonderoga. After some little time had elapsed, Whitcomb joined a small frontier guard stationed at Lancaster, N. H., in a block-house; feeling secure, he occasionally went out hunting. One day, when out alone, he was suddenly seized from behind, disarmed and bound by five Indians, and hurried off into Canada and down the St. Francis river. Night came on dark; when within 20 miles of a British post, at the mouth of the river, where the Indians were to give him up and take the reward, they camped upon an island. Whitcomb's feet and hands were securely tied to a stake and otherwise bound, and in addition he was bound to two Indians, one sleeping each side close to him; escape seemed impossible. Whitcomb recognized in one of his captors the Indian whom he had years before found alone nearly famished and fed and supplied with food, and had by look and gesture tried to make the Indian know him, but entirely failed to gain any sign of recognition. Death seemed inevitable and hope departed, but yet he slept. About 2 o'clock A. M., Whitcomb was awakened by gentle taps on the mouth to indicate silence, and then the fingers passed to his eyes and found them open. His bonds were all carefully cut. He was directed, by motion of the hand, to arise and follow, which he cautiously did to the river. The Indian whom he had formerly aided when starving, turned to him and handed him his gun, powder horn, ball-pouch, knife and a bag of parched corn, reminding Whitcomb of his former kindness to him, said, "I now pay you—go, go." Whitcomb slipped into a canoe and cast it off and pushed out into the river. The Indian gave him the farewell salute, by motion, and turned back to the camp. Whitcomb quickly pushed back to the shore and cut a hole in the bottom of each remaining canoe and pushed them off into the stream, resumed his own canoe and crossed immediately to the shore, then cut a hole in his canoe and pushed it off and ran for life. About 4 o'clock he heard the Indians' distant whoop of alarm, anp soon after the whoop of disappointment and anger when they found all their canoes gone. Whitcomb pushed on with all his energy, day and night, until safe—not stopping until he reached Massachusetts, the home of early childhood, where he remained during the war. In due time he received his major's commission and pay, and in his old age received a major's pension. His good friend, the Indian, he never saw or heard of after their night-parting on the island.

CANAAN.

BY H. A. CUTTING, OF LUNENBURGH.

This is the most north-easterly town in Essex county, and in Vermont. Its latitude is 44° 57′, and longitude 5° 22′, and it contains over 29 square miles, or about 18,700 acres. It is bounded north by Hereford in Canada, east by Connecticut river and southwest by Lemington and Averill. It lies opposite Stewartstown, N. H. It has two post offices, Canaan and South Canaan. It was chartered by Vermont to John Wheeler and others, Feb. 25, 1782, but had previously been granted to Jonathan and Arad Hunt and William Williams. The town of Norfolk, which was chartered to Bezaleel Woodward Feb. 27, 1782, has been annexed to Canaan, both being small townships leave Canaan still smaller than most towns in the state, as above shown. It was first settled by Silas Sargent, John Hugh and Hubbard Spencer, who moved their families into Canaan in 1785. As a frontier town it was subject to considerable disturbance in the war of 1812 with Great Britain. It was in this town that one Beach was shot by John Dennett, an officer of customs. And much feeling was shown in the different broils attendant on the collection of revenue, and the prevention of contraband articles of war being smuggled to the enemy. (See County Chapter.) The religious denominations are Congregationalists, Baptists and Methodists. This town is watered by Leech's stream, Willard's brook, &c., which afford good mill privileges. The former is about two rods wide at its junction with the Connecticut, and flows from Leed's pond, which is partly in Canada. There are some fine meadows on the Connecticut, and much good land in other portions of the town. Its population in 1860 was 408. The first justice was Elias Gates, chosen in 1798.

Digitized by Google

The most remarkable fact however about this town is, that no one in town can be induced to write its history—which accounts for this short sketch.

[We visited the town at the same time that we visited the other towns in the county generally, and engaged writers for the respective towns. At this time we engaged George W. Hartshorn, of the same town, to write the history. He made no objection, but consented apparently with pleasure. We have repeatedly notified him when we would want the paper, which, without any given reason or excuse, he has failed to send in to us up to this date—April, 1867—and, for this reason, we have referred Canaan to the end of the county.—Ed.]

SOLDIERS FURNISHED BY CANAAN.

THREE YEARS MEN.

Names.	Age.	Date of Enlistment.	Co.	Regt.	Remarks.
Beach, Mortimer					Unaccounted for.
Colby, Thomas	23	Dec. 10, 1862.	F	3	Dropped Jan. 26, 1863.
Farron, Thomas	18	Aug. 10, 1861.	E	3	Discharged Sept. 30, 1862.
Gamsby, George W.	22	July 3, '61.	H	3	Musician; discharged Dec. 28, 1862.
Harriman, William W.	27	Aug. 15, '62.	D	3	Trans. to Invalid Corps Sept. 1, 1863.
Kemp, Stephen L.	27	Aug. 15, '62.	E	3	Died June 4, 1864.
Lemphere, Edward	25	Nov. 10, '61.		do.	Died May 20, 1864.
Laughton, James	41	Dec. 10, '61.		do.	Dropped Jan. 20, 1863.
Laughton, Lewis	24	Jan. 7, '62.		do.	Discharged Feb. 16, 1863.
Pierce, Abel	25	Aug. 22, '62.		do.	Died Dec. 23, 1864.
Robinson, John	22	Feb. 16, '65.		17	Mustered out June 28, 1865.
Rosseau, Joseph	26	Sept. 1, '62.	E	3	Not accounted for.
Stuart, William C.	20	July 5, '61.		do.	Mustered out July 27, 1864.
Weeks, John	22	June 1, '61.		do.	Killed at Wilderness, May 5, 1864.
Willard, Lucius H.	19	Feb. 16, '65.		17	Mustered out June 28, 1865.

CREDITED UNDER CALL FOR 300,000, AND SUBSEQUENT CALLS FOR ONE YEAR, AND NINE MONTHS MEN.

Baker, Francis	20	Dec. 7, '63.	I	3	Died June 7, 1864, of wounds received in action.
Barrett, C. W.	19	Dec. 8, '63.		do.	Mustered out June 24, 1865.
Cable, Samuel	18	Dec. 12, '63.		do.	Mustered out July 11, 1865.
Ingalls, Nathaniel G.	34	Dec. 10, '63.	H	Cav.	Not accounted for.
Lathrop, Allison	18	Dec. 14, '63.	G	3	Transferred to Co. I July 5, 1865; transferred to Co. G July 25, 1864; discharged Sept. 13, 1864.
Danforth, Eugene M.				Cav'y.	Volunteer for one year.
Gamsby, James M.	31	Nov. 21, '61.	B	3	Re-enlisted Dec. 21, 1863; transferred from Co. B to Co. E.
Chamberlain, Ruel				Cav'y.
Clark, George W.	37	Oct. 1, 1864.	F	7	Mustered out July 14, 1865.

VOLUNTEERS FOR NINE MONTHS.

Alexander, William,	18	Sept. 15, '62.	E	15	Died Dec. 17, 1862.
Baker, Warren H.	22	do.		do.	Mustered out Aug. 5, 1863.
Barnet, William W.	42	do.		do.	Sergeant; mustered out Aug. 5, 1863.
Bishop, Hersey M.	18	do.		do.	Died Jan. 29, 1863.
Cranmore, Joseph E.	44	do.		do.	Mustered out Aug. 5, 1863,
Dillon, William	34	do.		do.	do.
Lamphere, Albion	18	do.		do.	do.
Owen, Hiram T.	27	do.		do.	do.
Rowell, Ransom	29	do.		do.	Discharged April 8, 1863.
Young, Winthrop	44	do.		do.	Mustered out Aug. 5, 1863.

[illegible]ED AND PAID $300,00 COMMUTATION.—F. S. Brown, Thomas Colby, John Gould, [illegible]. Gould, Albert Luther.

[illegible]D AND PROCURED SUBSTITUTE.—Sidney Morrison.

Digitized by Google

EAST HAVEN.

MILITARY.

There were but very few settlements here during Revolutionary times, but there have been several residents of the town who were Revolutionary pensioners; and others who would have been, had they lived until the time when pensions were granted. During the war of 1812, Seth Cushman was an officer, and stationed on the frontier of Canada, and three men were drafted from Guildhall, viz: Henry Cheney, —— Phelps and John Dodge. Mr. D. procured a substitute, in the person of a Mr. Frazier.

Of the best and most active militia officers, resident in Guildhall, were Adjutant, afterward Brigadier Gen., Seth Cushman; Capt.—subsequently Colonel—Henry Hall; Capt.—then Major—Caleb Amy; and Capt. William Amy.

In 1844 when the Militia of the State were disbanded, Milton Cutler was Capt. of the Guildhall company, and B. B. Waid 1st Lieut. There were no enlistments from this town for the Mexican War.

The following is a list of those who have enlisted in the army of the Union to put down the Rebellion of 1861: James M. Cutler, Aaron R. Wheeler, Joseph W. Sanderson, Geo. D. Bates, Chas. Stone, Chas. W. Bartlett, J. Benway, Timothy Grannis, Chas. Beaton, Geo. A. Ford, Nelson Palmer, Henry Sanderson, Edward Grannis, Chas. W. Joy, Abner Bailey, John Cook, Simon Stone, Geo. Gage, James R. Simmes, William Drew, James E. Webb, Wilbur F. Ball, Joseph T. Bemis, Samuel Hannox, Benjamin F. Hicks. John Beaton, and Ashbel C. Meacham, Sept. 1862.

NUMBER OF MEN FURNISHED FOR THE WAR FOR 3 YEARS, AND NAMES.

Wesley P. Carrol;* Hollis Coe, deserter; Eli R. Horsford,* shot; A. W. Hudson; J. M. Hudson,* died at Andersonville; L. N. Hudson;* S. S. Hudson; Henry McMiller; Robert Murray; Wm. Murray; N. S. Powers; Alanson White;* Elam White, shot; Wm. Dawland; Charles E. Morgan, deserted; John L. Horsford, lost a leg; Lewis B. Cook, shot.

NINE MONTHS MEN.

Charles Canfield, Wm. A. Eggleston, Chas. Moultraup, Geo. W. Humphrey, Eli R. Horsford.

PAID COMMUTATION.

William M. Smith.

PROCURED SUBSTITUTE.

O. T. Walter.

Re-enlisted are marked thus *. There was not any bounty paid to a man from East Haven. We furnished ten men for other towns. Respectfully yours, D. C. Hudson.

GRANBY.

ADDITIONAL STATISTICS RELATING TO SOLDIERS FROM GRANBY, FORWARDED APRIL 23, 1867.

Lieut. Geo. O. Ford re-enlisted Jan. 4, 1864, at New Orleans; received a Captain's commission the same month—was furloughed and came to Vermont during the winter; returned to his regiment, and in July, 1864, was transferred to the Department of Virginia; participated in defensive and offensive operations about Washington in the Shenandoah Valley, &c.; was in the battle of Winchester, Sept. 19, '64,—Fisher's Hill, Sept. 22—Cedar Creek, Oct. 19; was shot through both legs in the early part of the fight, retreated with his regiment rather than be prisoner a second time; was furloughed, and during the winter of 1864 and '65 was honorably discharged.

Ethan P. Shores re-enlisted Jan. 4, '64; was furloughed and came to Vermont with Capt. Ford; was transferred with his regiment to Virginia; promoted to Sergeant September, 1864; was in all the marches and battles of his regiment, including Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek; was in the thickest of the fight at Cedar Creek, twice rescued the company colors when the color-bearers were shot down, and bore the colors during the afternoon, bringing them off the field of carnage unhurt; discharged with his company, June 28, '65.

Paschal P. Shores re-enlisted with his brother Ethan; came to Vermont with him; was not uniformly healthy; was always prompt to obey orders, whether to march or fight, when able. On the morning of Oct. 19, 1864, when the rebels surprised and drove Gen. Wright's army, he was shot through the left lung; after the rebels were driven back he was found on the battle-field, about nine in the evening, but lived only two or three hours.

Joseph W. Gleason enlisted Nov. 30, 1863, Battery B, 11th Vt.; health soon failed him; was in the hospital and furloughed most of the time until his discharge for permanent disability, May 29, 1865. Has not regained his health.

Digitized by Google

Benjamin C. Gleason, Nov. 27, 1863, Battery B, 11th regiment; always ready for any service; was a soldier of all work; was discharged Aug. 29, 1865, unharmed, except by the "shakes."

Henry O. Matthews enlisted for one year Aug. 23, 1864, Co. A, 11th regiment; fought with company through thick and thin; helped pursue Lee's retreating army; came out of the service sound and well; discharged about July 7, 1865.

Wm. H. Griffin enlisted Sept. 1, 1864, for one year, Co. A, 11th Vt.; did not reach his company, for want of transportation, until about the 1st of October; was wounded at the battle of Cedar Creek in left arm and right side; arm taken off between elbow and wrist; was in the hospital at Winchester, W. Va., Baltimore, Md., and Montpelier, Vt,, most of the fall and winter; discharged disabled for life.

Edmond Hix enlisted Jan. 1, 1864, in 2d Vt. Battery; was at Port Hudson, La., during the remaining part of the war; entered the service strong and healthy; was discharged with the Battery, Aug. 1865, sick and emaciated; lingered along with fever, chills and resultant diseases, and died April 25, 1866.

Of those who went into the U. S. service on Granby's quota were B. McDaniel, Geo. O. (1st and 2d enlistment) and Alonzo L. Ford, George W., Ethan P. and Paschal P. Shores, Otis E. Griffin, Solon D. Buzzell, R. I. Boyce (1st enlistment), John W. Boyce, H. C. Matthews (town bounty of $600), Perrie Plackett colored cook for Co. K, 8th Vt., and David R. Bruce (of Burke, enlisted under the rule of first in diligence first in right) for $350,00 bounty—a surplus of one over all calls. Matthews and Bruce only had town bounties from Granby. J. W. and B. C. Gleason, E. P. and P. P. Shores (2d enlistment) for St. Johnsbury; R. T. Boyce (2d enlistment) and J. W. Buzzell (9 months) for Lyndon; J. M. Boyce, Barre; Wm. H. Griffin, Concord, and E. Hix for Pawlett. Granby had neither runaways or deserters—all "true blue."

ERRATA.

Page	628,	column	1,	line	37—	for prompted, read promoted.
	659	"	2	"	15	" Isle La Motho, read Isle La Mott.
	660	"	1	"	17	" a yacht or sail-vessel, read he found a yacht.
	681	"	1	"	43	" and then took its place, read another took its place.
	682	"	2	"	35	" until 1821, read in 1821.
	684	"	2	"	49	" New York Canal Line, read New York Canada Line.
	688	"	2	"	17	" by giving to them, read by receiving from them.
	692	"	1	"	42	" to sink the engine, read to use the engine.
	693	"	1	"	53	" 1849, read 1859.
	696	"	2	"	47	" to arrest, read to await.
	699	"	1	"	21	insert President after elected.
	701	"	1	"	48	for L. W. Tupper, read L. H. Tupper.
	703	"	2	"	6	" Lucuzthm, read Lumsden.
	703	"	2	"	7	" Glascow, read Glasgow.
	806	"	1	"	33	" unbounded, read undoubted.
	807	"	2	"	26	" 86, read 90.
	1015	"	1	"	7	insert the following names: Edgar Stoddard, Harvey Chamberlin, Addison Harris, H. M. Harvey, Toussaint Brunell, Wm. Willey, Irving Davis.

NOTE.—We have moreover on file several historical papers of considerable information for the counties embraced in this volume, and others engaged which it is deemed expedient to reserve for a more general and complete Appendix for the entire work; among which we may mention a paper on the First Settler of Middlebury; Gen. Whitelaw, the first General Surveyor of the State, by Rev. Thomas Goodwillie; Antiquarian Relics, from Henry Stevens, of Barnet; Military Records, from the counties published before the late rebellion or its conclusion; and Additional Biographies—especially of deceased historians and contributors—among which will appear Governor Fairbanks, Rev. Lyman Matthews, [illegible] etc., etc.—Ed.

COMMEMORATION TABLE.

Wherein are recorded the names of all those who feel a sufficient interest in gathering up and preserving the fast perishing records and traditions of our forefathers, to patronize a Magazine devoted to that purpose.

The names of lady-assistants are in small capitals; if they assist in more than one town, starred; of town agents, in italics; of subscribers for the entire work, more than one copy of the work, or for getting up a club or rendering extra aid, starred.

Donors of Portraits and Engravings.

Hon. E. Fairbanks, St. Johnsbury.†
Hon. Ira H. Allen, Irasburgh.†
Mrs. Cornelia Roosevelto, New York.
Hon. Hiland Hall, North Bennington.
Hiram A. Cutting, Lunenburgh.
Dr. Wm. Mattocks, Lyndon.
Hon. James M. Slade, Middlebury.
Rev. Thadore A. Hopkins, Burlington, Vt. Episcopal Institute.
Rev. J. K. Converse, Burlington, Burlington Ladies' Seminary.
Hon. David French, Burlington, Burlington Common.
C. O. French, University of Vt.
Charles A. Miller, University of Vt.
Sion E. Howard, "
J. N. Pomeroy, "
Hon. Levi Underwood, "
Col. Lemuel B. Platt, "
Carlos Baxter, Esq., "
E. O. Wires, "
Charles E. Allen, Esq., "
Lawrence G. Bigelow, "
Bradley B. Smalley, Esq., "
Rev. Henry P. Hickok, "
Henry Loomis, Esq., "
Nathaniel Parker, "
Prof. Geo. W. Benedict, Univ. of Vt.
J. S. Adams, Esq., "
A. W. Allen, "
Wm. L. Strong, "
J. C. Pierce, "
Paul T. Sweet, "
Edward Lyman, "
William Brinsmaid, "
Elijah Root, Esq., "
William Pierce, "
Murry & Reed, Bank Block.
Charles L. Hart, "
Hon. David French, "

Patronesses.

Or ladies who have obtained the most subscribers and otherwise the most pleasantly and efficiently aided this publication.

Mrs. C. H. Hosford, Whitehall, N. Y.
" A. C. Hopson, "
Miss Harriet A. Blaisdell, St. Albans.
" Fanny E. Clark, Middletown.
" Laura M. Church, Waterford.
" Nellie Hunt, Fairfax.
" M. L. R. Pearson, Peacham.
Mrs. Mary A. Pitkin, Burlington.†
Miss L. M. D. Flint, Irasburgh.
" Rosie M. Bill, W. Topsham.
Mrs. E. C. Robbins, Ludlow.
" P. H. White, Coventry.
Miss Martha S. Taylor, Proctorsville.
Mrs. G. W. Carr, St. Johnsbury.
Mrs. Mary B. Flint, St. Johnsbury.
Miss Marie S. Ladd, North Hero.
Mrs. Julia A. Curtis, St. Johnsbury.
" Roswell Farnham, Bradford.
Miss Laura Farnham, "
Mrs. Amy Bucklin, Wallingford.
Miss E. A. Ordway, Chester.
Mrs. M. H. Case, Waterbury.
Miss Marietta Peck, East Montpelier.
" M. E. Wooster, Middlebury.
" Nancy M. Haynes. Peru.
Mrs. A. A. Nicholson, Brandon.
Miss M. C. Butler, Swanton.
Miss Emma E. Redington, Morrisville
Mrs. S. W. Robinson, "
" E. W. Skeels, Highgate.
Miss E. L. Edgerton, N. Clarendon.
Mrs Anna Atkinson, Newbury.
Miss Catherine T. Edson, Brookfield.
Miss Kate P. Dodge, Barre.
" Augusta A. Preston, Danville.
" Mary S. Robbins, Hancock.
" Josie E. Briggs, Rochester.
" Lucia E. Barton, Ludlow.
" C. E. Morse, White R. Junction.
Mrs. Giles Merrill, St. Albans.

SUBSCRIBERS.

ADDISON CO.

WEST ADDISON.

*Hon. J. W. Strong

BRIDPORT.

Hon. Calvin Solace†
Charles Sanders

BRISTOL.

C. L. Smith

CORNWALL.

Rev. L. Matthews†

FERRISBURGH.

Wm. Deane

GRANVILLE.

*Gen. A. G. Allen

HANCOCK.

HATTIE M. ROBBINS
Eblin Claflin
Ehud Darling
Aaron S. Piper

MIDDLEBURY.

Justus Cobb
Hon. James Slade
Philip Battell, Esq
S. B. Rockwell
Prof. W. H. Parker
Rev. B. Labaree, D. D.
Mrs. W. F. Bascom
" I. F. Bolton
Mary E. Wooster
C. D. Noble

NEW HAVEN.

Lewis Meacham

ORWELL.

J. L. Hammond
David Hopkins
*S. N. Warren

RIPTON.

*S. Damon, P. M.

SALISBURY.

*Columbus Smith, Esq.
*Mrs. C. M. Dyer

SHOREHAM.

L. D. Larabee
*John Simonds
*Gasca Rich

† Deceased.

Digitized by Google

VERGENNES.

Hon. Geo. W. Grandy
*Cyrus M. Fisher, Esq
*Hon T. F. Woodbridge
Mrs. Lewis Hurlbut
" S. D. Goodrich

WEYBRIDGE.

A. J. Child
Francis Ayres.
M. V. Baker

WHITING.

*Whitfield Walker
Rev. J. Q. Ware

BENNINGTON CO.

ARLINGTON.

S. M. West, P. M. Club of six.

BENNINGTON.

*Hon. Hiland Hall
*Mrs. Hiland Hall
N. B. Hall, Esq
E. D. Hubel
George Lyman
*Peter Caldwell
*A. P. Carpenter

MANCHESTER.

Rev. R. S. Cushman
Mrs. E. B. Smith
Hon. L. Sergeant

PERU.

*Miss Nancy M. Haynes
* " Dorcas Simonds
" Mary E. Batchelder
E. P. C. Chandler
Rev. R. D. Miller

POWNAL.

Elijah Barber

RUPERT.

S. A. Maynard
Thos. Sheldon
J. H. Guild
Simeon Sheldon
Asa Urime
Aaron Whitcomb
Enos P. Sheldon
J. W. Whedon
Lyman Farrar
Wm. C. Bailey

READSBORO.

*Wm. Follet, Esq.

SANDGATE.

Mrs. Parmelia Smith
C. V. Smith

SHAFTSBURY.

F. L. Child

WOODFORD.

Stephen Gleason
Miss Fanny Parks

CALEDONIA CO.

Rev. Thos. Goodwillie*
Edward Harvey
Mrs. Alex. Harvey
*Rev. M. B. Bradford
Hon. James Gilchrist
Robert Harvey
Willard Stevens
John Brock
A. M. Miller
John Samuel
Claud Somers
A. Scott Laughlin
Mrs. L. G. Kimball
Edgar O. Matthews
Laura Goss
L. E. Scott
Hannah W. Gilfillan
Geo. W. Carr
Laura Lackie
J. A. Gould
Cyrus Hill
John P. Carr
Jane Caldwell

BURKE.

D. P. Hall
A. Harvey
Dr. Abel Brown
J. S. J. Bemis
Dr. Ira Brown
Rev. Rufus Godding†
Miss E. B. Chamberlain
Mrs. F. S. Humphrey
Viletta M. Humphrey
Horace Burpee
Betsy M. Latham
Dr. T. T. Dutton
*Miss Melissa Smith

DANVILLE.

Miss A. F. Preston
Mary A. Thompson
Mrs. Luke Swett
Rev. J. Eastman
Miss Myra Davis
*Hon. Bliss N. Davis
*Mrs. S. J. G. Vail
Miss Julia S. Morrill
Mrs. Jas. Guild
Miss Emily Guild
Timothy V. Harris
Mrs. Eunice Brainard

GROTON.

Helen Hall
Isaac N. Hall
Eliza J. Welch
Hosea Welch

HARDWICK.

*Miss A. Stevens
*Rev. J. Torrey
*Hon. Ora Orasby
*Dea. J. M. Stevens
*L. W. Delano, Esq
Samuel Morse
Alden E. Nelson, Esq
D. Bridgeman, Esq
Carlos French, Esq

LYNDON.

Mrs. Geo. W. Cahoon
Wm. A. Bemis
Hon. G. C. Cahoon*
Mrs. Philip Goss
*Gen. E. R. Chase
Miss Susan. S. Burt
I. W. Sanborne
John M. Weeks
Chas. W. McKay, Esq
Dr. Charles S. Cahoon
W. H. McGaffey, P. M.
*Justus Trull
*Samuel B. Mattocks
Dr. C. W. Scott
Hon. E. A. Cahoon
Mrs. C. C. Wilmarth
Dora A. Wilmarth
Clara A. Wilmarth
Jane B. Wilmarth
Mrs. Wm. Harvey
" Wm. McGaffey
" H. S. Bartlett
" Semantha Pearl
Miss Janet H. Lackie
Mrs. D. Hubbard
" E. Sanborne
" Mary Woodruff
*Sumner Thompson
Mrs. Betsy Hezelton
*G. B. Walker
J. Noyes

PEACHAM.

Miss M. L. R. Pearson
John C. Blanchard
Harvey Blanchard
Capt. H. Blanchard
Col. J. Blanchard
Capt. S. Blanchard
Rev. A. Boutelle
Louisa P. Bradlee
Mrs. C. Brownell
Hon. E. C. Chamberlin
E. Clark
J. O. Cowles
David Currier
Thomas Eastman
T. G. Farrow
James Gill
Bennet Gould
Nathaniel D. Hardy
Charles Holmes
S. B. Hooker
Mrs. Lucretia Ladd
I. L. McClary
Mrs. Sarah K. Marsh
Miss P. H. Marsh
Ashbel Martin
John M. Martin
Mrs. Lucinda Martin
Moses Martin
Mrs. E. B. Mattocks
Hazen Merrill
*Mrs. M. G. Merrill
Charles Morse
Dr. L. F. Parker
Leigh R. Pearson
William Sanborn
Asa Sargeant
Mrs. L. C. Shedd
Asa Skeele
*Asa B. Smith
L. Strobridge
Mrs. Isaac Watts
Mrs. S. R. E. Way
Wm. Williams

RYEGATE.

*Carrie S. Gibson
Wm. McLure

ST. JOHNSBURY.

Mrs. C. M. Stone
*Hon. E. Fairbanks†
*Rev. W. W. Thayer
*E. T. Fairbanks
*Thadeus Fairbanks
*Horace Fairbanks
*Franklin Fairbanks
*Horace Paddock
*Hubbard Hastings
*Hon. C. S. Dana
*Hon. Asa L. French
*Jonathan Ross, Esq
*Joel Fletcher, Esq
*Frank Walker
Prof. J. K. Colby†
Ephraim Jewett
Dr. I. D. Kilbourne
Dr. Benaiah Sanborn
Sias Randall
P. G. L. Cushing
Wm. H. N. Prince
N. Eastman
Francis Bingham
J. M. Warner
H. C. Dickenson
Hon. L. P. Poland
Rev. F. Jewett, M. D.†
Hon. A. J. Willard
T. M. Howard
W. S. Watson
Lambert Hastings
John Bacon, P. M.
Joseph Ide
F. B. Gage
H. C. Newell

Mrs. C. D. Merrill
Geo. S. Shaw
T. R. Fairbanks
L. O. Stevens
Jerry Dickerman,
Mrs. Polly Roberts
Stephen Putnam,
Col. Asa P. Blount
*Palmer W. Russell
*E. W. Church
*John Russell, Jr
Steven Richardson
Mrs. Jos. Hutchinson
* " Julia D. Curtis
*T. Trescott
Dr. H. H. Newton
O. W. Baker
Miss J. M. Stoddard
John Clark
Selim Frost
C. C. Child
Mrs. J. C. Bingham
*James M. Eddy
Mrs. C. H. Marshall
Miss S. A. Carpenter
Mrs. Mary M. Bolles
S. Higgens
†Mrs. C. L. Baker
*Rev. Mr. Cummings
Miss F. E. Hurlburt
John Bacon
Lewis Pierce, Esq
Mrs. C. J. Humphrey
" H. N. Murdock
*Rev. T. B. Spencer
Miss Laura Bishop
*Quincy B. Parker
Mrs. B. Clark
" Wm. P. Fairbanks
" Thos. L. Hall
" Charles E. Clark
" Dr. H. S. Brown
" Thomas Spooner
" E. A. Walker
Widow H. Pike
Mrs. J. W. Barry
" Richard B. Flint
Nathan Johnson
Mrs. J. B. Carpenter
" Lydia J. Bartlett
" L. G. Spencer
" P. B. Adams
Charles F. Ramsey
Mrs. Kimball Snow
Charles E. Kilby
John Emerson
Frederick Bugbee
Mrs. D. Harriman
Miss Emily C. Young
" C. C. Ramsey
Mrs. Russell Hallett
" Freeman Hallett
Miss Lydia V. Keach
Mrs. O. D. Parker
" I. J. Robinson
" N. B. Flint
" Jesse Cheney
" Wm. W. Ramsay
" H. C. Gilman

Mrs. I. P. Magoon
" W. W. Mack
" Wm. Green
" Samuel A. Wright
" H. Cowdey
" J. R. Baldwin
" C. F. Spaulding
" Geo. F. Willey
*" George Aldrich
" Charles Stone
*" J. T. Cassino
" C. P. Carpenter
Sarah Fuller
A. P. Gale
John Ladd
F. V. Powers
Mrs. D. C. CARR
" N. P. Deane
*E. M. Fuller
Mrs. Frank C. Bill
Miss Sarah D. Wheeler
L. B. Harrington
Alfred Stoddard

SHEFFIELD.

MRS. E. M. WARD
*Alfred S. Lamb
Miss M. A. Sullaway
Mrs. P. H. Bradley

WALDEN.

Hon. James Bell

WATERFORD.

MISS L. M. CHURCH
Jacob G. Hovey
W. Hovey
A. B. Carpenter
Mrs. L. M. Tuttle
Jonathan Moulton
O. Stevens
Dennis May
L. S. Freeman
S. Church
A. R. Ross
C. C. Goss
Mrs. Mary A. Hale
R. O. Goss
C. B. Brock
Rev. John E. Palmer
Mrs. Lucy Goss
Henry Ross

WHEELOCK.

Rev. Jon. Woodman
*Hon. T. Cree

CHITTENDEN CO.

BURLINGTON.

†Mrs Mary A. Pitkin
Hon. G. P. Marsh, LL. D
Rt. Rev. J. H. Hopkins,
Cornelius Palmer, Esq
Mrs. Dr. James Lewis
W. J. Campbell

Hon. Milo L. Bennett
Henry Rolfe
Mrs I. B. Bowdish
Ira Shattuck, Esq
†Rev. Calvin Pease, D.D
Mrs. L. M. Wyman
Prof. J. Torrey, of U. V. M.
Mrs. A. K. Hickok
Mrs. C. F. Worcester
Henry Stevens, Esq
Mrs. C. W. Buell
C. A. Castle
T. E. Wales
Dr. S. W. Thayer
A. C. Spear
*Hon. L. Underwood
Mrs. B. W. Smith
Capt. Anderson
Mrs. Wm. H. Lane
" F. M. Van Sicklin
" P. Blackman
" Robert Rogers
" Mary Metcalf
" J. R. Fletcher
" F. F. Deming
" M. H. Allen
" A. R. Hickok
" E. W. Buel
Henry G. Catlin
Mary E. Mayo
L. Bigelow, Esq.
*Hon. D. A. Smalley
Edward Loomis
B. Turk
*Wm. H. Hoyt
Mrs. H. Howard
J. W. Roby
S. S. Ferree
E. H. Fuller
Samuel Huntington
C. O. French*
*Mrs. C. E. Doolittle
Rev. D. H. Buell
Mrs. E. S. Englesby
*Russell Taft, Esq
*Thos. H. Canfield
*E. Root
*H. N. Bullard
*Tristam Conner
*Mrs. O. B. Isham
C. L. Heyde
*John Kingsbury
L. W. Page
Hon. D. Roberts
*J. S. Adams, Esq
*Miss Fanny Goodwin
*Edward Greenleaf
*Prof. N. G. Clark
*Rev. Dr. H. Witherspoon
*Rev. J. K. Converse
*Chas. Edwin Allen
*Dr. Wm. C. Hickok
*Charles F. Staniford
*William H. Wilkins
*Lewis Follett
A. C. Spear
Nathaniel Parker
Edward W. Peck

C. Hildreth
C. W. Wingate
John A. Arthur
W. W. Walker, Esq
Rev. Henry P. Hickok
Richard G. Cole, Esq†
*Sion E. Howard†
Luther M. Hager
Dr. H. H. Atwater
Mrs. Maria Loomis
Henry Loomis
Calvin Blodgett
Hilas Roby
Henry Stanton
N. B. Flanagan
Lemuel S. Drew
Dan. C. Barber
William Brinsmaid
Brush M. Webb
J. B. Hollenbeck, Esq
John N. Pomeroy, Esq
A. B. Laver
Prof. M. H. Buckham
Prof. E. Hungerford
*Hon. David Read
Rt. Rev. L. de Goesbriand
*Mrs. L. C. Meech

CHARLOTTE.

Miss M. H. TUPPER
Rev. S. W. Tupper
*Miss D. L. Hosford
Mrs. J. Leavenworth
Mrs. C. A. Van Vliet

COLCHESTER.

*Wm. H. H. Coon
T. S. Brownell

HINESBURGH.

*Mrs. SARAH BALDWIN
" S. MATTHEWS
*Miss S. Leavenworth
John Allen
Mrs. Ralph Ray
James Miner
F. H. Baldwin
Peter Boynton
*Rev. C. E. Ferrin
F. W. Baldwin
*Rodney Tarbox
Mrs. Sarah Wilson

JERICHO.

*Dr. Geo. Lee Lyman†

MILTON.

*Hon. Dr. D. H. Onion
*Jed P. Clark

SHELBURNE.

Wm. Harmon, Esq
*Edgar Nash
Hon. Robert White

Robert White
Hon. Heman Barstow
Col. Frederick Fletcher

ST. GEORGE.

Dea. H. Lawrence
Ira O. Lockwood, P. M.

WESTFORD.

*Rev. J. H. Woodward
Sarah M. Osgood
Harriet M. Richardson
Ellen Partridge
Mrs. E. S. Bates

WILLISTON.

*Harry Miller
J. S. Cilley

ESSEX CO.

BRIGHTON.

N. P. Bowman*
*G. G. Waterhouse
*D. S. Stoors
*Dr. Harry Coe

CONCORD.

Miss A. E. Cutting
*J. E. Woodbury
Asa Hibbard
George F. Whipple
John Hill
Bradford G. Whipple
Jefferson Chase

GUILDHALL.

Milton Cutler*
A. D. Hartshorne
Martin Thomas
Dr. B. W. Dodge

GRANBY.

*Loomis Wells

LUNENBURGH.

Rev. Wm. Sewall
H. A. Cutting, P. M.*
Charles W. King
H. P. Coleman
Martin D. Thomas
Nelson Foss
Rev. A. J. Walker

MAIDSTONE.

Miss B. T. Rich
*†Dr. John Dewey
J. W. Webb Esq.

FRANKLIN CO.

BERKSHIRE AND FRANKLIN.

E. R. Towle*
E. Fay
Mrs. H. Lemangar
G. S. Goodrich
Jonathan Towle
John Colcard
E. Fay
C. B. Yaw
James E. Towle
Henry C. Colcard
J. B. Dunbar,
Philo S. Ewins
Joseph Yaw
Edwin R. Bell
Alonzo Felton
A. E. Spaulding,
Prof. A. M. Butler,
Heman Barnum
E. H. Cleveland
W. C. Robie
Philo Horslin
Mrs. Sarah Peckham
Jonathan Roby
Rev. E. M. Titus
Rev. Edwin Prouty
George E. Foss
Wm. Noble
C. T. Hodgkins
Hiram Bowman
Reuben Towle
John K. Whitney
Dolphus Deming
Benjamin Beattie

FAIRFAX.

Miss Nellie C. Hunt
*R. Merrill
*C. H. Beaman
T. B. Hall
*Harry S. Ufford
*Samuel D. Ufford
*Mrs. Sophia Ufford
Mrs. Mercy and Hannah Maxfield
Mrs. E. S. Halbert
C. F. Hawley
J. Fairman
S. Randal
*Cassius Buck
*Mrs. J. M. Farnsworth
*Elijah Story
*Lucas Kingsbury
*Ira Hunt
*E. H. Wells
*Parmer & Tabor

HIGHGATE.

*Mrs. M. E. W. Skeels
H. H. Frink

ST. ALBANS.

Miss H. A. Blaisdell
J. W. Hobart
Wm. Bridges
Charles Thompson
Dr. John Branch
Wm. R. Conger
*Mrs. E. W. Merrill
A. I. Sampson
S. Gadcomb
Frederick Dutcher
Charles Wyman
H. M. Stevens
A. T. Hyde
*Mrs. S. N. Boynton
L. Brainard
E. Haight
*H. H. Bowman
Wm. Livingston
Mrs. Wm. Brigham
" Mary Sawyer
*Dea. L. L. Dutcher
Mrs. Martha Brooks
I. S. Bostwick
Mrs. C. C. Burton
Rev. C. Fay, D. D.
" J. Luce
" D. B. McKenzie
" Francis Smith
Hon. A. O. Aldis
Mrs. O. Adams
P. Sexton
John Gates†
Myron Buck
S. S. Beaman
*Geo. F. Houghton
I. S. D. Taylor
H. S. Royce
J. J. Burgis
Bryant Hall
B. D. Hopkins
H. Clark
T. W. Smith
D. R. Potter
L. R. Brainard†
I. R. Cornell
H. G. Edson
Mrs. L. W. Benjamin
Joseph H. Brainard
D. M. Walker
M. H. Locklin

SHELDON.

Hon. D. D. Weed*
Levi Hapgood
Wm. T. Green
Edward P. Adams
*Hon. R. J. Saxe
*Rev. G. B. Tolman
*Mrs. Alfred Keith
Dea. E. Wait
Rev. C. McK. Duren

SWANTON.

Rev. J. B. Perry
Hon. Valentine Ferris
Mrs. L. F. Doriman
" E. G. Jennison
Miss M. C. Butler
M. B. Rugg, Esq.
Mrs. C. D. Gallup
" E. G. Jennison
" F. B. Marvin
" C. F. Lawrence
Prof. C. J. S. Webb
George Barney
Geo. M. Hall, M. D.
D. J. Morrill, M. D.
E. S. Meigs, Esq.
James M. Deane
O. Doriman
B. F. Arsenault
H. W. Barney
Lorenzo Laselle
C. W. Stilphen
Rufus L. Burney
Lewis Janes
*B. H. Smalley, Esq.
*Joseph N. Warner
A. A. Brooks

GRAND ISLE CO.

ALBURGH.

*J. N. Pomeroy P. M

GRAND ISLE.

*Asahel S. Hollister

NORTH HERO.

*Miss M. S. Ladd
Hon. Joel Allen
Augustus Knight
Addison Hazen
John Dodds
Jed. P. Ladd, Esq.
*Asahel Allen

SOUTH HERO.

*Rev. O. G. Wheeler
*Col. H. Wadsworth

LAMOILLE CO.

CAMBRIDGE.

Lyman J. Seeley

MORRISTOWN.

Mrs. S. W. Robinson
*Emily Redington
*F. Miles
D. W. Putnam, M. D.
Mrs. D. Gilbert
" C. A. Gilbert
" A. M. Pennock
" Abagail A. Peck
Miss L. A. Sears
Mrs. W. Webster
Miss S. E. Swift
Mrs. G. W. Gates
J. C. Robinson
Rev. L. Bartlett
Lieut. D. J. Safford

WOLCOTT.

Mrs. Horace Herrick
" Edson Pinney

ORANGE CO.

BRADFORD.

Miss L. Farnham
*Mrs. K. Farnham
*Rev. Silas McKeen
Thos. C. Shaw
A. A. Doty, M. D.
Mrs. H. B. Stevens
W. H. Carter, M. D.
D. K. Androus
P. Shaw
B. T. Blodgett
Geo. Prichard
Geo. W. Prichard
R. M. Ormsby

BROOKFIELD.

Catherine T. Edson
Daniel Morse
J. R. Cleavland,
Miss Frances Graves
Mrs. J. Q. Parish
*Mrs. J. A. Griswold
*J. Edson

CHELSEA.

Ezra Walker
Mrs. P. C. Jones
Silas Stone
L. G. Hinckley
James A. R. Corwin
Sarah Flint
*John W. Smith
Abner Green
*Rev. S. H. Colburn
Miss Abby Skinner

CORINTH.

Miss Ann White
Miss M. A. Currier
Thomas B. White
Mrs. R. M. Bagley
Orange McCrillis

FAIRLEE.

Mrs. John Stratton
To a club of 14.

NEWBURY.

Rev. H. N. Burton
Rev. F. E. King
Miss E. A. Williams
Mrs. Anna Atkinson
David Johnson,
Benjamin Hale,
Fanny Farrington
Edward Hale
A. Underwood
W. R. Shedd
Joseph Atkinson
Cyrus W. Scott
A. S. Baldwin
George Leslie
Charles B. Leslie
*Dea. Henry Williams

RANDOLPH.

F. B. Salisbury, P. M.
To club of 6.
J.K.P. Salisbury, P. M.
To club of 3.
E. Conant, A. M.

STRAFFORD.

Hon. J. S. Morrill, M.C.

THETFORD.

Miss L. J. Sherman
L. Sherman†
W. W. Barker
A. S. Briggs
L. Willoughby
George Johnson
H. P. Cummings
David Bassett

TOPSHAM.

Miss Rosie M. Bill
*Miss Lydia E. White
" Ellen M. Rogers
Jesse Dickey
L. H. Tabor
Lyman Jackson, Jr.

WILLIAMSTOWN.

Rev. P. F. Barnard
Jonathan Lewis
Daniel B. Sherman
*Phebe J. Wiley

ORLEANS CO.

ALBANY.

Alvin Hovey
J. H. McClay

BARTON.

*Rev. H. A. Hazen
*John G. Hall
Joseph Drew
Dr. R. B. Skinner
Jerome L. Flint

COVENTRY.

Mrs. P. H. White
Rev. P. H. White.
Seth F. Cowles
Mrs. M. B. Walworth
" M. W. Persons
" Harriet Gould
" V. Herbert
Dr. D. W. Blanchard
Emore Dailey
W. S. Jones
Loren Soger
Isaac Parker
Nathan Harvey
W. W. Frost
Wm. B. Flanders
Job Guild
Nathan Harvey

CRAFTSBURY.

Rev. J. N. Loomis

DERBY.

Lewis C. Bates
Col. L. B. Child
Rev. A. Scott

IRASBURGH.

*Hon. Ira H. Allen†
*Wm. B. Dennison
Solomon Nye
I. N. Cushman
J. H. Kellam
Z. E. Jameson
C. I. Vail
M. R. Tyler
G. Worthington
W. S. Flint
E. P. Colton
H. B. Davis
C. P. S. Liscomb
R. Lockwood
*Miss L. M. D. Flint
L. S. Thompson

LOWELL.

Henry Lowell
B. F. Paine
Edwin Woods

WESTFIELD.

Don A. Winslow
M. Mann
Alfred Miller
Russell Hitchcock
Morton Stebbins
Calvin Reed
W. H. Richardson
Ashley Farman
J. W. Annis
Rev. Charles Scott
A. C. Hitchcock

RUTLAND CO.

CLARENDON.

Miss E. L. Edgerton
Horace Kingsley
E. P. Parker
Mrs. Julius Ewing
Lester Congdon

DANBY.

*Mrs. Clark Bull
*Clark Bull, Esq.
*A. B. Smith
*E. H. St. John
*Justin Jennings
*Robert Brown

IRA.

*Mrs. B. Fish
J. P. Giddings

MIDDLETOWN.

*Miss F. E. Clark
E. W. Gray
Wm. Marshall
H. B. McClure
Emory Buxton
Calvin Williams
V. Brown
Wm. Spaulding
Mrs. Calvin Leonard
R. R. Woodard
L. Copeland
Mrs. M. E. Vail
E. Prindle
H. Southwick
Harvey Hoadly
E. Copeland
Lucius Adams
Dr. E. Paul
E. Ross, Esq.
Royal Coleman
Rev. C. Granger

MOUNT HOLLY.

R. H. Clark, P. M.
Dr. J. W. Crowley
Samuel Hemenway

PITTSFIELD.

*Ladies Literary Society

RUTLAND.

Mrs. F. C. Hopkins
Mary E. Aiken
Nathan Pierce
Rev. Chas. Boylan
Rev. Leland Howard
W. T. Nichols, Esq.
*Mrs. W. A. Burnett
W. W. McCall
Willard W. Russell
F. Mowry
Rev. Thomas Lynch
Rev. A. Walker
Col. Y. W. Ripley
Mrs. J. C. R. Dorr
Joel Ellis,
Mrs. G. P. Hannum
" B. C. Sparhawk

TINMOUTH.

Dr. George Noble
H. D. Noble
Dr. Clark,
Hannibal Woodruff
Cyrus Crampton
Judah H. Rounds
Burr Clark
Miss Louisa Waldo
Smith A. Crampton

WALLINGFORD.

Amy Bucklin, P. M.

John Emery
John Moon
Aram Wellman
Wm. Congdon
Arnold Hill
Mariel E. Adams
Edwin Martindale
Emma Smith

SHREWSBURY.

Dr. Horton, P. M.

CUTTINGSVILLE.

T. L. Bucklin
E. Fisher
Dea. Lee Wilder
Mrs. Jas. Huntoon
Mrs. A. S. Adams
*Harry Holden, Esq.
Mrs. Robinson

SHERBURNE.

Hon. D. W. Taylor

WEST HAVEN.

Cephas Field
James Field

SUTHERLAND FALLS.

Francis A. Fisher

BARRE.

*Kate P. Dodge
Abel Wood
Josiah Wood
Mrs. M. C. Fuller
*Carlos Carpenter

WASHINGTON CO.

BERLIN.

John Winslow, M. D.

CABOT.

*Rev. S. T. Drew
*Frank Perry
Rev. F. E. King

CALAIS.

Rev. S. Wheelock

MARSHFIELD.

*Mrs. H. C. Pitkin
Rev. G. H. Bickford

MONTPELIER.

Marietta Peck
Hattie F. Sibley
Dr. G. N. Brigham
Samuel Goss, Esq.†
Henry Y. Barnes
Hon. G. W. Colamer

NORTHFIELD.

Rev. Wm. C. Hopkins
Mrs. R. Camp, Jr.
" George Warner
" A. B. Morrill
" N. M. Barber
G. H. Shurtleff, Esq.
Rev. O. H. Tillotson
Albert Stevens
Dr. P. D. Bradford
John Gregory
T. A. Wiley
Charles Fisher
S. H. Allen
S. A. Gage
R. M. McIntosh
C. Bradford
C. A. Edgerton
Emma Smith
Kate Morse
R. Dewey, Jr.

WAITSFIELD.

P. Bushnell

WATERBURY.

Hon. H. F. Janes
*Rev. C. C. Parker

WINDHAM CO.

DUMMERSTON.

James Marshall

GUILFORD.

Mrs. Rodney Field
Jane S. Field
Alfred S. Brown

JAMAICA.

O. F. Knowlton, M.D.*
Wm. H. Saunders
Caleb Howe
H. H. Wheeler
Jerry Howe
V. Boynton
Henry Carr

LONDONDERRY.

Rev. O. Pier
Hon. D. Arnold
Abbie S. Gipson
Albert S. Hayward

PUTNEY.

Mrs. S. P. Dwight
H. E. Baker
Walter Richardson

ROCKINGHAM.

BELLOWS FALLS.

C. P. Eddy, Esq.
P. W. Taylor
Dan Armes
Hiram Newton

SAXTON'S RIVER.

E. R. Osgood, P. M.
E. C. Frost
J. A. Farnsworth
N. Wilson
Ira Wiley
Carrie Minard

BARTONSVILLE.

*Jerry Barton

TOWNSHEND.

Hon. A. Stoddard
Rev. H. Fletcher
Dr. C. Clark
J. H. Converse
S. D. Winslow
L. C. Howard
Mrs. A. Starkey
O. Wilkinson
Samuel Gray
Hattie E. Farr
Clara E. Kimball

WESTMINSTER.

Mrs. James May
Z. Cole
Oscar M. Metcalf
Mrs. Theodore Cole
" John R. Morse

WINDHAM.

Hattie Upham
Wm. L. Conant
*Charles G. Gould
S. S. Harris
J. W. Morse
S. P. Upham
Bradford H. Upham

WILMINGTON.

D. G. Dexter*
C. W. Davenport, Esq.

WINDSOR CO.

ANDOVER.

*H. C. Perry
*Solomon Howard
O. W. Leonard

BALTIMORE.

Joshua Leland, Esq.*
H. Holton
*Joseph Lewis
W. W. L. Redfield
Dennis Allen

BETHEL.

*F. M. Anderson, Esq.
*George Frances
*J. A. Anderson
Mrs. Mary A. Parker

CAVENDISH.

PROCTORSVILLE.

Martha Taylor
Kendall Taylor
C. H. Chapman, Esq.
A. D. Hager, Esq.
Rev. L. C. Dickenson
Mrs. H. C. Martin
Rev. H. Closson
Hon. Calvin French

CHESTER.

*Hon. T. H. Barrett

HARTLAND.

Calista Watkiss
Dr. Lewis Emmons
Ward Cotton, Esq.
Mrs. David H. Sumner
L. M. Billings

LUDLOW.

*Eliza C. Robbins
*Rev. Ira Persons
Dr. O. H. Palmer
L. G. Hammond
C. S. Mason
E. J. Pettigrew
J. W. Pettigrew
A. F. Sherman
G. S. Armington
A. S. Barton, Esq.
H. D. Barton
W. J. Barton
L. D. Barton
R. Simonds
*Rev. Wm. Balch
Moses Burbank, A.M.†
A. H. Burnham
Miss E. W. Boynton
Mrs. A. A. Richardson
" H. L. Winslow
" Harriet Froy
Jane Sinclair
*Hon. F. C. Robbins
Mrs. N. Dickenson
John A. Dennit
Charles Parker
Mrs. Abel Adams
M. V. B. Clark
Mrs. M. A. Patrick
" Dr. H. N. Roberts
" L. S. Pettigrew
" L. A. Boynton
H. F. Dutton
Moses Pollard, Esq.
Mrs. Dr. P. Burton
" W. M. Buckley
Edward A. Rock
Mrs. R. F. Davidson
Benoni Buck, Esq.*
Laura M. Sergeant
Mrs. E. W. Smith
*Rev. H. H. Sanderson
H. M. Taylor

S. E. Perham
H. A. Stimpson
Mary A. Pollard
Madeline Billings
Wm. Chapman
E. C. Haskins
Mrs. Frances H. Cook
Henry D. Wakefield
A. S. Day
O. D. Freeman
Alanson Pitcher
John Bartlett
Julia Reed
Geo. A. Patch
Jefferson Baldwin
James Pettigrew

NORWICH.

H. L. Olds, P. M.
Rev. A. Hazen
George Burton
Wm. Barron
Dr. Edward Bournes
H. G. Knapp
Charles A. Curtis
Miss M. R. Wright
Prof. N. Jackman
Mrs. Alden Partridge
A. K. Wright
Dr. S. Converse
Harvey Russ

PLYMOUTH.

*Almira C. Pollard
Alonzo N. Briggs
C. A. Scott
Rebecca Boynton
C. C. Hall

ROCHESTER.

*Josie Briggs
Mrs. R. H. Tupper
Omri E. Goodnow

ROYALTON.

Hon. John S. Marcy

SPRINGFIELD.

Benoni Buck
*Hon. H. Closson
G. A. Knight, M. D.
P. Barrows
E. Ingraham
Mrs. E. Chase
Timothy H. Ball
Charles Haywood
Dr. Kendrick
Bela Chandler
Henry Prentiss
*Orestus Forbush
Elvira A. Rice
John Chipman
Sarah Dodge
E. Putnam
*Jesse Steadman
J. B. Spencer
E. M. Holt
D. Adams
Mary B. Walker
Enos Brown
Wm. H. Albee
James Lovell
Udney C. Burke
Ellen Dunkley
Susan Chase
Ellen Steele
Miss N. B. Phippen
Marion Keyes
Rev. J. W. Chickering
G. A. H. Ellis
R. G. Britton
A. L. Robinson
S. M. Earles
J. E. Royce

WEATHERSFIELD.

*Hon. W. H. Pingrey
Rev. N. Cudworth
Hyren Henry

WESTON.

*Samuel Adams
*Perkins Wesley

WINDSOR.

A. G. Hatch, P. M.*
Hon. I. F. Redfield
Wm. M. Evarts
J. H. Boyd
Geo. P. Hayes
Mrs. C. H. Ingalls
Abner Forbes
Mrs. Abby L. Forbes
Cyrus Dunlap
Chester F. Weld
Edward A. Wardner
Geo. W. Dudley
Rev. Malcom Douglas
Col. H. Harlow
A. R. Stockes
T. H. Gill
E. J. Silver
C. Thompson
Mary B. Russell
*H. H. Hawley
Edward Brown
E. J. Taylor
*Rev. E. H. Byington

BROWNSVILLE.

Samuel Parker, P. M.
J. H. Hammond
D. F. Hemenway
Walter J. Kendall
Mary S. Delano
Gilman Sawin
Dr. Dyer Story

WOODSTOCK.

*Norman Williams
Miss E. Latimer
Mrs. M. B. Randall, M.D.
Lorenzo Richmond
Hon. J. Collamer†
N. E. Wood
J. W. Leonard
A. W. Whitney
Mrs. J. U. King

CLUBS.

BRATTLEBORO CLUB.

*Rev. A. Brown
*Hon. H. Cutts
Miss Mary Cutts
*Gen. J. W. Phelps
Dr. E. Phelps, Windsor
Madam Rockwell
*Geo. H. Bailey
*†Maj. John Bartlett, Orleans County
A. Vandoorm
Hon. R. Tyler
Hon. Asa Keyes
Dr. O. R. Post
Mr. Thompson
C. F. Thompson
A. G. Nourse
E. J. Carpenter
Mrs. R. W. Clark
W. Felton
Gertrude Bliss
A. E. Dwinnell
Mrs. William Jarvis, Weathersfield
Hattie Cutts
Mrs. Julia M. Pratt
Rev. H. Eastman*

CHESTER CLUB.

Norman O. Johnson
Maj. Wm. Rounds
*Chas. H. Rowe
G. H. Hilton
A. Putnam
H. H. Ingraham
E. B. Lee
H. H. Henry
P. Heald
E. A. Hilton
C. M. Maxfield
B. A. Cook
A. A. Adams
Mr. Leonard
R. A. Deming
Mrs. J. J. Miner
Fanny W. Davis
Mrs. E. L. Abbott
Edward O. Sargent
Asa Combs
John P. Way
J. B. Cram
Mrs. P. H. Robbins
Alfred Smith
Dr. A. R. Edson
Wm. Miller
George W. Hadley
F. R. Barnard
F. H. Whitmore

CASTLETON CLUB.

Rev. D. T. Taylor
Dr. J. N. Northrop,
W. C. Guernsey
Ira Ransom
Dr. Joseph Perkins
Dr. A. T. Woodward
H. Westover
P. S. Ryan
Dr. J. D. Woodward
Calvin Wood
Mrs. H. A. Crandall
Mrs. L. P. Harris
" S. G. Perkins
" M. Jackman
Henry Stevens
Dea. Higgley
Carlos Sherman
Chas. H. Slasson
J. G. Parks
Albert Pease
Charles McIntyre
Joseph H. Wilson
D. Dwight Cole
Celon Dake
D. A. Tolbert
A. W. Hyde
Pitt W. Hyde
F. Whitlock
Ferrin Parker

FAIRHAVEN CLUB.

Col. A. Allen
E. L. Allen
Mrs. A. N. Adams
Dr. Wakefield
Mrs. D. P. Shuler
M. Maynard
Lieut. J. Bosworth
Hiram Kilburn
H. G. Wood
W. W. Pitkin
M. B. Dewey
B. F. Field
A. H. Stowe
Ryland Hanger
D. E. Graves
Mrs. G. Seers
Mary Jane Doland
Eliza H. Ells
Leonard Stowe
Joseph Adams
Ira C. Allen
Mrs. H. K. Dewey
" M. Read
" Dr. Nichols
" C. C. Whipple
J. H. Hurd

POULTNEY CLUB

Henry Clark
Hon. B. Frisbie
J. W. King

itized by Google

Dr. Geo. Bliss
Rev. Pres. Newman
Morrill Colvin
Mrs. Safford
Geo. L. Lee
Rev. David Bosworth, Waterbury
Robert Bliss
Joseph Lewis
J. B. Beaman
S. M. Hoyt
Henry Howe
H. C. Hopson, Wells
Mrs. A. L. Hyde
Miss A. E. Johnson
" L. Austin
Rebecca T. Ward
J. J. Joslyn
Mrs. H. Campbell
" John Bradley
S. P. Hooker
*Mrs. A. A. Sinclair
N. C. Hyde
J. F. Haskins
J. Y. Harrison
Mrs. C. H. Hosford
Ladies' College at Poultney

EAST POULTNEY AND WELLS CLUB.

Rev. O. Hopson
R. J. Watkins
Walter Ward
Joseph N. Lewis
E. S. Dewey
L. Jackson
John C. Derby
Rollin Marshall 2d.
Rev. A. H. Bailey
Horace Clark
Almon Hopson
Hull & Grover
James Parks
R. M. Lewis
J. S. Hulett
Stephen Clemons
Emory Clemons
Robert Parks
Calvin Perry
Solomon Howe
H. E. Paul
P. C. Paul
Chauncey Edgarton
Mrs. Jane Hook
Henry Potter
A. R. Ripley
Perez Fifield
Mrs. S. E. Hooker
Dea. Hiram Killourne
Aaron Lewis

BRANDON CLUB.

Rev. A. Witherspoon
James Rice
D. H. Bromley
I. B. Bromley
Henry Alden
Rev. Wm. Ford
D. L. Milikin
J. E. Higgins
E. D. Seldon
H. L. Bacon
R. V. Marsh Esq.
E. J. Ormsbee
N. P. Kingsley
L. Bixby
*John A. Conant
Chauncey W. Conant
Dr. V. Ross
†Amos Holt Jr.
Rev. C. B. Smith
Mrs. C. L. Case
John Howe Jr.
H. S. McCollam
A. A. Nicholson Esq.
E. J. Bliss
W. F. Paige
S. M. Spencer
Elijah Spencer
J. F. Potwine
*A. P. Leonard
J. F. McCollam
Mrs. P. P. Field

BRANDON CLUB 2d

Rev. C. A. Thomas
Mrs. O. F. Bigelow
F. F. Pierce
Mrs. Dr. Prime
*Carrie E. Hemenway
Dr. Olin G. Dyer
Mrs. Capt. Bush
" L. J. Cloyce
" William Eckley
Edwin G. Carr
Wm. H. Newton
Mrs. O. Meacham
Charles C. Kinsman
Mrs. Sumner Briggs
" James Cook
J. Hastings
Mrs. L. W. Kimball
Charles C. Slason
S. Bush
A. Haase
Myron Edson
John Engles
Mrs. J. S. Stafford
" H J. Bond
" H. E. Griswold
" J. J. Vailo
" D. L. Milliken

BRANDON CLUB 3d.

*D. L. Miliken

A. P. Leonard,
Maggie Miller
Letitia Cull
Alice E. Stewart
Mrs M. V. Stevens
" Wm. H. Noyce
" John Catree Jr.
" E. N. Briggs
Elanson Draper
Mrs. L. Nearing
" Hiram Roberts
" M. H. Ketcham
" M. A. Hurlbut
*Carrie E. Hemenway
Mrs Wm. P. Smith
" I. H. Gray
F. M. Strong
Mrs. Ann Howard
" C. C. Merriam
Rev. W. Kimball
Mrs. John Jackson
Mary Lord
Rev. J. N. Fairbanks
L. B. Belknap
Mrs. S. F. Belknap
" M. G. White
Rev. Richard Morgan
Mrs. L. H. Crooks
W. H. Howard
Mrs. H. Richardson, Westford

PAWLET CLUB.

C. S. Bardwell
Hon. R. E. Betts
John A. Orr
Selden S. Brown
Edward McFadden
G. A. Prescott
Charles F. Edgarton
I. M. Shaw
George Toby
Sheldon Edgarton
Hiram Wickham
Jona. Randall
A. I. Blakely
Ervin Pratt
Allen Whedon
Fayette Viets
James Whedon
Rev. Azariah Hyde
W. B. Sargent M. D.
Fayette Blakely
Cyrus Taylor
Byron A. Pratt
Warren B. Evans
Andrew Willard
H. R. Carpenter
Joshua Hulett

PAWLET CLUB 2d.

Rich Weeks
John Smith
James Leach
Robert Blakely
Norman Winchester
Joel Sheldon
Lewis Lincoln
Orla Loomis
Smith Hitt
Samuel Cole
John M. Wilcox
Jonathan Stevens
David G. Blossom
O. H. Simonds
Horatio Hollister
Scott Philips
R. G. Monroe M. D.
Hiel Hollister
Leonard Johnson
William Blossom
Floras Johnson
Noah Gifford
Chas. W. Potter
Simeon Reed
Spencer Edgarton
Fred. M. Hollister
Rev. David Beecher
Oliver L. Warner
Robert Wickham

MISCELLANEOUS CLUB.

P. Battell Esq. Middlebury
Orlando Wooster do.
Rev. P. Labaree do.
Ezra Meach, Shelburne
Rev. G.C. H. Eastman, Vergennes
Capt. R. W. Sherman,
Mrs. C. T. Stevens do.
Wm. M. Spooner do.
Hon. G. W. Grandy
C. Crowley do.
R. Ray, Hinesburgh
D. Goodyear do.
Mrs. E. L. Crandall do.
" H. L. Strong, Winooski
Mrs. C. H. Smith, Milton Falls
L. M. Wheelock do.
H. G. Boardman do.
L. E. Ashley do.
S. L. Allen do.
Miss A. M. Crown do.
Dr. H. O. Bartlett, West Georgia
S. Rice, Westford
J. H. Sherman, Charlotte
S. M. Williams do.
Darwin Root do.
Laura Fuller do.

Digitized by Google

MISCELLANEOUS TABLE.

NEW YORK.

*J. S. Washburn, Esq.,	N. York City
*D. A. Heald, Esq.	"
*Moses H. Ranney, M. D.	"
John Howlee, Jr.	"
*Cornelia A. Roosevelte	"
E. A. Stansbury, Esq.	"
Rush C. Hawkins	"
Lydia B. Hemenway	"
C. Paine	"
Oliver Johnson	"
Charles I. Bushnell	"
George Folsom, Esq.	"
R. F. Eaton,	Adams
J. Munsell,	Albany
State Library	"
E. B. Calligahn	"
*Amos Deane, LL. D.	"
F. B. Hough	"
J. L. Snow	"
Hon. James C. Curtis,	Cocheton
Hon. A. C. Hand,	Elizabethtown
Robert Hafer	"
Helen J. Packer,	Ellisburgh
Mrs. L. M. Carter,	Hanover
H. E. Smith, Esq.,	Johnstown
J. M. Dudley, Esq.	"
Eliza A. Arthur,	Lowville
Mrs. M. W. Howard,	Malone
John C. Green,	Mechanicsville
*E. M. Ruttenber,	Newburgh
Charles M. Haywood,	Owego
Frederick S. Royce,	Perrysburgh
Mrs. Betsy Robbins	"
Prof. S. S. Cutting,	Rochester
*Henry C. Sheldon, M. D., to a club of forty,	Troy
Ethan Armstrong	"
Richard S. Sheldon	"
George A. Stone	"
B. H. Hall	"
E. A. Wait	"
[illegible]	"
[illegible] N. Squier	"
E. Gallusha	"
A. Buel Moore	"
Elisha Waters	"
Cole H. Denio	"
Wilton Hinsdill	"
George C. Burdett	"
Daniel Robinson	"
Mary A. Nims	"
H. S. Benedict	"
Charles H. Holden	"
Marcus H. Martin	"
Charles P. Hartt	"
A. Bills	"
Francis S. Thayer	"
J. Sheldon Reed	"
J. F. Simmons	"
Lyman Bowers	"
Wm. McMillan	"
Hiram House	"
S. A. House	"
Gates H. Barnard	"
John F. Porter	"
Ralph Hurley	"
Wm. M. Sanford	"
Lucius Wright	"
S. O. Gleason	"
Harvey Wooster	"
Mrs. C. O. Green	"
Aaron S. Bursing,	Watertown
A. B. Cone,	N. White Creek
Pres. Beriah Green,	Whitesboro
*Mrs. D. B. Briggs,	West Winfield

MASSACHUSETTS.

*Gen. John S. Tyler,	Boston
*Hon. Richard Fletcher	"
*Thomas Waterman, Esq.	"
*Wm. B. Trask, Esq.	"
*Hon. Peter Harvey	"
Josiah W. Hubbard	"
Rev. H. M. Dexter	"
*Rev. Edmund F. Slafter	"
*S. G. Drake	"
*Given Holmes	"
*Geo. B. Darling	"
Mrs. Jane B. Cutler	"
G. E. Richards,	"
Athenaum Library	"
*Rev. A. P. Peabody,	Cambridge
*John Langdon Libby	"
Jared Sparks, LL. D.	"
Harvard College Library	"
Wm. W. Sherman,	Lowell
Wm. S. Southworth, Esq.	"
Public Library,	Newburyport
*Ormund Tiffany,	Springfield
*J. G. Holland, M. D.	"
Hon. Andrew H. Ward,	West Newton
*C. Jillson,	Worcester
*Nathaniel Paine,	"
*Samuel F. Haven, Esq.	"
*Free Public Library	"

ILLINOIS.

*Illinois Chicago Hist. Soc'y, presented to by Ex-Gov. Fairbanks of Vermont.	Chicago;
H. C. Hemenway,	Chicago
*Julia M. Watson	"
*Hon. Mark Skinner	"
Hon. James S. Stark, Jr.	"
*George F. Bailey, Esq.	"
*Chas. L. Harmon	"
A. B. Safford,	Cairo City
Rev. Thomas S. Hubbard,	Dunton
Hazen Hinckley,	Dwight
*Hiram Thompson,	Lacon
Charles Atkinson,	Moline
Solon Burroughs, Esq.,	Monmouth
*H. H. Dewey,	Sheffield
*Luther Lowell, Esq.,	Sycamore

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Rev. A. B. Foster,	Acworth
N. H. Hist. Society,	Concord
*Wm. F. Goodwin,	"
Rev. Dr. A. D. Smith,	Hanover
J. A. Smith, M. D.,	"
S. M. Cobb	"
Mrs. R. S. S. Howe,	Northumberland
*Rev. Lorin Thayer,	Windham

WISCONSIN.

Hon. Volney French,	Kenosha
E. C. Brown	"
*Lyman Robbins,	Medina
Mary B. Robbins	"
Charles Hall,	Oshkosk
*Mrs. P. D. Tripp	Sparta
*O. A. Chandler, Esq.	"
*Albert Hitchcock, Esq.	"

CONNECTICUT.

D. A. Tuttle,	Collinsville
I. Grow	"
Rev. J. H. Linsley, D. D.,	Greenwich
Rev. C. L. Goodell,	New Britain
*Rev. G. V. Maxham,	New Haven
*John W. Barber, Esq.	"
*D. A. Tuttle,	Unionville

OHIO.

*G. C. Worth, Esq.,	Upper Sandusky
Thomas Spooner,	Reading
S. C. Newton,	Cincinnati
S. G. Hubbard	"
Rev. S. C. Parker,	Steuben
Mrs. Cora A. Houghton,	Springfield
Mrs. E. B. Holmes,	Sidney

PENNSYLVANIA.

Dr. Wm. Darlington,†
J. Smith Futhey, Esq.
*Prof. Geo. Allen,	Philadelphia
Rev. A. M. Milligan,	Westmoreland
Amasa Chase,	Harford
Nathaniel Norris,	North Jackson

IOWA.

Rev. C. Taylor,	Algona
*Nathaniel Deane,	Glenwood
Mrs. L. H. Dearborne,	Moquoqueta
D. G. Green,	Tipton
W. H. Tuthill	"

[illegible]MICHIGAN

*Hon. Israel J. Richardson,	Pontiac
Mrs. Thomas Palmer,	Detroit
B. F. Hyde,	"

MAINE.

Hon. James B. Cahoon,	Portland
Hon. Wm. Willis	"
*Mrs. Spaulding Smith,	East Wilton

MINNESOTA.

*Cushman S. Barton
*Luke Hulett,	Farribault

---

*Miss L. Carpenter, Providence, R. I.
E. C. Brumhall, Jersey City, N. J.
Calvin Fletcher, Indianapolis, Ind.
Mrs. O. P. Cudworth, S. Francisco, Cal.
Dr. I. Purrington, Washington, D. C.
*E. Billings, Esq, Montreal, C. E.

☞ Any patron's name omitted by mistake, if our attention be called to the same, will be inserted as a subscriber to the first volume, in the succeeding volume. The names of patrons also to both the first and second volumes will be continued in the second volume.

MEMORIAL.

To the memory of the Hon. ERASTUS FAIRBANKS, late Governor of Vermont, and HENRY STEVENS, the venerable Vermont antiquarian, the originator, and the first President, of the Vermont State Historical Society, for a period of twenty years—both natives of Barnet, in Caledonia County, this State: The one contributed financially more to our enterprise than any other individual, and the other to our statistical and antiquarian resources with a hospitality and sympathy that rendered him to our heart and our enterprise as a father. Also to the following gentlemen (deceased), who have contributed histories or interesting papers for our work, viz: [redacted], of Bristol; Hon. CALVIN SOLACE, of Bridport; Rev. LYMAN MATTHEWS, of Cornwall; Rev. L. T. HARRIS, of Sutton; Rev. R. GODDING, of Burke; Hon. CHA'S ADAMS and HORACE LOOMIS, of Burlington; ERASTUS BOSTWICK, Esq., of Hinesburgh; GEORGE LEE LYMAN, M. D., of Jericho, and HENRY E. MINER, Esq., of Manchester.

INTERESTING PAPERS AND SUBJECTS,

INCLUDED IN THE HISTORIES OF THE TOWNS, NOT DESIGNATED IN THE TABLE OF CONTENTS.

NUMBER I.

John Strong Biography, 7; Zadock and Lieut. Benj. Everest, 10; Gov. Slade and other Cornwall biographies, 26—29; Hon. Henry and Stephen Olin, D. D., LL. D., 45, 46; Methodism in Middlebury, 57; Senator Phelps and other Middlebury biography, 58—61; Extract of a speech from Hon. James Meacham, 64; Bishop Henshaw, 65; Rev. Samuel Huribut, 72; Carlos Wilcox, 74; Hon. Daniel Chipman, LL. D., 87; Col. Thomas Sawyer, 91; Paul Moore, Thomas Rowley, Gen. Chipman, Hon. Chas. Rich, Gov. Jennison, and other Shoreham biography, 97—102; Bishop Hedding, 104; the British Grant, 105; Silas Wright, 111; Letter from Dr. Edwin James, 113; Rev. Joseph W. Sawyer, 117; Hon. Jesse Walker, 118.

NUMBER II.

Ethan Allen's letter on Remember Baker's capture by Munroe, 124; Dr. Samuel Adams, Benjamin Hough and toryism in Arlington, 126—131; Hawley, Baker, Stoddard, Hurd, Canfield, Gray and Brownson families of Arlington, 132—135; State Seal, 135; Bennington village, 137; the Robinsons, Fassetts and Fays of Bennington, Gen. Walbridge, Nathan Clark, Breakenridge, Seth Warner, Gov. Tichenor, Gen. Safford, Capt. Dewey, Col. Herrick Maswell, Col. Martin Scott, and others, 166—176; Col. Martindale, Capt. Shumway and others, Dorset biographies, 183—188; Marble Quarries, 189; the Jackson family, 192; the Colvin Murder case, 205; Gov. Skinner, Joseph Burr and Wm. A. Burnham, 206, 207; Gen. Jonah and Judge Solomon Wright, 218, 219; Rev. Dr. Spencer, 225; Harmon Coinage, 227; Capt. Lewis Hurd, 230; Gideon Olin, Jonas Galusha, and other Shaftbury biographies, 234—236; Ethan Allen and the lost children, 240.

NUMBER III.

Jeremiah Evarts, 241; Printing and B. Co. Agricultural Society, 252, 253; Letter of the Chicago Historical Society and of Dr. Darlington, 258; Enos Stevens and Col. Harvey, 281—284; Rev. David Goodwillie and Mr. and Mrs Goodwillie and family, 287—299; Agricultural Address by Henry Stevens, 300; Asahel Burington, 308; Ebenezer Eaton, Gov. Palmer and other Danville biographies, 316—320.

NUMBER IV.

Rev. Wilbur Fisk, D. D., Isaac Fletcher, Hon. Nicholas Baylies, 348—352; Dea. and Col. Elkins, Hon. Wm. Chamberlain, Rev. Leonard Worcester, Rev. David Merrill, Gov. Mattocks and other Danville biography, 363—371; James Whitelaw, 380; St. John's letter to Gen. Ethan Allen, 388; Josias Lyndon Arnold, 398; Dr. Jewett, Judge Paddock, 402, 403; the Fairbanks Scales, 407; Eld. Moses Cheney, 419; Giant Boy of Sutton and the Harris twins, 425; Judge Bell, 428.

NUMBER V.

Col. Roby Stone, 485; First Settler of Burlington, 491; Early Settlers, 493; Stephen Pearl and Reminiscences of early prominent men, by G. B. Sawyer, Esq., 497; Prince Edward in Burlington, 499; Early Business Men, 504; Burlington town clerks, treasurers, constables, representatives and pensioners, 509, 510; Banks, 510; Agricultural Fairs, Masons, Odd Fellows, manufactures, pioneer shop, etc., 511—517; the Lumber Trade, 517.

NUMBER VI.

President Marsh, President Wheeler, 527, 529; Fanny Allen, 567; Loraine Allen, 569; Levi Allen papers, 571; Capt. John Price, 574; H. B. Sawyer, 581; Visit of Layfayette, 616.

LIST OF NAMES NOT IN THE INDEX OF NAMES.

Early Bennington Settlers, 144; Representatives, 178, 275, 509; Burlington Grand List, 1787; Town Clerks, 179, 274; Manchester, County and State Officers, 202; Grantees, 482, 488; U. S. A. and State Officers of Caledonia Co., 270; Barnet freemen, 1784, 274; State, County and Town Officers, Lyndon, 354; Professional Men and Town Officers of Waterford, 432; Members of Congress, 360; Physicians, 164, 212, 224, 347, 504; Attorneys, 165, 472, 504.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Adventists, 40, 70.
Baptists, 8, 13, 18, 20, 40, 58, 61, 66, 67, 70, 94, 81, 95, 108, 110, 116, 117, 132, 139, 160, 162, 164, 191, 198, 204, 210, 221, 225, 235, 236, 237, 238, 249, 250. 266, 299, 307, 311, 313, 316, 322, 326, 330, 344, 346, 350, 417, 419, 433, 546.
Baptists, Freewill, 49, 103, 311, 322, 329, 417, 424, 431, 433, 435, 483, 743.
Baptists, Seventh-Day, 221.
Campbellites, or Disciples, 105, 132, 225.
Catholics, 58, 74, 132, 163, 191, 350, 408, 470, 550, 567, 625, 626.
Christians, 36, 38, 49, 103.
Congregationalists, 10, 14, 17, 20, 24, 29, 40, 41, 56, 70, 71, 72, 74, 90, 95, 100, 101, 103, 107, 108, 110, 116, 132, 139, 145, 160, 163, 190, 192, 195, 198, 200, 202, 204, 210, 212, 215, 224, 225, 226, 231, 235, 240, 256, 247, 249, 306, 315, 318, 319, 327, 331, 332, 333, 33. 337, 350, 361, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 404, 405, 406, 409, 427, 431, 433, 470, 500, 536, 593, 650, 652, 740.
Episcopalians, 5, 13, 28, 57, 65, 69, 82, 92, 107, 131, 160, 162, 204, 274, 340, 408, 548, 608, 623, 642, 644, 647, 741.
Methodists, Episcopal, 20, 21, 36, 40, 44, 46, 49, 57, 67, 70, 81, 90, 95, 103, 104, 107, 110, 116, 132, 160, 162, 191, 198, 205, 218, 221, 234, 238, 246, 249, 305, 315, 318, 323, 328, 334, 346, 348, 350, 357, 361, 370, 428, 433, 471, 483, 485, 486, 546, 742.
Methodists, Protestant, 221.
Methodists, Reformed, 221, 249.
Methodists, Wesleyan, 110.
New Lights, 320.
Presbyterians, 162, 261, 268, 269, 278, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 296, 299, 360, 375, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 635.
Quakers, or Friends, 49, 67, 103, 739, 740, 743.
Unitarians, 470, 539, 617, 627.
Universalists, 40, 74, 95, 102, 116, 162, 164, 198, 221, 238, 249, 300, 350, 431, 504.

EDUCATIONAL.

Academies, 163, 403, 520, 530; Colleges, 55, 521; Grammar Schools, 54; Institute, Episcopal, 470; Libraries, 470; Seminaries, 54, 205, 267, 531, 536.

MILITARY.

Champlain's battle with the Indians, M. De Courcelle's expedition, 1; Expedition of Schuyler, first English war party that passed through the Lake, and others, 2, 3, 4; Indians, 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 17, 24, 31, 32, 44, 52, 61, 66, 69, 70, 80, 82, 83, 97, 98, 99, 109, 124, 154, 197, 198, 214, 263, 264, 266, 314, 359, 362, 377, 408, 425, 426, 453, 455, 456.

REVOLUTIONARY HISTORY.

Battle of Ferrisburg, 79, 80; Muster Roll, first company of Militia in Bennington, 143; Battle of Bennington, 154;—5, 6, 9, 11, 13, 17, 21, 22, 24, 50, 51, 69, 71, 73, 79, 82, 109, 127, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 139, 151, 172, 173, 201, 214, 216, 218, 219, 223, 228, 232, 236, 267, 281, 289, 323, 359, 362, 364, 426, 456, 563, 570, 662, 663; Revolutionary Soldiers, 14, 21, 24, 26, 27, 37, 39, 66, 70, 94, 98, 100, 140, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 184, 186, 187, 188, 197, 218, 220, 230, 234, 240, 246, 280, 316, 363, 510, 592, 601; Capt. Dewey's Muster Roll, 153; Robinson's Muster Roll, 158; Militia Items, 209, 210, 247; Dorset Convention, 185; New York Controversy, 4, 5, 16, 23, 32, 79, 98, 121, 124, 145, 167, 171, 174, 200, 215, 225, 233, 261, 388, 391, 461, 564; Persons taken by Indians, and Massacre of St. Francis Village, 263; Hazen's Military Road, 256; War of 1812, 53, 54, 107, 177, 186, 314, 317, 468, 484, 501, 574, 619, 521, 622, 670, 673, and Battle of Plattsburgh, 675; Smugglers, 467, 593.

1861.

Administration of Gov. Fairbanks in relation to the Rebellion, 436; Officers of first 8 Vt. Regts., as organized, 443; Caledonia Co. Vols., 449; Military Chapter, continued, 475, 476; Vermont Soldiers at Gettysburgh, 708.

INDEX OF NAMES.

FOR THE FIRST SIX HUNDRED PAGES.

Abbott, Barachias, 198; Elisabeth, 21; James, 321; Jeremiah, 283.
Adams, Benjamin, 500, 511; Hon. C. B. 55, 507, 530, 545, 616; Callendus, 390; Doctor, 463; Friend, 81; James, 390, 430; Jonathan, 390, 404; Joel, 211; J. S., 616; Martin, 390, 392, 395; Moses, 322; Rev. O. W., 236, 238; Prof., 155, 256; Rev. P., 55; Dr. Samuel, 123, 126, 129; Stephen, 324; Rev. Zenas, 306.
Aglesworth, Abel, 253.
Aiken, John, 205.
Albee, Rev. F. T., 361.
Alden, Rev. Nathl. 36.
Aldis, Judge, 520.
Aldrich, Amos, 249; Esquire, 401; Ariel, 397; Capt., 359; Levi, 421.
Alexander, Dr. Eldad, 320; Reuben, 397.
Alger, Asa, 238.
Allen, Abisha, 607; Hon. A. G., 42, 43; Dana, 593; David, 375, 376; Col. Ebenezer, 454, 548, 571; Elnathan, 43; Edward, 493; Gen. Ethan, 5, 11, 16, 32, 43, 50, 51, 69, 79, 91, 94, 97, 98, 99, 123, 124, 126, 239, 240, 252, 254, 255, 258, 312, 388, 475, 484, 488, 490, 492, 493 590
Allen Family, 564, 566, 567, 570, 593; Eld. F. B., 454; Heber family, 571; Heman, 172; Capt. Heman, 471, 477, 484, 593,; Heman, of Colchester, and family, 510, 548, 602; Heman of Highgate, 562; Heman Allen genealogy, 603, 604, 606; Ira, 6, 150, 156, 172, 185, 201, 313, 239. 244, 378, 454, 463, 465, 488, 490, 493, 494, 496, 500, 511, 516, 517, 521, 524, 552; Ira H., 563; J. 24; Dr. J. A., 59, 120; Hon. Joel, 513; John, 67; Joseph D., 513; Judge, 6; Justice, 19; Mercy, 561; Levi, 571; Lucinda, 593; Lucy Caroline, 593; Nathaniel, 593; Noah, 67, 55; Polly, 35; Reuben, 37; Samuel, 493, 496; Prof. Solomon, 55; Theophilus, 23; Zimri, 486, 490.
Ames, A., 256; Benjamin, 182; Rev. B. D, 253; Robert, 253; Samuel, 253.
Amherst, Gen., 78, 263; Sir Jeffry, 158.
Amidon, Ezra, 220.
Amsden, Richard, 220.
Anderson, 212, 215; Rev. James, 204; Rev. John, D. D., 294.
Andrus, 232; Eldad, 24; Ethan 24; Rev. Joseph R., 28.
Angel, Capt., 219.
Anger, Rev. Aaron, 326; Mary A. (Mrs. A. Spafford, deceased), 326.
Annan, Rev. David, 269, 284; Robert, 269, 279, 284.
Anse, Catholic clergyman, 551.
Anthony, John, 423.
Arm, William, 183.
Armstrong, Jonathan, 158; Hon. F. B., 158.
Arnold, Benedict, 5, 67, 80, 184, 217, 223, 230; Burke, 339; Dr. Jonathan, 226, 338, 339, 390, 392, 395, 398, 399, 406; John, 19, 339, 390; Josiah Lyndon. 269, 307, 398, 400, 409, 410; Gov. Lemuel H., 394; Lyndon, 339; William, 226, 339.
Asbury, Bishop, 104.
Ashley, Samuel, 167; Sheriff, 215.
Ashman, Jehudi, 520.
Aspinwall, Rev. N. W., 361.
Atkinson, Col., 580; F. Jr., 274.
Atwater, Rev. Jeremiah, 54, 55; Phineas, 554, 608.
Atwood, Aaron A., 107; Abel, 256; Amos, 96; Charles E., 86; Eben, 96, 256; Mark, 103; Rev. Parker, 80; Thomas, 86; Samuel, 143.
Austin, Lewis A., 55; Rev. Samuel, 322, 325; Seneca, 554.
Averill, 239; Rev. D., 260, 238; Samuel, 19, 491.
Ayre, David, 36; David, Jr., 37; James, 344; Joseph, 58; Merriam, 344.
Babbit, Rev. J., 116.
Bachop, William, 283.
Bacon, 344; Samuel, 321.
Bailey, Aaron, 362; Anna, 363; Chas., 246; Col. 376; Eld., 269; Elijah, 221; Flavel, 325; Gen. 362; Israel P., 321; Jacob, 375; Gen. Jacob, 206, 313, 362; J. A., 321; James, 359, 363; Elder James, 322; Jonathan, 39; Jonas, 221; Jeremiah, 363; Lansing, 236; L. M., 198; Major, 360; Mary, 30; Mary, 2d, 368; Gen. Stephen, 94; Thomas, 99; William P., 96, and two prisoners by Indians, 359.
Baker, Rev. A. A., 25; Anthony, 35, 36; Baker family, 133; John K., 551, 553; Lydia, ——; Nahum, 493, 496; Remember, 50, 123, 124, 125, 133, 151, 233, 240, 456, 463, 471, 488, 490, 491, 492.
Baldwin, Asa, 182, 184, 186, Benjamin, 182, 212; Rev. Bowman, 209; Eleazer, Elisha, 184; Rev. F., 162; Silas, Thomas, 184; William, 18.
Ball, Arnold, 358; Israel, 39; James, 356, 357; Joseph P., 39; L. C. 253; Perley, 265; P. E., 141; Persis, 39; Ursula, 58.
Ballard, James, 163; G. K. and O. L., 514.
Bancroft, Mary, 326.
Bangs, Rufus, 141.
Baptiste, Jean, 455.
Barber, Amasa D., 397; Dr. B. J. 96; Rev. Edward, D. D., 56, 92, 219, 232; John, 17; Lucy, 256; M. and D., 218.
Barbour, William, 306.
Bard, Rev. Geo., 429.
Barker, 426; Barnabas, 391, 396, 400; John, 45, 396; Prudence, 45.
Barlow, Sidney, 496, 208.
Barnard, Alonzo, 112; Benjamin, 209, 112; Hepsah, 211; Jonah, Josiah, 112; Lucy, 211; Rachel, 211; Seth, 12; Stowell, 112.
Barnes, 273; Daniel, Jr., 79; H., Jr., 13; Lawrence, 514, 519; Rev., 52.
Barnet, Capt. John, 482; Samuel, 482, 484.
Barney, Capt. John, 402, 409; Thos. 201.
Barnum, Gen. A. W., 67; Barnabas, 65, 232; Eben, 67; Samuel, 67; Stephen, 67; Thomas, 94.
Barrett, Horace W., 513; Rev., 256.
Bartholomew, Jacob, 82.
Bates, Joshua, D. D., 55, 56; Rev. Lewis, 315, 328.
Bartlett, Henry S., 347; H. S., 350; J. H., 377; Prof. 360; Thomas, 304, 308; Thomas, Jr., 347; Sylvanus, 398; William, 55.
Bartholomew; Jacob, 82.
Barton, Andrew, Jr., 108; 109; Dr. Simon, 123.
Batcholder, Rev. C. R., 204, 205; Edmund, 112; Ira K., 112, 208, 212; John, 208, 209, 316; Jeremiah, 321, 322; Nancy, 112; Samuel, 315; Timothy, 313.
Battell, Philip, 51, 120, 255.
Bascom, Eleazer, 101, 357; Elisha and Ira, 101.
Baum, Col., 11, 154, 156, 157, 158, 173, 175.
Bayden, Rev., 163.
Bayles and Baylies, 360; Horatio, N., Mary, Nicholas, 347, 350, 352.
Baxter, William, 319.
Beach, A. L., 87; Rev. John, 131; Noah and Maj. Samuel, 116.
Beadley, Joseph and Leonard, 125.
Beals, G., 350.
Bean, David, 518.
Beard, Aaron, 210; John, 96.
Beardley, Capt. 19
Baardsley, 252; Daniel, 201; Horace, 269.
Beardster, 184.
Beattie, Rev. James, 294, 384; James, Esq., 379.
Bebee, Asa and Asa, Jr., 246, 247; Dudley and Dudley, Sr., 246; Lewis, 204; Luther, 246; Lydia, 247, Sarah, 247.
Beckwith, Daniel, 305; Elder, 21; Rev. 311.
Bedel, Col., 266.
Bedford, Rev. R., 361.
Beeman, Rev. Jacob, 21.
Belding, Benjamin, 307; David, 107, 109; Elisha, 603; Rhoda, Sally, Woodruff, 307
Belknap, Nathaniel, 36; Oriel, 483.
Bell, Harvey, 110; James, 427, 428; James S., 428; Solomon, 110.
Bellows, John, 43.
Bemiss, 353; Capt. 43; Elias, 347; Joel, Welcome, Wait, 343.
Benedict, Abel, 126, 130; Benajah, 13; Col., 223; G. G., 532, 554; Geo. W., 507, 523, 530, 600; Peter, 490, 494, 496, 511; Pitman, 123; T. N. 523.
Bennet, Francis, 254; John N., 17; Milo L., 471; N., 220; Rev. 238.
Bently, Hannah, 50; James, 23, 50; Mrs., 255; Robert, 203; Samuel, 255; Thomas, 23.
Benton, Jones, 137, 140; Samuel, 24;
Berdan, Col. H., 440.
Bernard, Francis, 237.
Beveredge, Rev. Thomas, 269, 281; 285, 286, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 296.
Bickford, Aaron, 316; Abigail, 316; Elizabeth, 316; John, 314.
Bidwell, C., 103; George, 102, 103.
Bigelow, 347, 349; Betsy T., 58; Burton, 112; John, 375; L. G. 519; Reuben, 208, 209.
Bigwood, Samuel, 513.
Billings, 358; Samuel, 171.
Bingham, Rev. Amos, 209, 211; Hon. B. S., 167; Rev. Hiram, 163; Rev

H., 140; Dea. Jeremiah, 27; K. S., 141; Silas, 34; Rev. Silas L., 70; William R., 119.
Bisco, Isaac, 123, 127, 130.
Bisels, Benj., 90.
Bishop, Azro, 553; Harriet E., 83; John, 66; John' Jr., 67; Rev. J., 249; N., 396.
Bissel, Esq., 207.
Blackleach, Rev. B., 246.
Blair, Andrew, 434, 435; M. Esq., 436.
Blanchard, 472, 360, 369; Anthel, 70; Dr. Enoch, 360; Hon. John C., 207; Joseph, 49; Moses, 495; P., 302; T. J., 413.
Bliss, Charles M., 253; Capt. John, 574, 580.
Blodgett, Asa, 23; C., 519; Geo. M., 477; Samuel, 24.
Blood, Caleb, 236, 254; Esquire, 39; Isaac, 223; Nancy, 36; Nathaniel, 518; Phineas, 36.
Bloomer, Reuben, Susannah, 184.
Blount, Col. A. P., 440.
Bly, 344.
Boardman, Amos, 518; Rev. Benjamin, 495, 515; Prof. G. A., 94; E. J. 315; Henry, 515; Samuel M. 56.
Bodford, Rev., 429.
Bogard, Isaac, 107.
Bole, Rev. John, 279.
Bone, John, 484.
Bonett, John, 278.
Bonister, Dr., 218.
Boody, Azariah, 434; Eld. Jos., 435.
Booth, Roger, 138.
Boothe, Josiah, 120.
Bostwick, Erastus, Esq., 494; Rev. Gideon, 131, 205; Joseph, 103; Mary A. E. 47; Rev. Shadrick, 485.
Bosworth, Mrs., 123.
Bottom, Judge Elias, 70, 71; Nathan H., 226; Norman, 255.
Bourne, Jesse, Stephen, 205.
Boutelle, A., 361; Mrs., 361.
Bovie, Mrs., 114; Peter, 313.
Bowdish, Isaac, B., 472.
Bowen, Mrs. Betsey, 220.
Bowker, 345; Daniel, 346.
Boynton, Amos, 32; Henry, 103; Capt. Job, 493, 494, 495; S., 96.
Bruce, Hon. Jonathan, 204; William, 230.
Brad, Dick Abatrose, 2.
Bradford, Rev. M. B., 200.
Bradley, 239; B., 396; Harry, 532; Joseph, 220; Lemuel, 491, 492; Sewall, 416; Steph. B., 108; Ward, Esq., 414; William C., 522.
Brainard, David, 247; Israel, 313.
Branch, Dr. John, 116.
Breckenridge, James, 126, 143, 144, 149, 173.
Breyman, Col., 11, 164.
Bridley, Rev. Cyprian, H., 57.
Bridgman, C., 335; John, 320.
Briggs, William P., 492.
Brigham, Rev. James, 599; Paul, 500.
Brigman, Capt. J., 326, 333.
Bricha, David, 102.
Brimmer, Green, 114.
Bristol, Joseph, 220.
Brittell, Mrs. C., 109; Claudrics, 109.
Brock, Andrew, 275, 278; Enerick, 279; Junnet, 253; John, 208; Robert, 276, 278, 274, 289, 283; Walter, 274, 276, 281, 283.
Brodt, John, 19.
Brooks, Jonathan, 238; John, 246, 247; Mrs., 247; Lucy, 246; Reuben, Esq., 246; Samuel, 19.
Brown, 31, 98; Abel, 340; Rev. Bowman, 209; Maj. Eben., 504, 565, 570; Rev. Ebenezer, 57; Gen., 574; Hannah, 49; Jacob, 238; Jesse, 211; John, 86, 243, 456; Josiah, 38, 345; L. R., 347; Nathan, 248; Rev. Nathan, 248; Nathaniel, 248; Philemon, 134; Richard, 214, 215; Seth, 134; Solomon, 72; Wheeler, 214, 215; William G., 164; Rev. Z. H., 103.
Brownell, Rev. E. W., 225; E. 218.
Brownson, Rev. Abraham, 132; Amos, 456, 496; Lieut. Eli, 239, 240; Brownson family, 135; Gen. Gideon, 172, 227, 230; Mary, 135; Orentes, 300; Timothy, 228, 239, 240.
Bruce, D. 141.
Brush, Alexander, 70, 106; Col. Nathaniel, 155.
Bryant, Rev., 547; William, 504.
Buck, Hon. Daniel, 319, 343, 590; David, 123; Lemuel, 122, 131.
Buckham, Prof. M. H., 534.
Bucklin, Capt. Horace, 582; William, 343.
Buckman, Levi, 311.
Bugbee, Luther, 314.
Bugly, Rev. M., 417.
Buell, Abel, 228; Abigail, 537; Rev. D., 549; Eliza W., 514; Col. Ozias, 537, 539, 592, 595; Samuel, Esq., 472, 610; William, 228.
Bull, Thomas, 201.
Bullard, Rev., 228.
Bullions, Rev. Alexander, D. D., 284.
Bump, Salathiel, 91.
Bundy, James, 324.
Burbank, Frances, 246; Rev. M., 547.
Burdick, Rev. C. F., 547; Justus, 548.
Burgess, Rev. Ebenezer, 522.
Burgoyne, Gen., 5, 153, 157, 158, 201, 216, 220, 223, 233.
Burnet, Rev. 5, 6.
Burnham, Benjamin, 322; John, 165; Sir John, 235; William, 205, 247.
Burnham, Rev. Daniel, 131.
Burley, Joseph, 420.
Burling, Edward, 487; Richard, 106.
Burlingame, 222.
Burns, 114.
Burr, Joseph, 193, 204, 205, 206.
Burrington, Asahel and family, 308; H. A., 309; H. H., 548; Rev. L. M., 309, 311.
Burritt, Andrew, Daniel, 123.
Burroughs, Hon. Alex., 338; Zebulon, 337.
Burrows, B., 300; Rev. George, 90; Isaac, 17.
Burt, 490; Asahel, 337; John, 456; Susannah, 350.
Burton, Anna, 334; Capt. 209; Hiram, 232; Josiah, 205; Dr. Simon, 230.
Bush, E. D., 97; Laura, 102; Rev. S. W., 543.
Bushnell, Ira, 105; Rev. J. 20, 24; J. S., 52.
Butler, Beauman, 399; Caleb, 600; Elder Calvin, 20; Roswell, 518.
Butterfield, Jonathan, 208; Joseph, 246; Rachel, 246; Thomas, 454, 493.
Button, Rev. A. G., 361.
Butts, Esias, 43; Joseph, 43.
Bylee, Matthew, D., 220.
Cable, Dr. Joseph, 20.
Cady, 221; Henry, 228; Noah, 43.
Cahoon B. P., 341; Hon. Daniel, 240, 339, 440, 342, 343, 346, 347, 222; Daniel, Jr., 340, 341; Dr., 347; Edward A., 349; Geo. C., 540, 554; Geo. W., 350; James, 423; Col. J. W., 347; Mary P., 352; Samuel, 423; Hon. Wm., 350, 347; Wm. W., 341, 342, 343, 344, 350.
Caldwald, and Winderse, 204.
Callender, Amos, 94; Noah, 94.
Calberies, Gov. de, 2.
Cameron, Chas., 141; John, 381.
Campbell, Alex. 238; Col., 578; Lieut. John, 454; Capt Joseph B., Henry R. Esq., 477.
Canfield, Rev. Eli H., 132; Canfield family, 134; Israel, 130, 131; Nathan, 130.
Canol, Rev. Angelo, 228.
Capen, Nathan, [illegible]
Card, Jonathan, [illegible]
Cardell, Wm. S., 140.
Cardinel, Rev. H., 551.
Carleton, Gen., 152; Major, 4, 112.
Carlisle, Joseph, 35, 36; Martin, 37, 319; Imal, 35; Mrs. 36; Lydia, Wm., Jr., 36, 39.
Carlque, Richard, 256; Rev. Richard, 95.
Carpenter, Abel, 342, 343, 347, 353. Rev. Asa, 436, 441; A. M. [illegible] Carlos, John and family, [illegible] Daniel, 221; David, 197, Dr., 347; Rev. E. J., 220; Eunice, 91; [illegible] Richard, 221; Dr. Walter, 524.
Carr, Robert, 126.
Carter, Ezra, Esq., 360, 364; John, 73; Marshall, 196.
Carver, Olive, 21.
Case, Jonah, 13; Lucy, 52.
Cass, Josiah, 221.
Castle, Abael, 124; Daniel, 495.
Caswell, Rev. E. H., 220.
Cate, Benj., 426.
Catlin, Albert L., 472; Abigail, 327; Amos, 34; Asahel, 28; Guy and Moses, 502, 503, 504, 524; Russell, 131; Susannah, 327; Theodore, 496, 615.
Caukins, Master, 531.
Chadwick, David, 356.
Chaffe, B., 47; Oliver, 344; William C., 42.
Chamberlain, E. R., 392; Eld Henry, 81, 96; Rev. Judson, 124, 44; Mellen, 497; Samuel, 360; William, 362, 367.
Chamberlin, Daniel, 246; Chamberlin and Deming, 216; George R. 350; Gen., 315; Eastman, 246; Jane E., 367; John, 458, 471; Mellen, 360; William, 362, 521, 524, 360.
Chamberlyn, Rev. E. B., 45.
Chambers, Robert, 7.
Champlain, Samuel, 1.
Champlin, Chas. H., 87.
Chandler, Rev. Amariah, 537; Bigelow and Co., 204; Gen. John, Hon. John W., 363, 364; Hon. L., 238; Simeon, 50.
Chaney, Henry, 522.
Chapin, Rev. Israel, 263; Rev. Sylvanus, 14.
Chapman, 246; George T., 548; R. H. 166; Elder, 426; John, 199; Henry, 246; Throop, 20.
Charlotte, Jeanoses, 455.
Chase, 256; Ada, 240; C. C., 360, 366; Charles, 215, 360; Ebenezer, 28; Gen. E. B., 347; Henry, 361; Hon. Judge, 206; Isaac, 210; Mary B. 530; Moses, 347, 361; Nathan, 28 530; Moses, 347, 361; Nathan, 28 530; Noah, 524, 530; Samuel, Jr., 6, 105; Thomas, 100.
Christie, Daniel, 220.
Chittenden, Giles, 148; Lucius E., 472; Martin, 440, 474, 512, 513; Noah, 6, 440, 472, 474, 475, Samuel J., 4, Hon. Thomas, 87, 88, 131, 132, 134, 144, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 510, 524; Treasury, 472.
Church, Daniel, 220; Ensign, 67.
Cilley, Col., 434.
Clafflin, Daniel and Plimpton, 40.
Clapham, Richard, 5.
Clark, Calvin, 5.
Clay, Cassius, 446.
Clark, [illegible] Asahel, Eldy Jos. A. P. [illegible] A. J. [illegible] B. C. [illegible] Benjamin, 56, 57.
Church, Daniel, [illegible] Ensign, 67.
Cilley, Col., 434.
Claflin, Daniel and Plimpton, 40.
Clapham, Richard, 5.
Clark, Calvin, 5.
Clay, Cassius, 446.
Clark, [illegible] Asahel, Eldy Jos. A. P. [illegible] A. J. [illegible] B. C. [illegible] Benjamin, 56, 57.

Daniel A., 162, 163; Doctor, 212; Elias, Jr., 346; Elisha, 236; Eliza M., 164; Gen., 573; Henry, 236; Isaac, 154, 173; James, 390; Jeremiah, 234; Maj. Jeremiah, 200; John, 273; Rev. John, 307, 277, 282; Joseph, 508; Rev. Josiah, 225; Myron, 236; Nathan, 173; Nathan, Jr., 173; Rev. Nathl., 160; Numan S., 475; N. G., Prof., 524; Polly, 36; Rebekah, 36; Robt. G., 199; Saml., 110; Rev. Saml., 534, 542, 545, and wife 604; Slocum, 467; Stephen, 238; Thos., Rev., 262, 266, 278, 279, 282, 284; William, 36; William C., 508; William T., 322.
Clarke, Dr. W. H. C., 554.
Clearece, Rev. Jerome, 551, 163.
Claxton, Capt., 586.
Clearwater, Geo., 141.
Cleveland, Rev. E., 299.
Clinton, Gen., 216.
Clure, Mrs., 18.
Cobb, Fuller, 53; Justus, 53; Simeon, 402.
Cobin, 239, 240.
Coburn, Jonathan, 382.
Cochran, 151, 220; Ira, 208; Cochran and M. M. Manley, 208; Rev. Warren, 246; Samuel, 110.
Coe, Miles, 357.
Coffin, John, 490.
Coit, Daniel, 337; Rev. Joseph, H., 132; Dr. Robert, 498; William, 500, 504, 520.
Colby, James K., 404; Rev. John, 424; Rev., 311.
Colden, Lieut. Gov., 145, 146, 147, 152, 167, 219.
Cole, C. S., 232; Hiram, 253; Simeon, 390.
Coleman, Lyman, 205; Rev. Lyman, 535.
Colfix, David, 304.
Collamer, Hon. Jacob, 472, 530.
Collar, Ebenezer, Fanny, 83; Harvey, 85.
Collier, Thomas, 252.
Collins, Rev. Aaron, 240; Collins, Jr., 67; John, 456, 493, 494, 495; Rev., 56.
Colson, David, 208.
Calvin, John, 141; Lewis, 205; Russell, Stephen, 205.
Comin, Alvah, Jonathan, 110.
Comstock, Jason, 499; Capt. Thos. 239, 240.
Connor, Capt., 586.
Converse, Rev. J. K. 535, 538.
Cook, Capt., 13; Elisha, 237; Elkanah, 34; J. J. C., 253; Patty, 209; Wilbur, 238; William, 38.
Cooley, Col. William., 227.
Cooper, Rev., A. L., 329; Sir Astley, 588; Stephen, 104.
Copland, Martin, 20.
Copeland, A. H., 91.
Cormack, J. C., 248; Rev., 225.
Cornall, Rev. Joseph, 204.
Courcelles, M. de, 1.
Cowen, James, 37.
Cowles, Geo., 380.
Crafts, Hon. Samuel, 319, 63, 49, 483.
Crandal, B. C., 253.
Craigs, James, 482.
Crane, Arza, 496; A., 17.
Crawford, Elder Jos., 316; Adonigah, 228; H., 6; Jonah, 6
Creed, John, 21.
Cressey, Rev. Noah, 253.
Crevecoeur, St. John, de, 312, 388.
Crigo, John, 94; P. Shoreham, 94.
Crofut, David, 123, 138.
Croker, Rev. John, 417.
Crosby, Reuben, 404, 425.
Crosier, Joseph, 231.
Cross, Daniel, 313; James, 274, 279; Ichabod, 232.
Crossett, Isaac, 138.
Crowley, Rev. H., 238.
Cudworth, and Howes, 220.
Cummings, Elder, 329
Cuningham, 347; Nathaniel, 322.
Curler, Dea. Aaron and Abner G., 83.
Currier, John, 361; Stephen, 426.
Curtis, Daniel, 184; O., 361; Stephen, 426; Zacharias, 184.
Cutler, J. C., 404; Rev. Thaddeus, 349; Zuriel, 240.
Cushing, 346; Rev. C. M., 311; H. P., 361.
Cuyler, Jacob, 174; Lieut., 32; Major, 149.
Daggett, Asa, 395; Nathaniel, 396.
Dakin, Timothy, 32.
Dale, Joshua, 197.
Daley, Rev. John B., 58.
Damon, Ebenezer, 337; Reuben A., 67.
Dana, Hon. Israel, 317; John W., 317; R. S., 97; Frances, 318; Hannah, 317; Rev. Judah, 318.
Danforth, Capt. 218; Elkanah, 248; Sylvanus, 218.
Danelou, Rev. Stanislaus, 400.
Daniels, Leavitt H., 314; Samuel, 416.
Danville, Admiral, 312.
Darling, Chas. B., 347, 353; Jonathan, John, Nathan, Moses, Phebe, Robert, Samuel, 322: Levi, 35, 37; R., 321.
Davenport and Clay, 53; Emily, 92.
Davidson, Alex., 495, 615; Daniel, 221; Elder, 311; Henry, 220; John, 211; Rev., 221; Rev. Silas, 300.
Davis, Com., 477; Gen., 497; Grindal, 35, 37; Elisha, 418; Enoch, 253; Eleazer, 357; Gideon and Gideon, Jr., 198; Francis, 232; Henry, 55; Jacob, 267; Jonathan, 340; Simeon, 63.
Darrow, Samuel, 103.
Day, Arthur, 236; Ashel, 246; Caleb, 123; Ephraim, Ephraim, Jr., Oliver, 247; Russell, 246, 247; Russell, Jr., 246; Salmon, 246; Warren, 246.
Deal, Sebastian, 214, 216.
Dean, Cyrus B., 467; Prof. James, 522, 599; Ruth, 22; Rev. 237; the Smuggler, 502.
Deane, J. F., Esq., 232.
De Forest, Geo. B., 495.
Delano, L. H., 330.
Dellious, Godfrey, 2.
Delong, Lawrence, Philip, 49.
Deming, Benj. F., 320; E. H., 545, 615; Chas. Tollett,, 616; Eli, 184; Deming, historian, 82, 106, 120, 182, 217, 218, 230; Julius, 592; Pownal, 315; Reuben H., 346, 347; Silvester, 131, 132, 139.
Denison, Christopher, 198; Elder Nathan, 327.
Dennison, B. F., 311; Dr., 347; Hon. Geo. W., M. D., 307; Thomas, 280.
Derby, Abner, 226.
Dewey, Eldad, 137; Mrs. Eldad, 137; Eligah, 248; Capt. Eligah, 143, 153, 155, 157, 158, 167, 175; Enoch, 50; Rev. Jedediah, 137, 145, 160, 166, 175; Luther, 116; Noah, 482.
Dexter, D. S., 361; Stephen, 404.
Dickenson, Horace, 114; Rev. James, 380; Dr. Nathl. 164; Joshua, 114; Robert, 377.
Dickerman, Eli, 343; Jerry, 347.
Dilse, Peter, 482.
Dinsmore, Freedom, 347; Samuel, 532.
Dodge, Asa, 110; Elder John, 20.
Dodgson, Rev. Thomas, 21.
Dole, Gen. Stephen, 314.
Doloff, Henry, 357.
Dolph, Henry, 357.
Donaghon, Gov., 2.
Doolittle, Benj., 300; Calvin, 321; Ephraim, 16; Col. Eph., 93, 94; Jesse, 341, 343; Col. Joel, 94, 96; Hon. Joel, 50; Philo, 495, 510.
Dorchester, Fred., 494.
Dorr, 307.
Doty, Asa, 140.
Douglass, Capt., 79; Hon. Capt., 583, 587; Thomas, 32; William, 23, 35, 431.
Dow, Gilman, 427; Lorenzo, 70, 96, 333, 483, 350; Tabitha, 333; Thos., 314.
Downer, 232; Cyprian, 235; Eliphlet, 254; John. 493.
Doyle, Martin, 308.
Doxey, 493; Cadles, 493.
Drake Asaph., 101; C. B., 101; Ellis, 467.
Draper, Nathan, 235; S., 96.
Drew, Dr. J. R. 224; Capt. J. T., 477; Elder John, 419.
Drolet, Rev., H., 408.
Drown, Capt, Samuel, 414, 413; Dea. Stephen, 412, 413 414, 418.
Drupn, Rev., 163.
Drummond, Lieut. Gen., 575.
Duane, 223, 234; James, 146, 148; Kemp, 148.
Dubois, Adj., 486.
Duglue, Rev. Joseph, 551.
Duhigg, Dennis, 350.
Dunklee, J. J., 513.
Dunmore, Earl, 386.
Dunsheer, Robert, 218, 119.
Dunster, Anne, 210.
Dunton, Gen. Ezek., 22; Mary, 21.
Durant, James, Mark, 427.
Durfey, Jed., Milo, Olive, 49.
Dutcher, William, Mrs. Wm., 141.
Dutton, Jacob, 427.
Drover, Rev. L., 246.
Dwinnell, Sarah, 45.
Dwyer, Rev., Ransom, 235.
Dyer, Charles, 514; Daniel, 595; Mary, 514; Porter, Jr., 153; Patren, 594; William, 232.
Eames, David, Joseph, 231.
Earl, Joshua, Oliver, 594.
Eastman, Calvin, 19; Cyprian, 19, 21; Benjamin, 129; Bershaba, 21; Elizabeth, 49; George, 20; Jonathan, 19, 21, 22, 223, 226; Rev. John, 315; Samuel, 49.
Easton, Gen. Wm., 136.
Eaton, Ebenezer, 318; N. H. 319; R. W., 10.
Edgell, Abel, 346; A., Rev. John, 349.
Edgerton, Eleazer, 154.
Edson, Esquire, 399; Nathaniel, 397, 399, 400.
Edward, Prince, 499.
Elkins, Harvey, 352; Jonathan, 266; Col. Jonathan, 302, 303; Dea. Jonathan, 279, 359, 360, 362, 363.
Ellis, Harmon, 236.
Elmore, Capt. Samuel, 78.
Emery, J. and Sarah, 322.
Emsley, Alex. 278.
Englesby, 504. E. J., 541. E. T., 498, 510, 532, 545; L. B. 513, 516.
Enos, Roger, 475.
Essex, Jeremiah, 139.
Esterbrooks, Benj., 337, 341; Caleb, 341.
Estes, Truman, 139, 141.
Esty, Aaron, 45.
Evans 343; Col. Oliver, 598; Theodore S., 595.
Everts, Abner,, Charles, 230, 240; Ebenezer, 50, 60, 88; Ira, 343; Jeremiah, 300; John, 50, 62, 88; Luther, 50; Zerah, 344.
Everett, Edward, 166.
Everest, Lieut., Benj., 510; Gen. C. C., 10; Joseph, 6, 12; Zadock, 9, 10, 11, 56, 79, 90; Ward, 6.
Everts, Gilbert, 90; James, Mrs. Jas., 241; Jonathan, Jeremiah, 241.
Fairbank, Rev., 261, 412.
Fairbanks, Hon. Erastus, 60, 250, 406, 410; Franklin, 271; Horace, 410; John, 230; Joseph P., 55, 404, 410; Rev. Joseph, 316; Thaddeus, 407.

Fairley, Amos, 209; Rev., 209.
Falconer, Capt., 584.
Farman, Joseph, 128.
Farnsworth, Joseph, 65.
Farr, Lois, 82.
Farrand, Hon. Daniel, 469, 471, 500, 502, 539, 545.
Farrar, E. L., 514.
Farrington, Nathaniel, 427; Nath'l, Jr., 426, 427.
Farwell, Asa, 185; Rev. Asa, 191; Elder, 96; Isaac, John, 185.
Fassett, Col. Eleazer, 136; Captain John and family, 170; John, 143, 152, 201, 225, 170; John, Jr., 130, 134, 170, 472.
Fay, Alonzo, 249; Benjamin, 159; B. F., 141; C., 107; David, 172, 467; Judge Daniel, 172; John 157, 294; Jonas, 159, 164, and family, 185; Joseph, 302, 320, 396; Col. Joseph and family, 172; Samuel, 151; Capt. Samuel C., 172; Stephen and family, 151, 163, 157.
Fazon, 138.
Fenton, Gen. R. W., 402.
Ferry, David, 376.
Ferguson, Alex., 493, 496; Rev. David, 103; Geo. & Co., 220; John, 66, 67, 103.
Ferris, Benj. 32, 73; Dardus, 82; David, 32; Elijah, 81; Jed., 79; Noah, 80; Peter, Reed, Squire, 82.
Fessenden, Kate, 526.
Field, Aaron, Rev., 361; Abel, 161; Anthony, 32, 33; Benjamin, 33; Dr., 331; Elisha, 143; Frederick, 183; Hubbard, 349; Jesse, 161; Olney, 346; Spafford, 190; Thomas, 33, 161.
Fillmore, 360; Benjamin, Rev. David, 345; Mary, 168, 169; Nathaniel, 166.
Finch, Abigail, 118.
Fish, Geo. P., 328.
Fisher, Eph., 73; James and Jeremiah, 341; Rev., 311; William, 341.
Fisk, 215, 350; Capt. A., 42; James, 310; Jonathan, 149; Judge, 347; Rev. Joel, 70.
Fiske, Isaiah, 344; Rev. Wilbur, 316, 345, 360.
Fitch, Rev. John, 306, 315, 327, 405.
Fitts, J., 35, 49.
Flagg, Hon. Azariah, 486; Dr. 116; Pliny, 90.
Fleming, Rev. A., 95, 316; Julia, 536.
Fletcher, Abigail, 351; Alpha, 344; Charles D., 350, 352; Frederick, 511; Horace, 164; Isaac, 346, 351, 353; Hon. Isaac, 348, 350, 351, 353; Joel, 342; Capt. Joel, 353; Lucy, 353; Samuel, 8, 86, 431.
Flower, Timothy, 226.
Fober, Benj., 49.
Follet, Samuel, 180; Timothy, 511, 548, 592, 616.
Folsom, Charles, 355.
Foot, Hon. Alvin, 497, 498, 544, 545, 592; Appleton, 62; Daniel, 20, 50, 51, 54, 256; Rev. Leuman, 132, 498, 548, 584; Philo, 255; Stillman, 52.
Forbes, Eliab, 496.
Forbush, J., 94.
Ford, A. W., 42; Frederick, M. D., 25.
Forsburg, 212, 216.
Foss, Moses, 412.
Foster, Capt. Enoch, 427; Ephraim, 363; Ichabod, 110; Hon. Jedediah, 500; John M., 346, 351; Josiah, 594; Merrill, 427; N. P., 548.
Fowler, Burnet, 266, 275, 280, 283, 285; Harvey, 282; Jonathan, 266, 275, 283, 284.
Fox, Alonzo, 249.
Frances, Col., 154.
Frazier, Col., 9.
Frazziere, Elder, 21.
Freeman, Otis, 426.
French, Daniel, 325; Charles O., 308; Dr., 350; Emeline, 308; Isaac, 493, 496; Jeremiah, 146, 493, 496, 616; Josiah, 148, 160; Dr. Josiah, 164; Olney, 346; Martin, 325; Lydia, 332; Sally, Samuel, 307, 325, 332; Thos., 86; Dea. Thomas, 325, 332.
Frisbie, Dea. Ebenezer, 18.
Frost, Wm., 321.
Frume, James, 123.
Frye, Capt., 138.
Fuller, Dr. 350.
Fulsom, Barnard, 300; Samuel, 189.
Furnal, Jona. R., 86.
Fyler, Roman, 304, 307, 305.
Gage, B. F., 411; Mrs. Betsy, 32, 34; George, 182; Isaac, 33; James, Lucina, 33.
Gaines, Gen., 575.
Galbraith, John, 279; Rev. Mr., 257; Rev. Walter, 285.
Gale, Solomon, 20; Mrs., 36.
Galusha, Lieut. David, 232; Enos, 236; Jacob, 232; Jonas, 467; Capt. Jonas, 322.
Gangloff, L. Eugenie, 535.
Gardner, Abraham, 216; George, 216, 239; Hugh, 379; P., 396.
Garland, George, 274.
Garrison, Wm. Loyd, 252.
Gates, Gen., 5, 153, 173, 457, 579, 582; Elizabeth, 344; John, Josiah, Sally, 344.
George, Judge J., 295; Moses, Mrs., 427.
Gemmil, Robert, 376.
Gibbs, Rev. Caleb, 248.
Gibson, Caleb, 248; George, 283; Jas., 385; John, Robert, 380; William, 381, 384; Rev. Wm., 379, 380.
Gifford, Gideon, 32.
Gilbert, Rev. J. J., 249; Jesse, 414.
Gilchrist, Alex., 401; James, 274, 276, 279; John, 276, 299.
Gilfillan, John, 276, 278.
Gilkerson, Mrs. Goodwillie, Sen., 290; and family, 295; Rev. Thos., 285; Rev. Wm., 291.
Gilkey, Sample, 500.
Gilinth, David, 232.
Gill, Stephen, 89.
Gilman, 346; F. B., Elder, 483; Ezekiel, 426, 427; Samuel, 426.
Gleason, R. B., 247; Dr. Silas O., S. C., 246, 247; Solomon, 207.
Glen, Capt., 2.
Glines, Asa, 314.
Goch, Louis, 515.
Goddard, Rev. Samuel, 299.
Godding, A. W., 311; Rev. R., 305, 309, 310.
Gody, Dr. Ralph, 59.
Gousbriand, Louis de, Rt. Rev. 58, 551.
Goldsmith, Lieut., 80.
Goodale, Eld., 21; Thomas, 256; Dr. C., 120.
Goodell, Rev. C. L., 571; Rev. Dr., 402.
Goodhue, Chas. F. H. 346; Esq., 397; Rev. J. F. 95; Nathaniel, 346, 349, 351; Rev., 16, 257; Samuel, 346, 351.
Goodnow, Rev. A. W., 238.
Goodrich, Amos, 51; Bethuel, 54; Chauncy, 560, 640; J. E., 555; Levi, 332; Samuel, 61; Silas, 202; Stephen, 52; William, 51; Mrs. Wm., 52.
Goodwillie, Rev. Mr. and Mrs., 283 285; Rev. David, 284, 285, 286, 289, 271, 278, 279, 281, 309, 378, 384, 385, and family, 297; Rev. Thomas, 284, 296.
Goodwin, Rev. Edward, 311.
Gordon, Joseph, 53.
Gorselin, Clement, 454.
Gorsham Mary, 65.
Goss, Abel, 431; David, 396; Philip, 347; Samuel, 347, 600.
Gould, Abbott, 579; Nathaniel, 427, William, 204.
Govan, Rev., 299.
Graham, A. P., 246.
Grandy, Asa., Jr., 37; Edmund, 80, 81, 82; Elijah, 80, 82; George W., Josse, 82; Rachel, 83; Reuben, 36; Sanford, 37.
Granger, P. M., 345.
Grant, 494, 496, 504; Addison, 36; Capt., 51; Lieut., 264; Col. S. A., 40; Sophy, 394; Theophilus 331.
Graves, 239; Allen, Rev., 236; Benjamin, 216; Eliphaz, 344; Ebenezer 224; Jesse, 99, 235, 227; Joshua, 90; Josiah, 224; Lucy, 344; Orpha, 226.
Gray, Dominicus, 321.
Gray & Briggs, 189; Gray family, 124; George, 418; James, 418; Jonathan, 412, 415, 418; John, 122, 182, 284, 376, 380; Lyman, 189; Robert, 94; Samuel, 357; William, 380, 413.
Greble, Lieut., 476.
Green, Asa, 38; Col., 37; Rev. David, 244; Elder, 300; Elder H., 96; Jacob, 476; Rev. Jonathan, 327; John, 412, 413; Mary C., 532, 592, 535; Rev. Nathan, 25; Perley, 38.
Greenleaf, Daniel, 552; Elder, 346; Rev., 107.
Gregg, Col., 154, 155.
Gridley, 256; Rev. C. H., 21.
Griffin, David, 189.
Griffs, Benj., 240.
Grigg, Rev. John, 132.
Griswold, 79; Adonijah, 70; Benjamin, 19; David, 70; Dr., 108, 109; Griswold & Follett, 347; John, 69; John, Jr., 70; Nathan, 70; Roger, 457; Hon. Wm. A., 349; 472, 592.
Grout, Amasa 278, 347; Sophia, 282.
Grow, Rev., 311.
Grover & Harrington, 138.
Hackett, 423; Allen, 518; Charles, 313.
Hadley, George, Prof., 55; Nehemiah, 431.
Haely, Benj., 96.
Haff, E. B., 238.
Haights, Stephen, 67, 256.
Haines, 415; Rev. Samuel, 114.
Haldimand, Gen., 172, 462.
Hale, 346.
Hall, B. M., 58; Capt., Gen., 577; D. D., 557; D. P., 310; Daniel, 256, 274, 278, 340, 341, 395; Mrs. D., 275; Elijah, 245, 256, 266, 274, 276; Frederick, Prof., 55; Henry S., 258; Hon. Hiland, 6, 116, 187, 235, 245, 250, 271; Jacob, 256, 271, 274, 275, 279; Joseph S., 302; Lot, 592; Mary, 341; Sarah, 266, 275; Rev. Sylvester, 414; Rev. Thomas, 431.
Halsey, Maj. Silas, 107.
Hamilton, Col., 583; Robert, Jr., 17.
Hammond, Edwin, 60; Elnathan, 54; William, 60; William S., 119.
Hampton, Gen., 469, 502.
Hanchet, Capt., 223.
Hand, Dea., 101; Rev. R. C., 315.
Hapgood, J. J., 209.
Hard, Anson, Prof., 132; Hard family, 134; Phineas and Mrs. Phineas, 129; Rev., 548; Zadok, 131, 133.
Hardy, David, 20.
Harmon, Enos, 224; Reuben, 227; Reuben, Jr., 227.
Harrington, Antipas, 336; Lavina, 337; Theophilus, 467; Hon. Wm. C., 467, 472, 498, 500, 510, 511, 539, 590, 592, 616.
Harris, James, 237; Joseph, 349; Lobbeus, 57; Rev. L. T., 425; Timothy, 79.
Hart, C. A., 553; Emma, 52, 54; Jonathan, 493; Nathaniel, 216; W. H., 553; Zachariah, 493.
Hartshorne, Aaron, Ephraim, 314.
Hartt, Charles P., 511.
Hartwell, Joseph, 220; Philemon, 357.
Harvey, Æneas, 394, 397; Achiel, 163; Alex., Col., 268, 269, 313, 277, 280, 282, 284; Alex., Esq., 392; Archibald, 274, 278; C., 310; Claud, 284; Harvey, 284; Joel, 495; Norman, 226; Peter, 284; Silas, 276; Walter, 271.

284, 296; Wm., Col., 280; Wm., Rev., 163.
Harwood, Benj., Ebenezer, 143; Geo., 141; Peter, 143; Zach. 180.
Haseltine, Dr. L., 20.
Haskell, 231; Rev. Daniel, 522, 525, 537, 540, 542.
Hastings, Cynthia, 393; Timothy, 324.
Haswell, Anthony, 196, 252, 545; James, Rev., 157, 103; John C., 176; N. B., 506, 513, 532, 545, 568, 596; Russell, 180; Wm., Esq., 176.
Hatch, Capt., 327, 240.
Hatfield, Isaac G., Peter, 105.
Hathway, Simeon, 148.
Haven, J. B., 221; Rev. K., 96.
Haviland, Joseph, 139; Wm., 143.
Hawes, Eben, 96.
Hawk, Alva, 138.
Hawkins, Ansel M., 103; Josiah, 396; Stephen, 397; Dea.. 416.
Hawks, A., 249.
Hawley, Abel, 123, 125, 120; Andrew, Ann, 128; Capt., 123; Charlotte, 102; Curtis, 125; Eli, 133; Fanny, 132; Rev. F. J., D. D., 132; Gideon, James, 495; Josiah, 123; Hon. M., 200; Major, 189; Mrs., 123; Nathan, 204.
Hawse, Merritt, 238.
Hayes, Newton, 496, 427.
Haynes, J., Aaron, Rev., 238; J. L., 208; Miss, 22; Rev. Lemuel, 17, 224.
Hayward, 313.
Haywood, Eld., 70.
Hazeltine, Thos., 278.
Hazelton, Simeon, 199.
Hazen, Allen, Rev. Austin, 318; Gen., 323, 359, 266, 425; Rev. Henry, 328; Sophia, 318.
Heading, Harley, Marcus, 493.
Healey, Benj., 256.
Heath, John, 322; Peter, Wm. 314.
Hedding, Bishop, 483.
Hedge, Eleutherege, Rev. Levi, Samuel, 87.
Hemenway, Asa, 6; Daniel, Jacob, 94; Miss L. A., 95.
Henderson, Abigail, 378; A. M., 322; Caleb, 125, 493; Henry, 499; James, 144, 373, 376, 378; Jennett, 164; Levi, 499; Rev. M. C., 346.
Hendrick, Samuel H., 87.
Hendry, Truman, 238.
Henry, Abigail, 277; Paul M., 154, 253; Hon. Wm., 177.
Henshaw, Daniel, 110; Rt. Rev. John, P. K., 65; L., 56.
Herman, Asahel, 182.
Herrick, Capt., 151, 566; Col., 154, 156, 172, 232, 234, 582.
Herring, 4; Fitch, 504.
Hickok, Rev., 107; Rev. Henry P., 511, 514, 515, 517; Dr. L. P., 599; Samuel, 510, 514, 539, 548, 567, 592, 595, 599, 615; Dr. Wm. C., 507; Wm., 599.
Hicks, 239; Charles, 253; Rev. J. A., D. D., 649; Capt. Simeon, 240.
Higby, David, 18; Edward, 236.
Hill, 208, 239; Abner, 239; Capt., 138; David, 18; Isaac, 239, Howe, 347; Rev. L., 320, 345; Rev. 417, 447; Rev. Robert A., 279, 385; Zimry, 34.
Hilliard, Eld., 96.
Hilliaker, John, 454.
Hinkson, Elijah, 483.
Himes, Lyndon, 341; P. C., 20; Rev. Paul, 238.
Hinman, John, 50.
Hinsdill, 173.
Hitchcock, Buell, 66; Dr. C. H., Edward, 183; Esq., 204; Ethan A., 475, 531, 591; Hitchcock & Hager, 354; H. 361; Heman A., 591; Henry, Lucy, Caroline, Mary Ann, 591; Noah, 590; Phineas, 543; Hon. Samuel, 135, 472, 475, 493, 501, 502, 522, 590; Samuel, Jr., 591; Stephen, 534.
Hix, D., 221; Peleg, 310, 311, 343.
Hocquart, 3.
Hockley, Thomas, 510, 511.
Hodge, Rev. H. D., 547.
Hodges, Cyrus W., 20, 236; Lydia L., 536.
Hodson, Wm., 322.
Hoffman, 344; Henry, 399; Lieut., 584.
Hogins, J. H., 322.
Hogle, 216.
Holcomb, Abner, 81, 83; Benj., Lieut., 80, 82; Elisha, Joseph, Joshua, 82; Phineas, 81, 82; Samuel, 82, 103.
Holden, J. M., 87.
Holgate, Samuel, 518, 604.
Holley, Elizabeth, 187; Holley, Field & Kent, 189; Justus, 187; Hon. Samuel, 120.
Hollister, 543; Edward, Rev., 315; J. B., 253; J. C., 248, 249.
Hallman, Samuel, 231.
Holmes, John, 611.
Holt, Joseph, 197; Mary, 90; Reuben, 198.
Hooker, Rev., Dr. Edward, 74, 162.
Hooper, James, 321, 322; Mary, 321.
Hopkins, E. D., 361; Rt. Rev. Bishop John H., 548, 549; Josiah, Rev. 70, 71, 72; Capt. Michael, 199; Roswell, C., 337, 591, Rev. Theodore, 549; Wait, 152; Wm. 50.
Horsford, John, 215.
Hoskins, Daniel, 17.
Hosmer, Aaron, 266, 321, 375; J. D., 321.
Hotchkiss, Nehemiah, 504.
Hough, Benj., 126.
Houghton, 343; Alpheus, 347; Benjamin, 239; Dr. 56, 347; Elijah, 347; Jacob, 344; James, 238; Rev. John, 137; Justice, 6; Nahum, 94; Wm., 344.
House, Rev. G. H. 300.
Houston, Rev., 269.
Howard, Ansel, Ansel, Jr., 321; Asahel, 138; C. C., 439; Daniel, 313; Daniel D., 596; E., 313; Hannah, Vail, 595; J., Rev., 109; John, 496, 595; Leland, 246; Patience, 594; Robert, 594; Sion E., 532, 595, 596; Wm. 594.
Howe, Caleb, Jemima, 455; Rev., 57; Selah, 337; Susannah, 168.
Hovey, Jonathan, 327.
Hoyt, 239; Rev. Benj. R., 328; Eld., 21; Hon. Ezra, 72; Henry, Dr. Moses, 347.
Hubbard, A. O., Rev., 290, 328, 331; Col., 155; Ephraim, 342; Nathan, 344; Rev., 70; Silas, 238.
Hubbell, Aaron, 179; E. D., 143.
Hudson, Benoni, 217; Calvin, 358; Rev. Cyrus, 191; Kitridge, 358.
Hunt, 138; Arad, 55; Samuel, 105, 246.
Hunter & Co., 158.
Huntington, Dr. Daniel, 233, 235, 236; Joseph D., 53.
Hurd, 276, 277; Abijah, 125; Abner, 230; Col. 266, 281; Eleazer, Eld., 20; Horace, 230; James, 123; Jedediah, 239; Capt. Lewis, 230; Phineas, 123, 125; Zadok, 123.
Hurlbut, Caroline, 72; Capt. Daniel, 494, 495, 498, 511, 518; E., 208; Philo, 125; Samuel, Rev., 70, 72.
Hutchins, Capt., 179; Joseph, 276.
Huston, John, Rev., 284, 384; Robert, 53.
Hyde, Archibald W., Col., 472, 550; Dr. A. W., Col. B. N., 439; Rev. James S., 56; Joshua, 50, 51, 58.
Ide, Geo. B., D. D., 20.; Ichabod, Joseph, 346; Timothy, 343; Wm., 346.
Ingalls, 344; Hon. John P., 49, 418; Joseph H., 419.
Ingersoll, Ged. G., 540, 542, 544, 545.
Ingraham, C., Rev., 547; Dea. David, 20; Samuel, 26.
Isham, Ezra, 204; Jira, 499; Josh., 513.
Ives, Abraham, 464.
Izrah, Gen., 575.
Jackson, Abraham, 34, 78; Rev. S. C., 191; Rev. Wm., D. D., 90, 91, 95, 184, 346, 188; Jackson family, 191, 197.
Jacobs, Dr. Daniel, 420; Stephen, 158.
James, Daniel, 110; Dr. Edwin, 111, 113; James, 321; Jonathan, 321; Thomas, 110.
Jaqueni, 185.
Jenks, Cynthia, 342; Daniel, 332; Nathaniel, 343, 344; Nehemiah & Brown, 342.
Jenne, Capt. Eben Z., 44; Rev. Prince, 42.
Jenness, Hiram, 414; John, Richard, 412, 414.
Jennings, Isaac, 162.
Jennison, Levi, 96; Ruth Hemenway, 101; Hon. Silas H., 96, 101, 102, 119.
Jessup, Maj., Edward, 572.
Jewell, Jonas, 249.
Jewett, 217; Chas. W., 110; Dr. Calvin, 401, 410; Dr. Luther, 402, 410; Moses, 504, 545; Samuel, 110; S. W., 119; Thomas, 158.
Joe, Capt. and Molly, 266, 425, 427.
Johnson, Benj., 596; Col., 267, 274, 355, 361, 362, 428; Editor, 107; Edwin, 20; Gov., 519, and wife, 596, 615; Haswell, 342; H. C., 477; Hop, 52; John, 342, 482; Joseph, 70; Moses, 17; Naomi, 342; Obed, 357; Roswell, 342; Capt. Timothy, 496; Thomas, 81; Capt. Thomas, 265; Wm., 280; Wm. G., 238; Wm. S., 164.
Johns, Benj., 200; Jehial, 563, 568.
Jones, Abner, 342; Asa S., 102; Dr. Abner, 344; Chloe, 395; Rev. David A., 315; Godfrey, 304, 305; Israel, 467; Jabez, 482; Rachel, T., 330; Rev., 327; Rollin, 117; Jones & Richardson, 141; Sally, 305.
Joslin, Josiah, 357.
Joys, Majory, 467.
Judd, Eben, 53.
Judson, 495.
Justin, Gershom, Sen., 116.
Kane, Ansel, 141.
Kasson, John, A., 472.
Keach, Israel, 236.
Kearney, Capt., 588.
Keep, Eunice, 50; Olive, 255; Samuel, 90.
Keith, George, 137.
Kelley, Rev. Beriah, 254.
Kellogg, Benj., 4, 6; Comfort, 21; Daniel, 94; David, 103; Elias, 94; Elijah, 94, 97; Hannah, 103; Eld. Horace, 103; Joseph, 110; Justus, 187; Orin, 324.
Kelsey, Elisabeth, 91; Harvey, 314; Hiram, 314.
Kempe, 233; Gen., 148, 151; J. T., 146.
Kenaston, Isaac, 412.
Kenedy, B. J., Rev., 485; Cyrus 42; John, 482, 483, 484; Robert, 482, 483; S. B. 483.
Kennan, Jairus, 522.
Kent, Brainard, Rev., 191; Cephas, 182, 184, 185, 160, 236, 492; Chester, 189; Daniel, Rev., 187, 190, 191; Henry B., 253; John, 120, 185, 194; Luther M., 49; U. S., 185.
Kershaw, Thomas, 251.
Keyes, Danforth, 323; Eleazer, 567; Elnathan, 539, 545, 604, 499, 493, 494, 498, 501, 511; Stephen, 472 504; Col. Stephen, 202.
Kidder, Francis, 246.
Kilbourn, Eld., 427.
Kilburn, Rev. David, 328.
Killam, Aaron, 208.
Kimball, 343, 283; Benjamin, 340; James L., Rev., 340; Jude, 344, 349, 353; Lucius, 353; Mary, 349.
Kimble, Eld., 21.
King, Daniel, 39; Capt. Gideon, 493,

494, 495, 496, 504, 511, 517, 590; Elijah, 266, 276, 282; Hannah, 39; Maj. Josiah, 552; Lyman, 518; Reuben, 39.
Kingsbury. Arnold, 20.
Kinney, 560, 561, 570.
Kingsbury, Stephen, 412.
Knapp, James, 346.
Knickerbocker, John, 490, 493, 495.
Knight, Nathaniel, 321; Samuel, 466.
Knowlton, Luke, 313.
Lacy, Isaac, 182.
Labaree, Benj., D. D., 55; John S., 94.
Ladd, Daniel, 311; John, 404.
Laird, John, 38.
Lamb, Amos, 40; Daniel, Rev., 18; Chester, Eunice, 40; George, 237; Harvey, 42; James, 25; Jonathan, Rev., 42; Joseph, William, 40.
Lamson, Judson, 518.
Lane, Elisha, 495; Gilbert C., 25, 111; Hannah, 103; Samuel C., 490, 493, 494, 495; Samuel, Jr., 495.
Lang, Peter, 274.
Langmaid, Samuel, Solomon, 314.
Lang, Patrick, 376.
Laplace, Capt., 565.
Larabee, Wm., 94, 456, 457, 441, 493, 495, 496, 498.
Lathrop 322; S. P., 110.
Laughlin, Hugh, 381.
Lavett, John, 167.
Law, Stephen, 571.
Lawrence, 2; Asa, 91.
Layfayette, Gen., 612, 616.
Leach, Jonathan, Mrs. J., 337.
Leavenworth, Capt., 302; Jenne, 313, 315; Major, 576; N., 472.
Leavitt, Aseph, 228; Gideon, 432; Rev. H. F., 107.
Ledyard, Gideon, 432.
Lee, Andrews F., 253; Chauncy, 240; Ira, 238; Thirza, 535; Thomas, 49.
Leland, 327; Rev., 238; Simeon, 198.
Lenox, Amos, 94.
Leonard, David, 73; George, 94; Ebenezer, 128, 130; Nathan, 232.
Lervey, Peter, 264, 272.
Levasque, Augustus, 482, 484.
Levings, Noah, 58; Rev. Noah, 546.
Lewis, Asa, 485; Jonathan, 337; Josiah, 40; Norman & Son, 86.
Liesler, Gov., 2.
Lincoln, Dr. Benjamin, 524; Gen., 129.
Linsley, Jacob, 114; Hon. Joel, 27; Rev. Joel H., D. D., 29.
Lippingwell, Reuben, 305.
Little, Moses, 313, 388.
Littlefield, Elijah, 204.
Locke, A., 246.
Locklin, Levi, 344.
Lockwood, Joseph, 201, 240.
Logan, 556.
Long, Joseph, 212; Samuel, 314.
Loomis, C., 499; Daniel, 139; Edward, 495; Geo. C., 86; Henry, 511; Horace, 51, 493, 494, 539, 543, 545; Mrs. Horace, 86; Luther, 495, 496, 506, 543, 595; Phineas, 496, 543; Warren, 498.
Lord, John, 300; Joseph, 304; Dr. Joseph, 410, 390, 392, 395, 397, 400, 404; Col. N. G., 440.
Louis, Capt., 454.
Loveland, Jona., 32.
Lovell, Rev., Alex., 107.
Low, Henry, 321.
Lowd, Capt., Allen, 107.
Lowry, Heman, 468, 472, 497, 601.
Lydius, John, 51; Col., 120.
Lyman, Anna, 537; Hon. A. P., 249; Clarisa,, Ebenezer, 537; Gad, 111; Jesse, 66; Phineas, 218, 545.
Lynch, Ann C., 166; Rev. Thomas, 551.
Lyndon, Josias, 395.
Lynn, Alexander, 276; Rev. John, 380.
Lyon, Rev. Asa, 604; Dan., 511; Hon. Lucius, 598; Matthew, 457; Col. Matthew, 129, 130, 134, 178, 500, 573; Seth and wife, 209.
Lyscomb, C., 361.
Lund, Silas, 321.
Mack, Elisha, Rachel, 326.
Macomb, Gen., 502.
Madril, Joseph and Theresa, 455.
Magoon, Joseph, 313.
Mainard, Eld. F. B., 433.
Mallet, Stephen, 517.
Mallory, 216; David, 129; Zacheus, 113.
Malony, Rev. R., 408.
Maltby, Rev. Wm. J., 194.
Manly, Edmund F. D., George, 189. Rev. Ira, 191; John, 182, 198; John, Jr., Dea. John, 184; Lyman, Rev., 91; Martin, 189; Mary, 102.
Mann, Ebenezer, 106; H. E., 253; Rev., 50.
Manning, Rev. J. M., D. D., 339.
Manser, George B., 532.
Markham, Mrs., 9.
Marsh, Abram, 233; Asa, 467; Hon. Charles, 332, 339, 352; Daniel, 225; Hon. George P., 339, 399, 472, 502, 560; Rev. James, 523, 525; Jacob, 125; Jonas., 256; J. L., 96; Leonard, 250; Dr. Leonard, 524; Spencer, Rev., 538; William, 184; Col. Wm., 201.
Marshall, 116; Rev. L., 546.
Martindale, Col. Stephen, 188, 191.
Martingale, Rev., 209.
Marvin, 496; Charles P., 541.
Mason, Rev. C., 431; Roswell, 35.
Matthewson, S. S., 346.
Mattocks, Dr., 350; Hon. John, 300, 367, 430; Samuel, 397; Hon. Samuel, 52; Samuel B., 347, 350.
Mattison, 232; David, 131; Rev. Isaiah, 235, 236; Martin, 236; Peter, 232; Rev., 238; Thomas, 232, 235.
Maurepas, Frederick, 1, 3.
Mayo, Henry, 532; Nathaniel, 506.
McArthur, Rev. James, 334.
McCarty, Richard, 454.
McComber, Jonathan, 324.
McCracken, 178.
McCulloch, John, 279.
McDaniel, Rev. J., 546.
McDonald, 80; McDonald & Friedly, 189.
McDonough, Com., 106, 107, 256, 461, 498, 591.
McErven, Rev., 18.
McFarlane, Robt., 283.
McFaren, John, 283.
McGaffey, Andrew, 341; David, John, 341; William, 347; Wm. W., 343; W. H., 343.
McIntosh, Donald, 79, 107.
McIntyre, Hiram, 141.
McKeach, Thos., 376.
McKee, Eleazer, Joseph, 110.
McKesson, John, 126.
McKisson, John, 313.
McKonkey, 83.
McKoy, 350.
McLane, 321; Wm., 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 296.
McLaren, John, 274, 278.
McLaughlin, Archey, 276, 359; Henry, 19.
McLellan, Isaac, 416.
McNamara, 237.
McPhee, Wm., 283.
McQuarde, Rev. James, 58.
Meacham, Rev. James, 191
Mead, Amos, 237; Capt., 204; Chas. M., 55; Enoch, 70; Israel, Nathan, 237; Rufus, 53; Stephen, Timothy, 200.
Meader, Samuel, 49.
Mears, Rev. R. B., 483.
Meech, Ezra, 518; Hon. Ezra, 456, 467, 530.
Meigs, Dr., 346.
Melvin, Moses, 396.
Menona, Rev. Paul, 95.
Merriam, J., 300.
Merrill David, Rev., 360, 361, 366; Dora L., 533; George A., 426; Jesse, 365; Orasmus C., 166; Hon. Samuel, 360; Rev. Thomas A., 56.
Merrit, David, 32; John, 272.
Messenger, Margaret, 211, 454.
Miles, Archelaus, J., 412; Judge, 398.
Millard, S. O., 238.
Miller, 478; Rev. R. D., 209; Solomon, 472.
Milligan, Rev. A. M., 380; Rev. Jas., 209, 384, 385; J. K., 380; Rev. S. T., 380.
Millington, David, 235.
Mills, David, 235; Ephraim, Samuel, Thomas, 60, 498, 552.
Milton & Trull, 350.
Miner, Jas., 518; Justice, 18; Rev. Lampson, 25; Reuben, 25, 380, 393.
Mitchell, Dr., 412; George, 123; Jas., 513; Rev. Joseph, 546; Rev., 87, 90, 96, 311; Thomas, 483.
Mix, Rev. Eldridge, 548.
Molt, Theodore F., Prof., 533; T. F., 536.
Monroe, 148, 149; John, 124; Rev., 107.
Montague, Samuel, 143, 144.
Montcalm, 3.
Monte, 495.
Montgomery, Gen., 152, 456; Giles, 427; John, 482.
Monzuco, 610.
Moody, Dr. Robert, 498.
Moore, A. B., 228; Gov., 79, 107; Hon. Grove, 324; James, 93; Sir Henry, 147, 167; Luther, 545; Paul, 94, 97; S. C. 536; Samuel, 88; Seth, 218; Wm. W., 20.
More, Samuel, 375.
Morgan, Dr. B. F., 218; Dr. Daniel, 95; Elder, 21; M. C., 130; Stephen, 231; William, 431; Solomon, 227.
Morrell, Abraham, 313, 340, 432; Abigail, Abner, 313; Isaac, 313; Jeremiah, 313; Joseph, 314, 315; Paul, Sargent, 313.
Morris, Dr. Amasi, 333; Rev. O. S., 328.
Morse, Alpheus, 188; Ebenezer, 182, 188, 192; Edmund, 322; Heman, 182, 184; Horace, 248; James, 358; Moody, 362; Noah, 182, 184; Sally, 322; Simeon, 248, 249; Thos., 362.
Morrison, Betsy, Bradbury, Charles, 322; Rev. Francis, 323; Joseph, 322.
Mott, Samuel J., 467, 503.
Moulton, Eld., 346.
Mudgett, 503.
Munger, Jona., 238.
Munn, Phineas, 212.
Munroe, Daniel, 222; John, 233.
Munsill, Gurdon, 19; Wm., 494, 518.
Munson, John, 105; Benj., 2; Jared, 100; Wm., 201.
Murdock, Rev. James, 491, 522.
Murphy, 228.
Murry, Eber, 73.
Nash, Capt., 115.
Narm, Capt. Jacobus de, 2.
Needham, Hon. Horace, 29; Horatio, Dr. Joseph, 116.
Neilson, James, 376, 381; John, Esq., 382; Wm., 376, 377, 378; Dr. Wm., 380, 381.
Newell, C., 310; Dr., 346, 350; Capt. Daniel, 307; Henry, 350; Isaac, Rev., 307; J. D., Rev., 311; Mrs., 310; Russell, 504; Dr. Selim, 305; Ursula, 358.
Newman, Henry, 490.
Newton, Daniel, 94; Daniel C., 95; Capt. Joel, 91; John, 65, 86; Marshall, 94, 100.
Nichols, Caleb, Eld., 218, 254; Col., 155; James, 78, 79; Rev. James, 131; Josiah, 390, 392.
Nightingale, Joseph, 390.
Niles, 396; George, 234; Nath'l, 500.
Nixon, Benj., 95.
Noble, 216; Eli, 218, 546.

Digitized by Google

Norris, David, 324; Mark, 323, 324, 328; Nathaniel, 324; Rev. 547.
Norton Joseph, 138; O. F., 138.
North, Abijah, 94.
Nott, Rev. Asahel, 246.
Noyce, Carolus, 513; H. P., 249; H. S., 511; Morillo, 513; Vernon, 511.
Oavitt, Capt., 218.
O'Byrne, Rev., 557.
O'Calligahn, Rev. J., 58, 163, 550.
Occum, Rev., 224.
Odell, Col., 597; Wm. J., 511.
Ogden, Capt., 265.
Olin, Hon. Gideon, 45, 233, 234; Hon. Henry, 35, 45, 46; John, 35, 232; John H., 237; Justus, 45; Sarah, 256; Stephen, D., LL. D., 46, 48.
Oliver, Robert, 291.
Olmstead, Rev. F. W., 18.
Olney, J. H., 342.
Omstead, David; H. S. J., 37; Jabez, 35, 36.
Orcutt, Samuel, 240, 248, 423.
O'Reilley, Rev. James, 402.
Ormsbee, John, 96.
Ormsby, Daniel, 223; Gideon, 200, 201, 202; Capt. Gideon, 120, 200; Jonathan, 199, 500; Lieut., 202.
Orr, James, 270, 289; John, Robert, 376, 382.
Orvis, Loren, 49.
Osborn, John C., 253.
Otis, Joshua, 314.
Outman, Daniel, George, 123.
Owen, Daniel, 329; James, 225.
Packard, Messrs., 43.
Packer, Eleazer, 356, 358.
Paddock, Hon. Eph., 397, 403, 410; Hiram, 407; Prince, 187.
Page, 215; Daniel, Maj., 53; Enoch, 322; George, 182; Col. Jacob, 362; John O., 376; Joseph, 318; Lemuel, 506, 513; Peter and family, 323, 324; Rev. Robert, 327, 328.
Paine, Hon. Elijah, 466, 521; Mrs. Martha O., 535.
Painter, Gamaliel, 6, 50, 51, 52, 55, 58, 256, 465.
Palmer, Amos, 482, 484; Charles, 356; John E., 306; Rev., 311; Stephen, Susannah, 317; Hon. W. A., 319, 320, 397, 386.
Pangborn, 82, 483; Joseph, 79, 82.
Panton, Lord, 78; Samuel, 344.
Park, Archibald, 381; John, 230; T. W., 249, 250, 442; Wm., 230, 248, 249.
Parker, Amos, 357, 238; Caleb, 343; Chloe, 44; Daniel, 55; Hannah, 429; Rev. H. L., 548; James, 327; Jeremiah, 44; Dr. J. M. 42; Nathan, 344; Robert, 198; Warren, 346; Prof. Wm., 55; Zebediah, 313.
Parks, Jonathan, 342.
Parmalee, Aaron, 110; Anson H. 20.
Parsons, Dr. Medad, 164; Sylvanus, 355.
Patchen, Lyman, 248.
Patrick, Joseph. 29.
Patterson, J. H., 361; Judge, 177; Wm., 79.
Paul, George H., 553.
Payne, 18.
Payson, Seth, D. D., 327; Samuel, 240.
Peabody, Rev. O. W., 545.
Peacham, college graduates, 367.
Peak, Royal W., 20.
Pearl, 347; Isaac, 418; Col. Stephen. 490, 496, 497, 500, 501, 502, 511, 516, 539; Timothy, 497.
Pearson, Enos, 103; Joseph, 276; Ora, 366; Thomas Scott, 366, 370.
Pease, Rev. Calvin, D. D., 520, 523, 525; Josiah, 467.
Peaslee, Zacheus, 499, 504.
Peck, Asahel, 472, 553; Eben, Eleazer, 344; Gaines, 343; George, 230; Isaac, Jeremiah, 78; John, 511; Dr. John, 545; Lauren, 138; P., 347; Rev. Phineas, 57, 315, 345; Rev., 338; Maj. Thomas, 123, 397; Wm. H., 347.
Pell, Wm. F., 504.
Penniman, Dr. Jabez, 467, 468, 472, 544; Luther L., 477.
Perigo, David, 493.
Perkins, Jesse, Nathaniel, 426, 427, 428; Col. Thomas H., 585; Rev. Wm., 132, 350.
Perrin, Eph., 434, 435.
Perry, Rev. David, 315; Dr. Eli, 380; John G., 256; Philip, 125; Valentine, 32.
Peters, Rev. Absalom, 162; George P., 591.
Peterson, Enos, 518; George, 515.
Petithomme, Rev., 551.
Pettibone, John, 253; Hon. John, 201; Hon. J. S., 224; Samuel, 201.
Pettingill, Rev. E., 327.
Petty, Aaron, 55; Prof. M., 523, 524.
Pfister, Frances, Col., 154, 157, 158, 186,
Phelps, Benj., 36, 39; Hon. Elnathan, 74; E. J., Esq., 549; Frederick, 307; J. W., 438, 476; Capt. Matthew, 72, 176, 252; Rebekah, 36; Samuel S., 59, 60.
Philbrook, David and wife, 325.
Philips, Otis, 238; Paul D., 316.
Pier, Calvin, 87; Moses, 108.
Pierce, A. C., 253; Eli, Hezekiah, 249; Pierce, Pikes & Powers, 347; Thomas, 401; Warren, 103; Zadock, 248.
Pierpont, Hon. John, 61, 107.
Piersons, Moses, Thomas, 456.
Pike, David, 20, 357.
Pikes, Daniel and Luther, 434.
Pineo, Daniel, 482; Capt. John, 484; Pinkham, Eld., 20.
Piney, O. E., 511.
Piper, Amasa, 85.
Place, Stephen, 344.
Platt, Judge, 604; Col. L. B., 441.
Plumer, 16.
Plumb, Joseph, 110.
Plympton, Rev. Oliver, 209.
Poland, Hon. L. P., 436.
Pollard, Abiather, 37.
Pomeroy, Dr. John, 539, 543; J. N., 495, 506, 520, 522, 524, 563; Rev. Rufus, 90.
Pond, Col. Josiah, 99, 100.
Poorneuf, Daniel, Marianne, 355.
Pope, Samuel M., 511.
Pople, L. L., 324.
Porter, Arthur, 522; Peter, 611, Zerah, 87.
Post, Dr. Asa, 256; Dr., 81; Rev. Reuben, D. D., 25, 28, 228.
Potter, Aaron, 318; Amos, 215; Daniel L., 54; Jane, Ann, 235; John, 215.
Pottier, 456.
Potwin, Jonathan, 532.
Powell, Felix, 182, 201, 491; Isaiah, 481, 483; John 35; Martin, 199, 200, 225; Rev. M. W., 183; Peter, 268, 269; Truman, 498.
Powers, Jonathan, 378; Merritt W., 49, 103; Rev. 249, 360; Rev. Peter, 268, 269, 284, 360, 384.
Pratt, E. S., 139; Joel, 204; Rev. P. S., 191; Samuel, 143; Stephen, 138, 143.
Prentiss, Dr. Jonathan, 606; Judge, 352.
Prescott, 346.
Preston, John, 482; Rev. John, Mrs. John, 325; Rev. Nathaniel, 162; Willard, 523, 525, 526.
Prevost, Gen. 100.
Prichard, Capt., 362.
Price, Capt. John, 574.
Prince, Abijah, Drucilla, 240.
Prindle, 19; Cyrus, Rev., 91, 162.
Pringle, Alex., 384; Capt., 5, 80; Rev. Francis, 384; Wm., 384; Rev. Wm., 294.
Purdy, E. C., 255; Rev. H., 47; Purdy & Pettibone, 194.
Putnam, 253; Geo., Rev., 328; Israel, 3, 278, 317; Rev. J. H., 107; Dr. Samuel, 305; Roswell, 361.
Quevillon, Rev. Joseph, 551
Quin, Rev. James, 551.
Quimby, Eld. Daniel, 324, 346, 353; Elder Joseph, 346, 424; George W., 346.
Raleigh, Edmund, Mary, 595.
Randall, John, 96, 346; Job, 346; S. G., 111; Walter, 230.
Ranney, Dr., 141; Esq., 38; Sullivan, 355; Rev. T. E., 209.
Ransom, Thomas, 434.
Rathbone, Rev. David, 116.
Rawson, Josiah, 346; Rev. Nathaniel, 327; Dr. Simeon, 346.
Ray, Rev. B. F., 209, 311.
Raymond, Benj., 16; Rock, 237; Elisha, Wm., 238.
Rand, Daniel, 226; Hon. David, 376, 500, 503, 506, 560, 561; John, 219.
Redding, David, 159, 165, 168, 234, 470; Dow, 159, 160.
Redfield, Judge, 360, 560; Rev. J. W., 547.
Reed, Benj., Benj. Jr., 248; Caroline H., 163; Rev. Hollis, and wife, 163; Huldah, 248; Samuel, 495.
Reid, Col., 11, 32, 69, 79.
Remington, 79.
Reniff, Joel, 342.
Renfrew, James, Jonathan, 322.
Reynolds, Eph., 182; John, 82, 94; Nathaniel, 94; Rev., 223, 225; Wm., 94.
Rhodes, Otis, 322.
Rial, 574.
Rice, 346; Artemas, 42; Mark, 545; Col. Nathan, 544, 601; Uriah, 42.
Rich, Hon. Chas., 45, 46, 96, 100; Nathaniel, 94; Solomon, 252; Thomas, 94; Lieut. Thomas, 96, 100.
Richardson, Bradbury M., 424, Gen. Israel, 447; John C., 255; Lois, 46.
Richards, Mrs., 16, 97.
Ricker, Joseph, 322.
Richmond, John, 138.
Rickwell, S. B., 119.
Riddle, Thos., 138.
Rider, 274, 276; Wm., 274.
Riley, Halsey, 346, 347.
Riverdan, Rev. Thomas, 551.
Ripley, Stephen, 592.
Rising, Hon. Josiah, 223.
Roberts, Christopher, 199, 200; Daniel, 253; Durand, 107; Eli, 16, 70, 107; Rev. E. P., 191; Gen. Joel, 395, 397, 401, 402, 410; Major, 217.
Robbins, A. B., Rev., 95; Rev. Amzi, 72; Prof. D. C., 55; M. Donald, 40; Moses, 43; P., 245; Thirza, 45; Zenas, 40.
Robinson, 144, 145, 146, 147; Aaron, 168; Rev. Amzi, 73; Benjamin, 164; Dr. Benj., 164, 180; Capt., 151, 158, 187; Col., 157; Daniel, 140; David, 151; George, 469, 498, 500, 513, 519, 604; David, 159, 161; Capt. and Gen. David and sons (Daniel, Stephen, Heman), 151, 158, 160, 169, 171; David, Jr., 166; Dr., 233; E., 165; Esq., 141; F. B., Eld., 433; James, 455, Jonathan, 165, 342; Judge Jonathan and family (Jonathan E., Henry, Isaac T., and Mary), 169; Hon. Jona. E., 166, 169, Hon. John S., 165, 170; Leonard, 143; Gov. Moses, and fam., (Moses, Aaron, Sam., Nathan, Elijah, Fay), 143, 148, 152, 162, 165, 168, 171, 174, 200, 425, 539; Moses, Col., 153; Jr., 160, 161, Moses of Rupert, 220, 244; Nathan, 165, 265; Rev. Otis, 322; P., 141; Robinson & Parsons, 139, 140; P. L., 140, 141; Rev., 238; Samuel, 170, 238; Capt. Samuel, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 166, 167, 222, 238; Col. Samuel, and family, 168, 180, 215; Gen. Samuel, 167, 223, 224; Samuel, Jr., 143; Samuel R., 168; Silas, 159; Rev. Septimus, 191; Stephen, 149; Wm., 170.
Roby, D. W., 198.

Rogers, Daniel, 148; Esq., 34; James, 258; James, 139? Major, 263, 272; Timothy, 32, 34; Robert, 3; Maj. Robert, 219.
Rolfe, Jacob, 518.
Rollins, Rev. Edward B., 36.
Rood, Thomas, 486.
Root, 221; Bemjah, 346; Rev. Isaac, 220.
Rorapaugh, Betsy, 19.
Rose, Benj., 244; Capt. Daniel, 200; Joseph, Nathaniel, 247; Samuel, 102, 201, 201.
Ross, Daniel, 238: Elijah, 344; Joel, 343; Natalie, 217.
Rossen, Rev., 209.
Rost, 134, 230.
Rowe, O. L., 97.
Rowell, John, 434.
Rowley, Nathan, Thomas, and sons, 98.
Royce, Stephen, 34.
Rundlet, Theophilus, 427.
Russell, David, 469, 472, 501, 502, 512, 529, 544; Dr. J. P., 544; Stephen, 502.
Rust, 301.
Safford, Elisha, 434, 435; Eli, Gideon, 429; Mrs. Gideon, 434.
Safford, Rev. Geo. B., 528; Rev. Hiram, 547; Jacob, 142, 156; Dea. Joseph, 137, 140, 142, 144, 168; Joseph, Jr., 168; Lieut., 137, 143, 144, 152; Samuel, 152; Lieut. Col., 143, 154, 156, 170; Gen. Samuel, 147, 148, 166; Solomon, 157; Safford & Pope, 152.
Sage, Lieut. Moses, 138, 139, 140.
Salisbury, Bishop of, 5.
Sampson, Ashley, 24, 26, 28; Dea. Daniel, 27; Hollis, 506; Rev. Robert Samuel, 284.
Sanborn, A., 226; Dea. Daniel, 27; Dr., 542; Isaac W., 246; Israel and wife, 234, 253, 252.
Sanborn, Free Daniel C., 103, 107, 521, 525, 532, 550.
Sanford, Elisha, 256; Ira, 110; J. W., 103, 108; M., 221; Thomas, 93, 100; Hubert, 109; Wm., 224; Wm. R., 119.
Sargent, Hon. Leonard, 201, 205.
Sawtelle, Rev., 504.
Sawtelle, J., 530.
Sawyer, Samuel, 508.
Sawin, Eld. A. A., 20.
Sawyer, Adam, 80; F., 91; Ebenezer, 405; Col. Ephraim, 162; Eld. Ephraim, 46, 56, 467; Esq., 410; Fanny, 59; Frederick A., 60; Isaac, 59; Dea. Isaac, 57; Dea. Isaac E., 467; H. H., 47, 225, 241; H. L., 241; Hannah, 60; Isaac, Rev., 56, 57; James, 405, 491; Col. James, 467; James L., 467; Jesse, 125; John, 126; Josiah W., Rev., 117; J. W., 226; Nancy, 507; Plummer, 314; Eld. Simeon, 81; Col. Thomas, 91.
Saxe, Capt. Jehiel, 19; John G., 18, 20, 21.
Saxton, Chauncey, 27; Col. Frederick, 161, 162, 166, 167; S. A., 107; Rev. Sylvester, 31.
Scott, Capt. E. R., 411.
Scott, Gen. M., 6.
Seaver, Eld., 107; John, Stephen, Wm., 108; Rev. Wm., 2, 20, 21.
Sedgwick, 251.
Sedgwick, Arthur, 104, 105.
Sedgwick, Dominick, 54.
Seeley, Hugh, 376.
Sewall, Hon. L., 202, 203.
Sewall, Hon. Stephen, 54, 56; John, Martin A., 54; Lieut., 382; Rev. Wm., 2.
Seymour, Capt. Abraham, 2.
Shaler, 379.
Adam, 24; Isaac, Alanson, 205; Amos, 19; Lieut. B., 147; Dr., 547; Ebenezer, 160, 201; Mr. and Mrs. Elisha, 24; Col. Martin, 114, 141, 167, 177, 178; Matthew, 248; Moses, 148; Oliver, 145, 223; Samuel, 144; Rev. Samuel G., 223; Winthrop, 374, 508; Zerah, 248.
Shattuck, Samuel, 246.
Shaw, Alanson, 346; Bela, 346, 347; Bela, Jr., 340; George B., 346, 519; Wm. G., 349.
Shay, 221.
Shearer, Wm., 276.
Shearman, James, 344.
Shedd, Dr., Josiah, 367; Tryphonia, 29; Rev. W. G., 23.
Sheffield, 503.
Shenstone, Lord, 167.
Sheldon, Calvin, 225; Hon. David, 223, 224, 225; Dr. Henry, 234; Job, 344, 353; Dr. Josiah, 361; Lieut., 479; Rev. Luther, 225; Mrs. Rhoda, Seth, 226.
Shibley, Rev. James S., 229.
Sherman, Alice, Anna, Benjamin, 466; Capt. 107; David, 467; Elisha, 125; Enoch, 230; Mrs. Catherine, 226; Phillip, Preserved, 495.
Shevar, Chas., 252.
Sherwin, Rev. Jacob, 240.
Shurtwood, Justus, 70, 71, 125.
Shepherd, Abel O., 83; Elder, 96; Elisha, 434; Samuel, 83; Wm., 81, 82; Wm., Jr., 83.
Shipley, Rev. Samuel H., 421.
Shively, Abel, 402.
Shattuck, Lieut., 581.
Shumway, Capt. John, 182, 187, 188.
Sias, Archibald, 216; Rev. A., 361; Benjamin, 260; Capt. Charles and family, 213; Rev. Solomon, 316; Hon. S., 320.
Sill, Rev. Elijah, 190, 191.
Simmonds, 540; Col., 155.
Simmons, Col. Benjamin, 49: John, 54.
Simonds, Asa, Dea. David, 211: Edward, 445.
Sinclair, James, 324, 334: Miss L., 326.
Sisson, 101.
Skeels, 90; John, 254, 539: Phebe, 90; Ruth, 254; Eld. Samuel, 95, 96.
Skene, Philip, 162.
Skinner, J. F., 209: Hon. Richard, 205, 206, 215, 225; Thompson, Jr., 109.
Slade, 220; Wm., Esq., 26: Hon. Wm., 56, 57, 58, 59, 261.
Slocum, Ebenezer, 356.
Smalley, John, 251; Lauren, 357.
Small, Samuel, 467.
Smith, Dea. James, 253.
Small, James, 291.
Smalley, Azuba, 50; Benjamin, 50, 51, 52; Hon. David A., 472; E. M., 501; Col. H. A., 440; Zerah, 50.
Smead, Benj., 207.
Smith, 16, 97: Abiah, 17: Abraham, 344, 345; A. C., Rev., 529; Amos, 91; Bartholomew, 278; Capt., 51; Chas., 29; Cyrus, 474; Daniel, 67, 208; Capt. Daniel, 201; Darius, 40, 41; Dr., of Exeter, 95; E., 46; Dea. E., 94; Edward, 427; Eli, 95, 241; Elias Ingraham, 79; Elrick, 462; Fanny, 63; Frederick, 87, 514; Gates, 104; Hannah, 76; Ira, 67, 87; Isaac, 204; Israel, 175, 224; James, 376; J. R., 411; Job, D. D., 181; John, 126, 152, 153; Capt. John, 97; Josias, 101; Rev., 102; Justin A., 194; J. N. 10; Rev. Levi, 360; Lieut., 582; M., 17; Marshall, 9, 17; Martin, 254; Nathan, 6, 409, 410; Major Nathan, 24; Nehemiah, 104; Noah, 149, 150, 409, 530; Hon. Noah, 391; Rev. N. W., 309; Oliver, 230; Polly, Gen. Rev., 546; Rev. [illegible], Lemuel, 164, 530; Rhoda, 472; Sally, 94; Salome, 82; Samuel, 17, 227; Elder Samuel C., 25; Sidney, 530; Stephen, 35, 101, 130; Simeon, 342; Thomas, 214, 276, 280; Warren, 454; Col. W. F., 452; Worthington, D. D., 120.
Solace, Hon. Calvin, 18, 19, 21.
Somers, Bartholomew, 274; Chad, Hugh, 276; Roberts, 276; Rev. Wm. C., 284.
Soper, Wm. J., 189.
Southworth, Constant, 111; Daniel, Gurdon, 457; Wm. S., 187.
Sovereign, Rev. E., 25.
Spafford, 466, Jonathan, 466.
Spalding, Asa, E. S., 42; Burge, 92; Henry, 89; Hezekiah, 4, 11, 89; Isaac, 89, 92; Joseph, 12, 89; Rev. Joshua, 141; Nathan, 89; Orlando, 92; Orlando, 252; Phineas, Jr., 89; Mrs. Philena, 92; Philip, 92; Squire, 253; Timothy, 90; Timothy, Jr., 82; Truman, 166, 172, 204.
Spaulding, Dr. Phineas, 347; Dr., 349.
Sparks, Rev. Jared, 132.
Spear, Amos C., 495; Dearing, 495, Julia Hannah Howard, 499.
Spencer, Chas., 282; Cyntha, 306; Ichabod S., D. D., 225; Rev. I. T., 225, 227; Nathaniel, 125; Robert, 306; Seth, 302; Willard, 306, 310.
Spicer, Rev. T., 96.
Spooner, James, 347, Paul, 225.
Sprague, Ezra, Rev., 246; Isaac, 247; Jonathan, John, 247; Jonas, 340, 341; Leonard, 246; Lorenzo, 246; Wyman, 247.
Stackhouse, 496.
Stacy, H. B., 472, 554.
Stafford, Millard, 220.
Stanley, L., 110.
Stamford, Daniel, 467, 514; Julietta, 170.
Stanley, Peter, 455.
Stanford, Col., G. F., 437, 497, 498.
Stanton, David, 519; John A. 314; Joshua, 492.
Staples, Capt., 419.
Stark, Rev. D., 235; Gen. John, 134, 145, 156, 157, 172, 202, 216, 283, 284, 500.
Starr, Hon. Henry, 42.
Stearns, Elder Amos, 20; Ebenezer, 65, 66; Rev. Nathaniel C., 528; Rev. Wm. T., 81.
St. Clair, Gen., 154.
Stebbins, Ebenezer, 24.
Steele, Col., 486; Rev. J., 191.
Sterling, Mrs., 30.
Stevens, Abraham, 402; Miss A., 227; Enos, 277, 279, 280, 283, 292, 295, 296, 435; Daniel W., 427; Daniel of Hardwick, 225, 230; George, 252; Henry, 123, 227, 296, and family, 252, 408, 500; Isaac, 425; Rev. James, 108; Rev. Joseph H., 140; John, 430; Joshua, 141; Mary, 282; Phineas, 280, 281, 430; Samuel, 284, 289, 277, 281, 284, 348, 528, and wife, 282, 283, 284; Samuel C., 226, 228, 274; Stephen, 253; Stephen H., 532; Sylvanus, 284, 527, Sophia, C., 534; Hon. Theodore, 360, 367; Willard, 274, 276, 278, 281, 284, 286.
Stewart, Daniel, 282; Geo., 182, 184; Dugald, 465; Jonas, 189; J. W., 440; Mary, 19; Rev. Nathan, 82; Samuel, 19, 21.
Stickney, Wm., 279, 284, 289.
Stickney, Col., 185.
Stiles, Caleb, 278; Ebenezer, Mrs. S. B. 311.
Stinson, Robert, 482.
St. John, Hon., 560.
St. Leger, Gen., 6.
Stockwell, Ichabod, 220; Seth, 482; Wm., 252.
Stoddard, Alpheus, 367; Anthony, 125; David S., 318; Elisha, 139, 141, 151; Mrs. E., 185; Marshall, 123, 357: Solomon, 55.

Stone, 481: A., 221: Dr. C. C., Dr. Dan, 67: Frederick, 349: Jeremiah, 238: Joseph and Josiah, 208: Nahum, 552: Nathan, 346: Philip and wife, 16, 17: Col. Roby G., 485: Richard, 346: Samuel, 208: Zedediah, 349.
Stoors, C., 55: J., 495: Col. Seth, 59, 155, 241: Sophronica, 55
Storer, Gilman, 252.
Story, Amos, 90: Solomon, 90, 91: Widow, 90, 91.
Stoughton, Col., E. H., Capt. H. R., 440.
Stow, Clark, 61, 91, 109: David, 69, 70, 109: Mrs. David, 109.
Stowell, Rev. G. H., 256.
Stratten, Rev. John B., 546.
Stratton, David, 208.
Strong, Asa, 80: C. F., 7: Rev. Cyprian, 331: Elnathan, 331: Rev. Elnathan, 330: George W., 524: Ida, 54: John, 6, 8: Mrs. John, 7, 182: Gen. John, 4, 66, 67: John and family, 4, 9, 10, 16, 89, 465: Hon. John W., 12, 59: Moses, 94: Gen. Samuel, 107.
Strowbridge, Wm., 278.
Stuart, Claud, 280, 283: Mrs. 274.
Sturdevant, Justus, 69, 109: Mrs, J., 109.
Sullivan, Maj. Gen., 492.
Sumner, Dea. Ebenezer, 52: Widow, 52.
Summers, Col., 53, 256.
Sunderland, Peleg, 126.
Swan, A, M., Rev., 204: Wm., 386.
Swasey, Dudley, 432.
Sweat, David, 424: Lake, 314: Sukey, 337.
Swift, Dr., 52: Dr. Heman, 105, 165: Dr. H. S., 165: Gen. Heman, 168: Rev. Job, D. D., 53, 161, 164: Dr. Noadiah, 164, 165: Samuel, 256: Hon. Samuel, 106, 259: Rev. S. S., 209: Serenus, 204.
Sykes, Elijah, 190: Israel, Jacob, Sylvanus, Titus, Victory, 186.
Sylvester, Peter, 274, 283.
Tabor, 346: Rev. L. H., 306.
Taft, A. P., 357.
Tanner, John, 231.
Tarbell, D. Jr., 41.
Tappan, Harriet A., 83: Rev. James, 132.
Taylor, Archibald, 376: Billings, 247: Eldad, 239, 240: Gershom, 247: Henry, 246: James, 397: Jonathan, 247: Martha, 246: Moses, Seth, Seth, Jr., 247.
Ten Brooke, Rev. James, 21.
Ten Eyck, 149.
Tenney, Rev. 346.
Thatcher, Benj., 246: Thatcher & Welling, 139.
Thayer, Bill, 51, 246, 255: Simeon, 230: Dr. S. W., Jr., 331, 524.
Thomas, Elijah, 19: Gen., 79: Henry, 504: Reuben, 230: Samuel, 230: Hon. Stephen A., 42.
Thompson, Abel, 33, 85: Alexander, 274: Barnum, 190: Ebenezer, 210, 314: E. J., 95: John, 197: Hon. John C., 471, 472, 498: Joseph, 70: Lyman, 218: Reuben, 330: Rev. Zadock, 16, 33, 72, 106, 107, 108, 122, 182, 218, 230, 321, 446.
Throop, Joseph, 23.
Thurber, Barnabus, 304.
Tibbets, Peter, 342.
Tice, Wm., 278.
Tichenor, Gov. Isaac, 157, 161, 164, 165, 166, 174, 275, 392, 397, 500.
Tichout, Wm., 454.
Tilden, Levi, 25.
Tinkham, Daniel, 236.
Titus, Jonathan, 91: Timothy, 493.
Toby, Leonard, 37.
Todd, Thomas, 390, 392.
Torrence, Oliver, 255: Robert & Mrs, Robert, 50, 51: Towner, 16.
Torrey, Prof. J., 113, 328, 523, 525, 530, 531, 560.
Townshend, James, 416.
Tracy, Elisha, 201: Rev. E. C., 244: Rev. L., 548.
Traver, Christiana, 103.
Trescott, Wm., 393, 400.
Trull, 353, Elijah, 324: Joel, 305.
Trumbull, Gen., 17, 153, 200.
Tryon, Gov., 159, 160.
Tubbs, Samuel, 125.
Tucker, Nehemiah, 340.
Tufts, Rev., 209.
Tumble, Alexander, George, 94.
Turner, Edward, Prof., 55.
Turrill, Ebenezer, 100.
Tupper, Absalom, 33: Benj., 237: Charles, 32: Jeremiah, Josiah, 238: Zuriel, 33.
Tuthill, Daniel, 197.
Tuttle, Eld. Amos, 324, 326, 327, 334: David, 325: Capt. David, 324, 330, 334.
Tute, Zibb, 343.
Twaddle, Robert, 274, 280.
Underhill, Abram, 246: Capt. Abraham, 182, 184, 189.
Underwood, Abel, E., 347: Rev. Joseph, 328: Hon. Levi, 510: Rev. M., 307.
Upham, 352: Rev. L., 204: Senator, 60.
Utley, Olive, Asa, Capt. Oliver, Peabody, Wm., 177.
Vail, Aaron, 595.
Vaile, Jonathan, 218: Joel, 240.
Vallance, David, 15, 79.
Vance, David, 322.
Vanerum, John, 218.
Van Ness, Hon. C. P., 351, 357, 467, 468, 471, 510, 580, 595, 605, 608, 609, 616: Van Ness family, 608, 609, 613, 614.
Van, Norman, 114, 115.
Van Rensalaer, Gen. Stephen, 167.
Van Sicklen, John, 493, 496, 508: John, Jr., 493, 506.
Varin, Nathaniel, 213.
Varney, Moses, 314.
Varnum, Wm., 363.
Vaughan, Benj. F., 94, 254.
Venen, Joseph, 432.
Vernerman, Isaac, 125.
Vilus, W. R., 513.
Vinton, D. H., 107.
Vose, Judge, 351.
Vradenburgh, Thomas, 103.
Waddle, Gov., 491: John, 274.
Wadham, Melinda, 594.
Wadleigh, Rev. F. A., 139.
Waggoner, John, 454.
Wainwright, John & Rufus, 53: Maj., 92.
Wait, Benj., 491: Rev., 225.
Wakefield, 347.
Walbridge, Rev., Alvin, 225: Ebenr., 157: Henry, 72, 157, 236; Col. Ebenr., Stebbins, 172.
Walch, Rev. J., 58.
Walden, Rev. J. H., 547.
Walder, 232.
Wales, Rev. Alvin, 225; Roger, 103; Torrey E., 511.
Walker, Aaron, 347; Benjamin, 344; Gideon, 116; Jerry, 314; Jesse, Hon., 118; Joseph, 362; Rev. Levi, Rachel, 116.
Wall, Wm., 356.
Wallace, Col., 341; Ebenezer, 125.
Wallis, Ebenr., 123.
Walter, Esther, 305; Ira, 304, 305; Lemuel, 202, 203, 304.
Walton, Seymour, 357, 358.
Ward, Dr. A. M., 418; Capt., 6; Chas., F., 511; Ira, 207; James, 496; Dr. J. M. T., 50; Miss, 17; Mr. & Mrs., 18; Nathan, 33; Walter, 362; Wareham, 236.
Walworth, Hon. Reuben, 140.
Warner, Abijah, 546; Col. Alpha, 325, 334; Dr. Benjamin, 164; Daniel, 157; Dea. Isaac, 55; Jabez, 218, 239; Justus, 504; Selah, 198; Col. Seth, 6, 11, 16, 50, 51, 87, 97, 98, 123, 125, 129, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 186, 202, 203, 233, 489, 532; Tamar, 123.
Warren, Gen., 53, 54; Gideon, 239; Gideon, Sen., 212; Gen. Hastings, 53; Dea. Isaac, 55; Samuel L. M., 212.
Warriner, Francis, 431.
Washburn, Abisha, 52; Rev. Ebenr., 57; Jeremiah, 423, 342; Jerusha, 116; Gen. P. T., 438, 476; Stephen, 201, 202.
Washington, Lieut., 107.
Waterbury, Gen., 80.
Waters, J., 327.
Watkins, David, 123.
Watson, Henry, 344; James, 314; Leonard, 344; Rev. R. A., 225.
Watts, Lyman S., Ruth, 360.
Way, E. L., 200; Wm., 347.
Wayne, Gen. W., 136, 230.
Weaver, Rev. J. M., 238, 258.
Webb, Gen., 3; Isaac, 493, Reuben, 239; Samuel, 67.
Webber, Eliakim, 202; John, 314.
Webster, Delia, 34; John S., 513; Rev. Samuel B., 483.
Weeks, Capt., 514; Holland, 68, 90, 91; Jonathan, 346; John M., 91, 92, 93; Nehemiah, 346.
Welch, Anna, 322; Edmund, Hosea, Jonathan, Sarah, Stephen, 322.
Weld, J. W., 238.
Welds, Chloe, 231.
Weller, Eliakim, 200, 201, 208.
Welling, E. M., 140.
Wellman, Rev. Daniel, 306.
Wells, Geo. F., 361. Rev. J. H., 238. Lieut. J., 456.
Welton & Currier, 347.
Wentworth, Gov., 3, 4, 19, 23, 65, 69, 78, 109, 122, 142, 167, 182, 196, 197, 207, 214, 215, 221, 248, 258, 266, 273, 274, 276, 358, 491.
Wesson, Peter, 275.
West, Stinson, Mrs. Squire, 394.
Westonhouse, 212, 215.
Weston, Capt. E. J., 490; Wm., 349, 507.
Wheaton, James, 397.
Wheeler, Beriah, 246; Daniel, 313; Gardner, 397, 410; Ephraim, 491; John, Rev., D. D., 525, 527, 534, 590, 600; Joseph, 215; Martin, 397, 410; Nathan, 521; Preserved, 72.
Wheelock, Ebenr., 116; President, 432, 521, 525; Rev. S. M., 307.
Whetmore, M., 537.
Whitcomb, James, 484.
Whipple, 214; Benj., 431; Francis & wife, 330; Dea. Francis P., 334; Dea. Joel, 333, 337.
White, Andrew, 589; Rev. C. J., 225; Daniel, 304; David, 208; Rev. Hugh, 284, 334; Jesse, 37; John, 36, 472; Rev. John, 191; Joseph B., 209, Judge, 251; Jude, 337; Lavater, 589; Nelson, 513; Rev. Nicholas, 546; Robert, 589; Wm., 240, 595; Wm. E., 83.
Whitehall, James, 382, 392.
Whitelaw, Gen. James, 230, 266, 269, 271, 277, 280, 282, 284, 313, 375, 376, 378, 380.
Whiston, John, 125.
Whitin, Mrs. P. H., 594.
Whitlaw, Wm. T., 375.
Whitman, Sally, 116.
Whitney, Gen. David, 13, 18; Rev. J., 329; Judge Lemuel, 252; Mrs 65.
Whiting, Col. Henry, 439; Rev. Samuel, 540.
Wicker, Rev. M. A., 19.
Wickham, J. D., 191, 205.
Wickton, Eld., 95.
Wickwire, Joseph, 143.
Wilcox, Carlos, 74; Horace, 75.
Wilder, Daniel, 504; Lydia, 341;

Zebina, 341.
Wiley, David, 41, 197.
Wilkins. Jason, 314.
Winchell, Jock, 495, 496.
Willard, Barty, 495, 496, 516; Caleb, 276; Hon. Charles W., 350; Capt. John, 52; Dr. John, 52, 54; Josiah C., 346, 347, 353; Samuel A., 346, 347.
Willey, Noah, 314.
Williams, 346; Hon. Azariah, 514, Capt., 32; Cephas, 247; Col., 155, 156; Isaac, Jacob, 247; Dea. Jacob, 541, 543; Joseph, 218; Nathan, 247; Patience, 594; Rev., 221; Rev. Dr., 270; Rodger, 594; Hon. Samuel, 464, 521, 590; Wm., 231; Col. Wm., 150, 155, 156; Williams & Whitney, 252.
Willis, Samuel, 487.
Williston, Jonathan, Dr. John, 96; Rev. Seth, D. D., Willoughby, Bliss, 233.
Wilmarth, J. L., 237, 238.
Wilson, Rev. David, 225; G. 204; Jonathan, 256; John, 116, 314, 376; Dr. John, 314; Wilson, Mrs., Donald & Fredly, 189; Wm., 256.
Windsor, 344; Samuel, 342, 347; Wm., 344, 347.
Wines, E. C., Rev. Dr., 14.
Winn, 244.
Winthrop, John, 21; Major, 476.
Wirt, Wm., 224.
Witchell, Peter, 321.
Witherspoon, Maj. James, 263, 269; Dr., 375, 378; Rev. John, D. D., 68, 268, 269, 271, 283, 285.
Withrell, Rev., 238.
Withum, 216.
Wood, Abner, Rev., 103, 541; David, 242; Ebenezer, 143; Rev. E., 225; Rev. J. B., 238; Joseph, 79, 310; Rev. Luther, 337, 338.
Woods, 240; Rev. Abel, 95; John, 278, 431; Joseph, 431; Wm. B., 518.
Woodbridge, Enoch, 106, 204; Hon. F. E., 571.
Woodford, Major, 714.
Woodhouse, C. W, 511, 513.
Woodman, Eld., 346; Rev. Jonathan, 133, 311, 312, 344, 414, 417; John, 344.
Woodruff, Esther, John, 305.
Woodward, Elijah, 198.
Wool, Gen., 89, 588.
Woolcot, Philip, 95.
Wooster, B., 116; Rev. Benjamin, 24; Hon. Dorastus, 25; Gen., 153.
Worcester, Col. David, 4, 49; Deborah, 336; Hon. Dorastus, 44, 45; Evarts, 365; Gen., 152; Rev. Leonard, 327, 360, 361, 364, 405; Noah, 360; Samuel, D. D., 360; Thomas, 360; Rev. Wm., 364.
Worden, Rev. Peter, 238.
Worth, Wm., 195.
Worthen, Rev. H., 406; Col. H. N., 440.
Wright, Abel, 110; Abiather 275; Charles, 166, 216, 218; Rev. Chester, 327, 329; Ebenezer, 96, 107, 233; Evarts, 364; E. R., 111; Gen., 157, 216; G. T., 218; Henry A., 364; Isaac, 364; Isaac T., 232; J. H., Rev., 536, 538; Mrs. J. H., 536; John E., 252; John H., 364; Jos., E., 364; Gen. Josiah, 215, 216, 218, 219; Judge, Josiah, 218; Rev. Moses E., 45; P. B., 111; Samuel, 216, 218; Judge Samuel, 216, 218; Silas, 111, 114; Silas, Sen., 111; Dr. S. M., 530; Solomon, 216, 218, 219; Thomas J., 166.
Yancey, 153.
Yates, Geo. W., 164; Robert, 150.
Young, Hon. Augustus, 332; James, 305, 545; Rev. Joshua, 560; Dr. Thomas, 563, 568; Samuel B. 166; Rev. Zibi, 417.

Note. The Index of Names, which it will be perceived embraces only the first six hundred pages in this volume, may be found from page six hundred and forward in the next volume.—Compiler.

Digitized by Google

PRESS NOTICES.

Middlebury Register.

We have examined the Gazetteer (No. 1) with interest, and we may add with admiration. The labor Miss Hemenway has expended upon this, the first number of the Gazetteer, is incredible, and her success is equal to her energy and discretion. She appears to have had liberal assistance from competent men in all parts of the county, and we are confident that the historical and biographical information thus compiled, together with the poetical and prose selections, will be received as no ordinary benefaction.

Vergennes Citizen.

It is the design of the editor to procure some one who is competent to write a correct history of the city, to be inserted at the close of the volume (or of the last volume.—Ed.) As we have elsewhere said, we believe the enterprise very commendable, and we hope the people of the State will give it the requisite aid.

Daily Free Press (Burlington.)

The plan of the work is to give, in a series of quarterly numbers, a historical sketch of every town. In many, we suppose in most cases, these sketches will be furnished by persons resident in the several towns, the editress supervising each one, and supplying from other sources what additional information may be at her command to fill up the outline. In other cases recourse will be had to existing publications of authority. . . It contains a large amount of interesting matter.

Burlington Times.

A good thing. . . . The title suggests all manner of praise of the undertaking, and the arrangements seem to be of a character to insure entire success. . . .

The first number gives us an exhaustive dissection of the history of each town in Addison County, compiled on the spot by competent and faithful annalists and investigators, in a form not so condensed as to be dry and dull, nor so much in detail as to be frivolous. The combined history of the several towns of "old Addison," the theatre of much personal, political, and revolutionary interest, is a piece of historic mosaic well conceived and well executed; and if the other counties of the State come out of Miss Hemenway's laboratory as fully and fairly analyzed, that lady will have accomplished a very valuable, and at the same time entertaining and interesting work. We certainly invoke for her efforts the success of which the first number of her periodical gives so encouraging promise.

The next number will be devoted to the stirring, eventful, and momentous annals and biography of Bennington County, the very name of which wakes the memories of the Starks, the Allens, the Fays, the Warners, the Robinsons, and other heroic partisans of liberty, whose deeds have given luster and renown to both her border and revolutionary history. This task will be a severer test of the character and excellence of Miss Hemenway's laudable enterprise than the one which has preceded it; though if it shall be executed, in its order of importance, equally well, there will be little room for fault-finding.

St. Albans Messenger.

This is a well printed Magazine, and offered at a very reasonable price.

The Northern Visitor (Brandon.)

This work we are confident will more than meet the expectations of the warmest and most hopeful friends of the enterprise. It must have cost an immense amount of money and labor, and our earnest hope is, that these may meet a corresponding appreciation and reward.

Taking into account the great number of pens which have been employed on it, it is executed with great fidelity; and its almost endless variety of style and subjects invest it with a freshness and interest which are bewitching. It is not a work of mere transient interest, but permanent value. Every family in the State, as well as all those who have gone to reside in other States, should possess the complete work. . . .

We commend with confidence and earnestness, to all who are interested in whatever concerns Vermont, the Vermont Quarterly Gazetteer, believing that in its fair and ample pages they will find a treasury of history, biography and literature.

Vermont Watchman and State Journal (Montpelier.)

No. I. is before us,—an elegantly printed octavo of 120 pages, and containing the history of the several towns in Addison County. The design is to issue the history by counties, in alphabetical order, so that when the list shall have been completed, the book will contain a history of every town in the State. The design is a bold one, and we are surprised that a lady could be found brave enough to undertake it. But it has been well commenced; and with the aid of literary men and women in every town in the State, it will be carried to a successful termination. If any town fails of having a good history, it will be its own fault; for the publisher gives notice that "each town is expected to furnish its own chapter of history and biographic sketches; each church its own records, sketches of first pastor, &c." There is one other thing she needs, and that is the most liberal patronage of the people, by way of subscriptions. We cheerfully commend the work as one of the most valuable and interesting ever undertaken in the State. A list of over 2,000 subscribers is appended to the first number. The State ought to furnish 20,000 subscribers.

Bellows Falls Times.

The Magazine cannot fail to be one in which all Vermonters will feel much interest.

Windsor Journal.

A work like the one this proposes to be, is very much needed, and will be of great value as a record for coming time.

Vermont Standard (Woodstock.)

We wish all success to the Vermont Quarterly, &c.

Spirit of the Age (Woodstock.)

It will no doubt be well patronized by Vermonters, and all others who feel interested in the local history of this State.

Bennington Banner.

We have received the Bennington County number (No. II.) of this highly interesting work. . . . . The numbers will appear as often as counties complete the work of collecting in historical facts and other matters of interest. The number before us deserves a wide-spread circulation.

Digitized by Google

grateful, and not less gratefully and flattered have we received the recognitions from the more distinguished of the Press in our neighboring States; from among which, however, we can only find room in this volume for the following:

From the North American Review of July, 1862.

This new number of the Vermont Gazetteer (No. III.) embraces the sequel of Bennington County, and sketches of the history of Caledonia County and its several towns. It pursues successfully the thorough, exhaustive method of which we spoke with commendation in our notice of the former numbers. We are struck with the richly interesting biographical materials furnished by towns whose names till now we had scarcely known. The Vermont pioneers were a hardy race; the exigencies of these new settlements developed strong and sturdy characters, and gave full scope for those individualities which make history piquant; and the prosperity of their descendants has been won, and is maintained by no natural advantages, but only through the heritage of strong bodies, vigorous minds and brave hearts; while the influences that are fast assimilating the inhabitants of other States came later into operation and are working more slowly there than elsewhere.

From "THE HISTORICAL MAGAZINE, and Notes and Queries concerning the Antiquities, History and Biography of America." Charles B. Richardson & Co., Astor Place, New York.

"THE VERMONT HISTORICAL MAGAZINE.—This valuable collection of Vermont Local History contains an immense mass of information, not only to Vermont itself, but also as to the histories of Vermonters elsewhere. A novel feature is the giving specimens of the literary productions of the natives of each town and county. No higher names of sanction can be found than those gracing Miss Hemenway's prospectus."

From the Presbyterian of Our Union.

THE VERMONT GAZETTEER.—This work is issued upon a new and original plan. It gives the history, locality, population and statistics of every town in the State, besides educational, religious, literary and geological information, with an account of the churches, schools, colleges, pastors and eminent men and women in the State. The first No., containing Addison County, is now before us. If this is a specimen of the whole work, as stated above, it will be one of the most valuable of the age.

Every family in the State will of course have a copy of it, and every Vermonter in every land will procure one, or ought to. Those who will not purchase one, should be compelled to give up thanksgiving dinners, pumpkin pies, doughnuts and apple-sass, for twenty years or more. "Them's our sentiments."

From the Burlington (Iowa) Daily Hawk-Eye.

BY DR. EDWIN JAMES.

VERMONT QUARTERLY GAZETTEER.—A work of great value, replete with facts and rich in personal details, specimens and sketches, so arranged alphabetically by counties and townships as to be of easy reference. In addition to this sumptuous array of personal history, anecdote and specimen, both in prose and verse, the subsequent numbers are to be enriched with geological matter from the State survey now in progress.

We heartily commend this enterprise to the imitation of all historical societies, East or West—the patronage table to connoisseurs of good living, especially those of Vermont.

We hope to hear all about Martin Scott, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, Stephen A. Douglas, and other great and "little giants, prophets, seers and revelators," all from Vermont, in due time.

From an Ohio Paper.

THE VERMONT GAZETTEER.—A Historical Magazine, embracing a digest of the civil, biographical, geological and literary history of each township, written by those who are personally cognizant of the matters of which they write. It is an excellent publication. Would it not be well for one similar, in regard to the Ohio River Valley, to be started in this city?

"I shall be very glad to do all I can to extend the cirulation of so valuable a work in this State."—W. W. Bryant, Bookseller and Publisher, Portland, Maine.

"The idea and plan of your work are admirable, and should be the pride, to say nothing of the duty, of each Vermonter to sustain it."—Benjamin J. Lossing, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

"This work you have bravely begun and nobly executed: but the 25 cent system is certainly ruinous—literally casting pearls before . . . . —with all Vermont on your subscription book, you will come out of the campaign impoverished. Each number you sell for 25 cents is worth one dollar.—J. Munsell, Historical Publisher, Albany, N. Y.

"Your work will be invaluable to every Vermonter. I am a native of no such benighted region as Addison County at all. I feel immensely proud of our county, and if you are going to do anything like justice to it you will have to have a mammoth number, for it is the native county of Hiram Powers, the greatest sculptor in the world; of Horace Webster, principal of the Free Academy, New York, one of the greatest teachers in the world; of George P. Marsh, one of the greatest scholars in the world; and of Charles G. Eastman, with whom I went to district school as a school boy, one of the best poets. These are of the olden time. That county ought to have a jubilee and call back for a brief space her wandering sons."—Amos Dean, President of Albany Law School.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google